Having set the foregoing tables before you, you must come, as a matter of course, to one of two conclusions—that the promotion of the two former classes has been too rapid, or the latter too slow. Be that as it may, I propose now to point out how it appears to me the evil ("which nobody can deny"), with others herein to be entered upon, may be remedied. I gave you on a former occasion (No. 285, 14th July, 1838) a scheme for doing away the purchase of promotion altogether, which of itself would work a cure; if, however, purchase cannot (or, more properly speaking, must not) be discontinued, then stop promotion by purchase in regimental succession, and make it, under a different arrangement, a general measure, by classing the officers of each rank, willing to purchase, according to seniority, to be gazetted to vacancies, as they become offered for sale. Purchase, under any arrangement, it is admitted, must be very galling to the zealous and meritorious officer without money, observing, as he does day after day, his juniors stepping over his head, who, it is easy to imagine, is often by that means commanded by men who, under circumstances of responsibility and danger, would from want of experience be probably disqualified for such command, and who were not in all likelihood born when those passed over entered the service; but as now permitted to go on, operates not only to the annoyance and mortification of those without money, but to those who may have barely sufficient to purchase for regulation when the opportunity offers. The traffic in commissions here alluded to particularly calls for a check, which, coupled with the promotion in the Guards, is the source from whence much of the evil takes its rise. Examples are hardly wanting, so well understood and general is the practice, that it becomes a matter of surprise whenever a commission falls for regulation, and the purchaser never fails to receive the congratulations of his brother officers (whom it does not affect) upon his good fortune; it is high time they should fall to par, and the good old custom of bringing officers to full-pay, for the purpose of selling the step to those who can pay well for it, be thrown overboard. A sketch, however, may do no harm. The Lieutenant-Colonel, Major, or Captain, willing to sell, yet unwilling to retire for the sum of money fixed by regulation, says, "I will sell if you make me up so much; if not, I must exchange, and so realise my price." If the sum required cannot be raised, some "d—d bore," who cannot muster more than regulation, and who sees the door to promotion closed against him, seeing fit to remain firm and not suffer a junior to give him the go-by, the proposed seller carries his threat into execution, and sells his commission in a better market. Again, a junior officer, too impatient to wait what he calls long, exchanges into a regiment with few, sometimes none, of his rank for purchase (the necessary information is not hard to be got at), obtains his rank, and returns by another exchange if he should wish it, and thus has happened, to command those who were his seniors, to their manifest annoyance. Purchase, again, has injured materially many high-spirited and deserving officers, who, keen to the annoyance of being passed over, leave no honest means untried to raise the money, by insurance on life, &c. &c., leaving themselves, after so obtaining their rank, in a worse condition, with respect to means, than before. It would, therefore, be desirable, if the system now working could be got rid of—and I know of no better substitute than the one just proposed. I may be told that a general purchase plan would operate unfavourably, in as far as it might affect the proper number of duty officers with the regiment abroad in which the vacancies take place, supposing the seller in India and the purchaser at home; or that the frequent changes of officers from one corps to another would entail expense upon the Government. I would reply, that the number of exchanges at the present time—and they are not few—have not been found inconvenient or expensive—that two years' leave, granted to officers on private grounds to visit Europe, is the usual period, not unfrequently prolonged; and where the services of an officer can, for the individual's convenience, be dispensed with, the convenience of the service ought not, surely, for a shorter period, be overlooked. The purchaser joins the depot on appointment, as a matter of course, prepared to proceed abroad the first public opportunity. The plan of general purchase as connected with the promotion of the old officers hereinafter proposed, and the certain working of the rotation system, would not only introduce, after a while, into each corps a more healthy condition (if I may so express myself), by planting the old and experienced soldier of each rank in his proper place; but as it would distribute throughout the Army members possessing powerful interest, giving them their tour of good and bad stations, instead of, as at present, collecting them into pet corps, which, with general dissatisfaction, would soon die a natural death, their family influence, which has hitherto been known to work miracles, would hardly fail in persuading the authorities to relieve more frequently the troops on distant shores. So long as the hardship here alluded to is kept at a distance from those whose influence might work out a better state of things, so long may we look in vain for a curtailment of our term of banishment. Although an advocate for the Four-company Depots, where properly conducted, as a good foundation upon which to raise 2d battalions in case of war, I am willing to admit that our small force calls for their reduction; if we were without this reserve, regiments would have a longer period of home service, now reduced to barely four years, and no hiding-place would offer for idlers unwilling to take their tour abroad. Having thus provided for the monied men, the interest of the others must not be overlooked. The Lieut.-Colonel being provided for, by the operation of the Brevet, we have, therefore, to deal with the Majors, Captains, Lieutenants, and Ensigns, only. Let the country, and it will not be too much to expect, appropriate 16,200*l. per annum*, for the purpose of purchasing rank for the four senior Majors, Captains, Lieutenants, and Ensigns, in the Army; this, with death vacancies (which ought never to be given out of the corps), would go in time towards wiping away the appearance of neglect, which is too abundantly manifest to any eye before which the pages of the new Army List may be laid open. In connexion with what I have already stated, how much good might be done by promoting all the Brevet Majors to the unattached, allowing the price of their companies (if it would be too much to expect the step for the old Lieutenants), to be funded or otherwise disposed of to meet any expense incurred by the measure: in doing this, the old Subs would then look forward with some degree of confidence to a similar boon. The Brevet-Majors thus, I hope to their own satisfaction, disposed of, it would be satisfactory to learn, that a more just distribution of such promotion should hereafter be adopted. You, Sir, have already done so much to expose the partial working of the Brevet, that it would be idle in me to say more than to express regret, that length of full-pay service amongst those who in such manner earned it, was not equally considered. It is really too painful, in looking through the Army List, to observe the Captains' column filled up with the names of officers of six, seven, and eight years' standing, while in the same rank is observable others from 48 years downwards, the table, No. 2, showing no less than 125 of 30 years' standing and upwards, and 113 Subalterns, all above 20 years.

In giving words to my ideas thus freely, I sincerely trust I may not be understood as wishing to convey the slightest reflection upon the administration of our worthy Commander-in-Chief, or his noble and able Secretary, who, I conscientiously believe, are making the best of a bad system handed down to them, but simply of using an honest endeavour (with your willing and powerful aid) to draw the attention of the Board of Commissioners now re-assembled to the long and meritorious services of my hard-working brethren in arms, in whose behalf it becomes the duty of all lovers of a "clean stage and no favour" to urge respectfully their claims to the favourable consideration of their country.

In conclusion, I have only to apologise for the length of my epistle, assuring you, that with all my wish, I felt that I could not, with any chance of making myself understood, reduce it within a smaller compass.—SILENUS.

Boulogne-sur-Mer, 20th February, 1839.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—With your permission I will refer to my letter of the 20th inst., and furnish you with two more tables, to be numbered 4 and 5. No. 4 will point out 23 Captains now on full pay who are Brevet-Majors, and whose full-pay service varies from 7 to 20 years only. No. 5 will point out 31 Captains, now on full pay, who are not Brevet-Majors, but whose full-pay service varies from 30 to 33 years—a reference to Lieut. Hart's Army List will enable your readers to become acquainted with those who have fought and bled for their country; and to come to the conclusion I have arrived at long ago, viz., that merit and long service does not always meet its reward. The officers composing table No. 5, having already served from 30 to 33 years, I should be glad to be informed how many more years they will have to serve before they become entitled to the Brevet? If you cannot give me this desirable piece of information, the Commissioners, no doubt, will do so in their forthcoming report, and in their wisdom recommend a different path to the attainment of rank. Brevet officers, be it known to your readers, receive 2*s.* per diem extra pay, and forage for a horse when doing duty in garrison. As my name does not appear in any of the tables given in this and my former letter, I may perhaps get credit for disinterestedness in bringing the slow promotion of some, the rapid promotion of others, and the partial working of the Brevet, to the notice of your readers, and only hope that the Commissioners may take the matter up as warmly as it deserves, and urge (if they may do so) some equitable arrangement for the future, with early promotion to those who evidently have been overlooked. SILENUS.

We have seen with much satisfaction that an inquiry is to be instituted into the effects of a measure, some years ago adopted, of offering a commutation to old soldiers for their pensions, and transplanting them to the Colonies as settlers. The suggestion of this measure has been generally attributed to Sir Henry Hardinge, while Secretary at War; but, in justice to that gallant officer, but not very successful finance minister, we must say that his plan was carried farther by his successors in office than he intended it should have gone. It is generally believed that the Duke of Wellington was opposed to the commutation of the soldier's pensions, well knowing, as he did, the improvidence of soldiers, and their unfitness for an agricultural life, after a long military service. Sir Henry Hardinge seems now resolved to settle the paternity of the measure, and we confess that we shall be glad to see the odium of a plan, so detrimental to the old soldier, removed from one of their own profession. Sir F. Head's letter, on the condition of these poor fellows in Canada, has tended, we trust, to rouse public attention to the matter, and we hope yet to see these gallant veterans restored to the pension list.

"ONE OF 1200, &c.," in a letter from India, dated June, 1838, which we annex, alludes to our proposition of reducing the number of Infantry regiments in Her Majesty's service employed in India from twenty to sixteen, and augmenting the rank and file to 1000 each. All the consequences of adopting this plan we quite as clearly perceived as he did, and with the view to an early relief we proposed the arrangement; confident that after having effected, in the first place, a relief after sixteen years, a still earlier relief might be ultimately obtained. However, these and other propositions have, by circumstances then unforeseen, been rendered impracticable; and the early relief of corps from India, in the present difficulties of the country and weakness of the Military force at home and abroad, cannot be expected. The 54th, we conclude, will return to England this year, as we see it is estimated for in the Home Force for 1839-40. The 16th will probably return in the end of 1840. We cannot hold out at present any better hopes for the relief of the Infantry regiments in India. The 13th Light Dragoons are estimated for in the Home Force from the 1st of January, 1840, and the 14th Hussars are under orders for Madras to relieve them.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The latest news, and from the most unquestioned authority, is, that the grievances of which H.M.'s troops so justly complain in India, so far from decreasing, are increasing fearfully, and that the system of torture by drills, parades, and duties, is so severe, that out of four infantry regiments in one Presidency, two have been reported unfit for active service by the Medical Inspector, in consequence of their enervated state, brought on by the severity of the duties! This, then, will prove, as I have before asserted in ny letters, that the reports spread at Chatham in May, 1837, that ill duties were "by order" rendered much less irksome in India, are utterly false and unfounded.

I observe in your paper of the 10th February a few remarks from you, on the subject of reducing the number of the regiments (infantry) in India to sixteen, and increasing the strength of each corps to 1,000 rank and file; but, although the merit of the proposition is yours, you have not put my improvement on it in a proper point of view. The reduction of the officers of four regiments will be a saving to the Honourable Company of 35,000*l.* per annum in pay and allowances. This in four years will be more than sufficient to pay the charge for conveying four regiments to India and four one again, and as the Government will have these four regiments available, by the proposed reduction of the number in India, it can send four regiments to India every fourth year; and this, with the one yearly from New South Wales, will relieve the regiments in India in ten years. The army will not, and should not, be satisfied with the sixteen years you proposed; for the shorter period (ten years) can be effected without expense to any body; and the troops in India are not less deserving of consideration surely than those in Malta or Gibraltar? I for one will never cease to expose the infamy of the Indian system generally until this act of justice is granted. The Honourable Company know full well that a man may as well embark for twenty years' exile as for sixteen, and hence they have formed their own regulations for furloughs to their own service, and of which every one of their officers take advantage unless he is too well off to wish to leave the country. I will, therefore, maintain that the Company should be forced to do this act of justice (relieving the regiments every ten years) by Parliament: and I will further add, that there could not have been one independent or honest officer of H.M.'s forces, without we can believe them utterly ignorant, examined before the Committee of the House of Commons on the removal of the Charter in 1834, or they would boldly have avowed their detestation of the present system. I can easily understand the reasons for senior officers being silent on the subject, as they are already too well off to wish for any change, but the fact is not less damning to them as men and gentlemen. I trust my letters of April and May have reached you, and that you have given them a place in your valuable paper. ONE OF 1200, &c.

After very many years of peace, the martial spirit of a country languishes, if not refreshed, like everything else in nature, with some stimulus that keeps alive and encourages its growth: we would submit, then, at this time, looking at the state of affairs in the world generally, and which has made us revise and augment our force both by sea and land, that some consideration of the character we have adverted to would be wisely bestowed,—something that would cheer the old soldier and sailor, and excite to emulation the young; and when this can be done at a trifling expense to the country, and would serve at the same time to mark the reign and perpetuate the honour of the Sovereign by whom it might be conferred, we do think that policy as well as justice should extend to the veteran the meed he has fought for, renewing in the State that "cheap defence of nations—that nurse of manly sentiment and heroic enterprise," the chivalry of arms. This felt and acknowledged, if justly and impartially acted upon, could not fail to work with due effect on the pride and spirit of the two services; but then this justice and impartiality must be most strictly observed, and the distinction awarded, governed by some well-defined pretensions. There must be nothing invidious in it; such as is by many felt to exist in the badge of Waterloo, mortifying the hero of many actions, because he had not been called upon to assist at that one whose political results swelled its professional importance with consideration and rewards * that eclipsed all others, many of which were attended with equal exposure and far greater toil, as if the day of battle were not that part of our duty we feel the least wearisome, and perform the most cheerfully.

Another circumstance suggests the fairness of the badge we are now recommending, which is, that the Orders of the Bath were at first given to those who had commanded or served on the Staff in so many general actions, &c. Now, as all could not have commanded on those occasions, though present and contributing thereto, would it not be fair that some corresponding medal should be awarded to such officers and men in both services as were present at a certain-named number of general actions, or at affairs of sufficient importance to have been honoured with the Commander-in-Chief's thanks in orders? We would submit, then, that a medal for such service be struck in copper, bearing Her Majesty's figure on the one side and some appropriate device on the other; this medal would be the proudest that could be worn, as showing a series of services, often extending over all the worlds—a record of the wearer's life. We have suggested its being made of copper as the least expensive for tempting to part with, as we see the Waterloo medals of soldiers frequently for sale in the shops. Corresponding claims in the sister service should be equally entitled to the distinction. The approaching birth-day, or anniversary of the Coronation, would be most suitable for conferring such a boon: it would be extensively gratifying to the two services, of little expense to the country, and an additional commemoration of the day.

* Rank to Subalterns and additional pay to Waterloo men.

The announcement by Sir J. Hobhouse that a reinforcement from the Mauritius and elsewhere would be sent to India, has been followed up by an order to the depots of the 12th and 35th regiments to proceed to Chatham, to be in readiness for embarkation. The 90th depot already forms part of the garrison at that place, and is also in readiness, should the service companies, now in Ceylon, be ordered to India.

We last week notified Mr. M'Neill's return from the Court of Persia. Much of the course of events, now pending in the East, will probably rest on the decision of the Government here, respecting the Shah. If they concur in the necessity of giving him a lesson, a very general war in India will most likely ensue, even though matters should settle down amicably in the North West. Burmah and Nepaul are anxious for the fray, and are only watching the wind. When we may be seriously engaged elsewhere they will doubtless show their teeth, and probably trouble our home provinces.

If we measure spears with Persia, a force up the Persian Gulf to co-operate with one of the Shah's uncles, who may likely be proclaimed in the south of Persia, and, after inscribing "Tekel" on the walls of Sheeraz, may divide the empire, or contend with his nephew for the whole, according as wind and tide may serve.

Should the chiefs of Scinde * resolve not to be bearded by Sir John Keane, the ball will open in that quarter, and give the tone to all around; Lord Auckland's comprehensive mind having set all India in motion,—"from Samarchand by Oxus, Timour's throne, to Agra and Lahore of Great Moghul, down to the Golden Chersoneese, and utmost Indian isle Taprobane."

* They are a very hardy, rough-hewn race; but provisions, and water, and climate, will be our greatest difficulties.

The Court.

The Queen has been slightly indisposed with a cold, but we rejoice to state is now in excellent health. On Saturday Her Majesty honoured Covent Garden theatre with her presence. On Sunday Her Majesty and the Duchess of Kent attended Divine service in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. On Monday the Duke of Sussex visited Her Majesty. On Thursday the Queen honoured Covent Garden theatre with her presence. The Court is expected to leave town for Windsor on the 28th inst., to spend the holidays.

On Monday despatches from Lieut.-Gen. Sir Wm. Nicolay, Governor of the Mauritius, were received at the Colonial department; also at the India Board from Lord Auckland, Governor-General of India; and from the officers administering Her Majesty's Government at Madras and Bombay.—On Tuesday despatches from Lieut.-Gen. Sir A. Woodford, Governor of Gibraltar, were received.—On Wednesday from Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. F. Bouverie, Governor of Malta; and, via Malta, at the India Board, from Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India; and from the officers administering Her Majesty's Government at Madras and Bombay.

The trousseau of the bride elect of the Marquis of Douro—Lady Elizabeth Hay—is likely to be one of the most splendid that has added value to the dowry of modern belles. The Duke of Wellington having found in his cabinets quantities of diamonds which he had forgotten, or never thought of till now, has declared that the bride shall have them all. Amongst them is an order given to his Grace by Louis XVIII., worth 50,000*l.* Lady Elizabeth is in her nineteenth year.—Herald.—[Prodigious!!! A man of careful habits like the Duke of Wellington, and not over-rich, is not likely to forget that he had quantities of diamonds, among which was one worth 50,000*l.*! Once more we say, Prodigious!]

The Duke of Cleveland will be shortly invested with the Garter, vacant by the demise of the Duke of Buckingham.

It is said that Lord Plunket being no longer able to hold the Irish seals, a Bill is to be introduced, rendering Roman Catholics eligible to the office of Chancellor, in order that the seals may be conferred upon Mr. Daniel O'Connell!

It is rumoured that a breach, amounting to an actual estrangement and separation, has taken place between a Royal Duke and his oldest and most attached friend and servant.

The magistrates of Hampshire have entered into a subscription for placing a portrait of their Lord-Lieutenant, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, in the grand jury-room of that county.

British Association.—The first meeting of the general committee will be held at Birmingham on Aug. 25th, and the various sections for scientific business will meet on the 27th, and through the week. The local council and committees are already busily engaged in making the preliminary arrangements.

Mr. Aston, the present Secretary of Embassy at Paris, is appointed minister at Madrid, in the room of the Earl of Clarendon.—Morning Herald.

The son of the Duke of Rovigo and the Marquess de St. Pierre lately fought a duel in the forest of St. Germain, respecting a disputed right to the smiles of a certain gay actress. The former received a sword-wound through the lungs. It was not possible to convey him to Paris.

Fire at Woolwich.—Soon after eleven on Saturday morning a fire was discovered near the premises of Mr. Fandy, upholsterer, Powis-st., who gave an immediate alarm; the "fire-drums" beat and bugles sounded, when the fire-engine from the dock-yard, with a body of police, under the direction of Lieut. Pearse, R.N., were quickly on the spot, and in rapid succession arrived the Royal Artillery engine, with a party of Military, and the parochial engines. The flames spread rapidly, and, notwithstanding the utmost exertions, the premises were quickly consumed, with the whole of the costly stock, and the houses adjoining. It is understood the sufferer was not insured.

The last sentence of the law was on Wednesday morning carried into effect upon Thomas Taylor, convicted at the assizes at Hertford of the murder of William Bonnett, an old pensioner. Two young men (Roach and Fletcher) were executed about twelve months since for being concerned in the same offence. The prisoner absconded after the commission of the offence, and enlisted in the 15th reg. He walked with a firm step up the scaffold, and had on the undress of the regiment; his appearance was that of a smart active young man.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

France.—Several lists of a new Ministry have been circulated; the following is the most authentic:—Soult, War and President; Guizot, Interior; Thiers, Foreign Affairs; Duchatel, Finance; Sauget, Justice; Passy, Public Works; Villemain, Instruction; Duperre, Marine.

Spain.—The head-quarters of Don Carlos were still at Tolosa on the 7th. He had appointed Villareal his A.D.C., and placed at the disposal of the General-in-Chief Simon de la Torre. The division under Marcos's immediate orders remained at Durango. Generals Cass Eguia, Gomez, Elio, Zariategui, and Vargas, and Col. Madraso had been again called into active service. Gomez, Elio, and Zariategui, against whom judicial proceedings had been instituted, demanded to be declared innocent by a judgment before they would consent to resume their former ranks. Goni, the first, with Santos Ladron, to hoist the banner of Don Carlos, and companion of Zumalacarregui, had been appointed to the command of the first corps of operations. The second was to be intrusted to Simon de la Torre, and the third to Urbistondo.

Hanover.—The King has been again suffering from indisposition. On Sunday, the 10th inst., his Majesty was seized with sudden illness while attending Divine service, and was compelled to retire from the church.

North America.—A positive aggression has been committed within the last month by citizens of the State of Maine upon the British territory. From official communications with the House of Representatives in Maine, it appears that both the Assembly and the Governor were parties to the appointment of a "land agent," whose business was to march a body of armed men to chase away what they called trespassers from the "disputed territory," and to make prize of, or destroy, their cattle, timber, &c. Sir John Harvey remonstrated against these outrageous proceedings in an earnest letter addressed to the Governor, wherein he "entreated" him to withdraw the republican intruders from the British territory, and so to release him (Sir J. Harvey), a "subordinate officer," from the cruel predicament wherein this outrage had placed him, and which left him no alternative but that of either disobeying his orders, which were to repel force by force, or fulfilling them, to bring "the two countries into a state of border collision, if not the two nations into one of inveterate and active hostility." The Governor and Representatives of the State of Maine, upon this appeal to their prudence as well as their humanity, "saw nothing incorrect" in the course adopted; and the popular Assembly of the State proved themselves eager and unanimous in voting the most prodigal supplies (viz., 800,000 dollars) and the most hostile proceedings against England.

Jamaica.—The accounts reach to 22d Jan. The condition of the island continued to be extremely unsatisfactory, and the negroes evinced the same disinclination to assist in getting in the crops, so that it was believed the planters must sustain very considerable loss by the deficiency of produce from the inability to take it off the ground.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, March 11.—Lord LYNDHURST said, that information had been received of the capture of Aden, a fortress on the south-west coast of Arabia, by a British force from Bombay, and that, in possessing themselves of it, a considerable slaughter of the natives had taken place. He believed that the Sultan of Aden had always been on friendly terms with the British Government; and, therefore, he begged to ask whether the information was true?—Viscount MELBOURNE said, that the place was under the dominion of the Sultan of Aden. Some time ago an attack was made from Aden on one of H.M.'s vessels. For that outrage satisfaction was demanded, and a full explanation was given. Afterwards a negotiation was set on foot between the East India Company and the Sultan for the sale of the place. That negotiation was carried through, and the place was ceded; but when the force sent from Bombay for its occupation arrived, the son of the Sultan said, "No; the Sultan had no authority to give up the place, and thus to compromise my rights. I must have something equivalent for those rights." Under these circumstances the Government of Bombay thought they had a right to attack the fortress. He had no objection to lay the papers connected with the affair on the table.

THURSDAY, March 14.—The debate on the Corn Laws was commenced by Earl FITZWILLIAM moving that the Act 9 Geo. IV. has failed in securing that steadiness in the price of corn which is essential to the best interests of the country. The Duke of BUCKINGHAM moved a direct negative. The Earl of RIPON opposed the motion, as did also the Duke of WELLINGTON. The Earl of RADNOR followed in favour of the motion. Viscount MELBOURNE opposed, and Lord BROUGHAM supported it. Ultimately the House divided. For the motion, 21—against it, 224.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 11.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE submitted his further motion regarding the theatres. He proposed a resolution declaratory that the Ministers had sought to defeat the manifest object of the previous resolution of the House.—Lord J. RUSSELL contended that the resolution had not received the sanction of anything like a majority. His Lordship, however, intimated that "before next season" the subject would be fully considered.—Eventually the motion was withdrawn.

STATE OF THE NAVY.—Sir R. PEEL hoped that Government would seriously consider the condition of the Navy, so as to make the additions necessary to enable them to compete with other powers. In reference to what had been said by the Secretary of the Admiralty, that though the reductions had been made when he (Sir R. Peel) was in office, yet Conservative attacks were rife upon the Government, he disclaimed all participation in any such attack. Of those who had expressed their opinions that Government had neglected to increase the naval force, some did not shrink from giving their names, as Commander Craufurd and Admiral Napier, and they had not been injured, but rewarded; and the defence of the Admiralty had proceeded from a Conservative—Sir J. Barrow.—Mr. LABOUCHERE admitted that Sir R. Peel had given no encouragement to the attacks made on the Government, on account of neglecting the Navy. But many things were done by gentlemen opposite to which the right hon. Baronet was no party, and which he would not in any way countenance. Sir J. Graham, at a meeting at Glasgow, said that there had been a great defalcation in the Naval Administration of the country under the Government of Lord Melbourne, as contrasted with that of Lord Grey. He was greatly surprised at this, for he believed that this was not the case; and it was similar grave charges to this that were made against the Admiralty that his honourable friend said that he felt himself called upon to refute.—Capt. A'COURT believed that the pamphlet of Sir J. Barrow was founded upon a most mistaken course, and calculated to do much mischief. He could state from his own experience that the Russian fleet was a most formidable armament, and this was also the case with the American Navy.—Mr. C. WOOD went into a long statement of the measures adopted by the Admiralty for the protection of British interests in Mexico.—Capt. PECHELL said that one of the most preposterous absurdities with which honourable gentlemen opposite had sought to impose on the credulity of the people, was the monstrous humbug of an invasion of our shores by a Russian fleet. Great complaints had been made of the want of sufficient force to protect our commerce at Mexico: he should like to know whether there had been any representations from our merchants that their property was in danger. Gentlemen opposite were on the wrong scent. What had the noble Lord (Hardwicke) gained by all his peering and prying into every hole and corner of the dock-yards? He wondered he did not fall into the mast-pond. It was impossible to contradict or controvert statements made by such men as Admirals Bouverie and Warren.—Capt. GORDON contended that Ministers were bound to keep up a much larger force than they had at present.—Sir J. GRAHAM complained of the distribution of our force, and maintained that if a British squadron had been on the spot, VERA CRUZ would never have been attacked, and a pilot would never have been taken from the Express.—Lord PALMERSTON said that it was beneath the dignity of a great people to make preparations against injuries or insults from others, because it would look as if they suspected that any one would dare to wrong them!—The debate was interrupted by the House being counted out at a quarter past two o'clock.

WEDNESDAY, March 13.—Mr. C. LUSHINGTON gave notice of an Address to the Crown for any communication received from Lieut. Milne, Commander of the Snake, relative to certain atrocities committed on board a Portuguese slaver.

FRIDAY, March 15.—Lord PALMERSTON, in reply to an inquiry from Sir S. Canning, with reference to the recent collision which was reported to have taken place upon the boundary between the State of Maine and our province of New Brunswick, said, "That it was not yet in his power to state what course the American Government intended to pursue. He would, however, be fully justified in stating, that the most friendly disposition towards this country prevailed in that quarter."

On Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, the House was chiefly occupied with debates on the Corn Laws. The question has been adjourned till Monday.

Theatres.

ITALIAN OPERA.—Her Majesty's Theatre opened on Saturday evening, with (as usual) a sort of make-shift or provisional company, to serve till Easter, when the stars of the musical hemisphere begin to shine upon us. The piece selected was Belisario. The ballet, Robert le Diable, went off with spirit.

COVENT GARDEN.—Sir Lytton Bulwer's new play, which has been curtailed, has been performed during the week to crowded audiences.

OLYMPIC.—On Tuesday the Duke of Wellington honoured the theatre with his presence, and, on being recognized by the audience, was hailed with general acclamations. At the termination of the performance the acclamations were renewed, and continued for a considerable time, concluding with a call for "one cheer more," which was given with fervent unanimity.

ST. JAMES'S.—A burletta, entitled His First Champagne, which was brought out at the Strand Theatre about five years ago, was on Monday night revived at this house. Its chief merit is the exuberant repartee and the humorous play upon the words of the dialogue. The incidents succeed each other with a rapidity which is highly amusing, and the audience were kept in continual laughter by the intractable drollery of the scene.

Literary Notices.

Domestic Homœopathy. By P. F. Curie, M.D., formerly Surgeon in the Military Hospital of Paris; Member of the Parisian Homœopathic and Gallican Societies; Physician to the London Homœopathic Dispensary; Author of "The Principles of Homœopathy," "The Practice of Homœopathy," &c. 18mo. Hurst.

SOME months ago we entered, at considerable length, into a review of Dr. Curie's larger and more important work, "The Practice of Homœopathy," a performance which naturally followed the writer's very lucid exhibition of the "Principles" of the same science. The book, entitled "Principles of Homœopathy," we consider to be of universal interest, inasmuch as every human being is interested in the preservation of health and the cure of disease; and we regard it as the bounden duty of every medical practitioner, having the welfare and lives of his patients at heart, to "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest" both the "Principles" and the "Practice" of Homœopathy; not, indeed, with the view of binding himself to the mode of treatment prescribed by that science, but that he may be enabled to judge whether it be worthy of adoption or not. Having so qualified himself, let him abide by his judgment.

The objects of the little volume now before us are, as we gather from its Introduction, and from an examination of its pages, "to place the public in possession of enlightened hygeinic rules, applicable to the various periods of life, and referrible as well to a state of health as to that of suffering;" and to "enable parties, who may be resident beyond the ready access of medical assistance, either to treat themselves, or confidently submit to the direction of some intelligent friend, who may be otherwise unconnected with the profession of medicine."

To these considerations Dr. Curie appears to have paid the most sedulous attention. He has pointed out the earliest duties "to be enforced in cases of severe acute disease, whilst awaiting the aid of the practitioner;" and he has rapidly, yet clearly, indicated "the treatment of acute affections which may be less serious and of more frequent occurrence." As to neatness, simplicity, and lucidness of style, this volume has been composed with great care.

The Youth of Shakspeare. 3 vols. By the Author of "Shakspeare and his Friends." Henry Colburn.

WITH something tob much of pretension, this is nevertheless a very pleasing and ingeniously contrived work, and one that ought to be popular, if only in virtue of the enthusiastic spirit of mingled love and admiration in which it is conceived and executed, not to mention the considerable talent that is brought to the task. It is doubtless a fearfully bold undertaking to attempt to put on paper what Shakspeare may be supposed to have uttered in his social or his solitary hours, or thought and felt in his secret heart and mind, or composed in his unwritten verses: and all of these the writer of "The Youth of Shakspeare" boldly essays—prompted thereto, we sincerely believe, rather by his abounding love and irrepressible admiration than by any idle hope of reaching, or even approaching, "the height of his great argument." That he has in many instances "come tardy off" who can be surprised at—as who is there among us merely "human mortals," living or dead, who would not have done so! Nevertheless he has, in a large proportion of those parts of his work which are exclusively devoted to Shakspeare, been singularly successful and felicitous; while in the general body of the novel (for such in fact it is), he has given us a story of great intrinsic interest, which is rendered doubly valuable by many highly characteristic pictures of the manners and habits of the time of which he writes, and not a few sketches of those real personages who gave such peculiar lustre to that more than Augustan age of English literature, as well as of English chivalry and English politics. Let the reader call to mind the élite of Elizabeth's statesmen, soldiers, scholars, and courtiers,—her Burleighs, Essexes, and Leicesters—her Sydneys and Raleighs—her Spensers, and the rest; not to mention a host of individuals in the lower ranges of society (especially among the players) who have, nevertheless, become in sort historical characters;—and he will find most of them glanced at in a characteristic spirit in these lively pages. When we add, that the whole is ingeniously worked into a story which includes considerable consecutive interest, it will be readily imagined that "The Youth of Shakespeare" affords a fund of pleasant, as well as of instructive reading, and forms a no less appropriate than it is an indispensable companion to the author's previous work of "Shakspeare and his Friends;" which latter work is in fact the cart (of Thespis), to which the present volumes furnish the steeds. That the two together will reach the goal of popular favour, is scarcely to be doubted.

History of the Orders of Knighthood of the British Empire. By Sir Harris Nicolas. W. Pickering.

THE first part contains the History of the Order of the Garter, from its foundation, 1344 according to Selden and Anstis, and 1349 according to Ashmole, to the year 1478. The learned antiquary and indefatigable author has availed himself of the above and numerous other authorities, indeed we doubt whether any can have escaped his researchers. If we might give an opinion from so small a portion of the intended work as is before us, we should say that the present undertaking will be superior even to the many valuable antiquarian publications of this author. We shall avail ourselves of an early opportunity to enter fully into the plan and merits of this comprehensive and most interesting history.

Prostitution in London, with a Comparative View of that of Paris and New York, &c.; with an Account of the Nature and Treatment of the various Diseases, &c. Illustrated by numerous Plates. By Michael Ryan, M.D. Bailliere.

WE decidedly object to the title of this book, only a portion of which have we transcribed; and, as to the book itself, three-fourths of it at least ought to have been written in a dead language. A work less suitable for general perusal has rarely fallen beneath our notice. The information which it presents may, indeed, make men wiser, but that it is calculated to make them better, we deny. There are cases, and this one of them, in which "ignorance is bliss." Many of the statistical, and also many of the surgical details, are exceedingly curious; but we sincerely hope, and most potently believe, that numbers of the facts to which they refer are violently exaggerated. For professional ability we give Dr. Ryan full credit; but, as a medical work, it is utterly useless to the general reader; and, with reference to the "treatment" of disease, it can be of little, if any, service to the medical practitioner. Whether Dr. Ryan's practice may be upon the wane, or whether he may be only making an attempt to attract notice, we are not prepared to say; but it is evident that the volume before us has been produced with the view of bringing "grist to the mill" in more ways than one.

The Gift for All Seasons. By W. Anderson, Esq. Smith, Elder, and Co.

A VERY neat little volume, resembling an "Annual," with nine engravings, and contributions from various pens. The articles generally have considerable merit and are in keeping with the title of the publication.

Travels of Mina and Godfrey. Smith and Elder.

A DELIGHTFUL little volume, with embellishments, of travels on the Rhine, Nassau, and Baden. It is just the sort of book to amuse and expand the mind of youth; adults may likewise gather from it much useful information.

SERIAL PARTS.

Greece: Pictorial, Descriptive, and Historical. By C. Wordsworth, D.D. W. S. Orr and Co. Part 2.—In pictorial embellishment this is the most extraordinary work of our times. The two numbers now published contain nearly sixty illustrations, which, without an exception, are admirably executed. The letter-press, by the learned Dr. Wordsworth, cannot but give general satisfaction.

Yarrell's History of British Birds. John Van Voorst.—Part XI. completes the first volume of this very beautiful work. To the student of Natural History Mr. Yarrell's publication must prove of the greatest value.

History of Napoleon. Edited by R. H. Horne, Esq. Part I. R. Tyas.—We are told that the object of this publication is to give an impartial digest of all the best of the numerous publications concerning Napoleon; which digest will be condensed in one volume. The Editor is evidently an anti-Bonapartist, but there is good promise in the part before us of a well-compiled and popular history. The illustrations are from French prints, and more numerous than excellent, but the typography is remarkably good, and the work extremely cheap.

The Memoirs of Davy Dreamy. Foster and Hextall.—This publication, of which two numbers have appeared, is a very amusing fiction in the Boz style. The sketches of characters have considerable merit, and the illustrations are clever. If the spirit is kept up, success must be certain.

Alexander's East India Magazine, March.—This periodical, valuable for its collections of Indian news, we are sorry to see this month disgraced by a story, "The Married Subaltern's Dinner in India," which is the most filthy and disgusting paper we ever met with in a publication assuming respectability.

Heads of the People. R. Tyas.—No. 5 contains the "Bar-Maid," the "Teetotaler," the "Factory Child," and the "Conductor." Leigh Hunt and Laman Blanchard are contributors of two of the papers, and the number is altogether as clever and amusing as any of the preceding.

Life and Campaigns of the Duke of Wellington. By the Rev. G. N. Wright. Fisher and Co.—The first part is anything but recommendatory: it is "book-making" without judgment, and on a par with the penny and twopenny trashy publications of the day, professing to give histories of Naval and Military events.

The Arabian Nights' Entertainments. J. Thomas.—The fourth part very justly deserves the encomiums we have already passed on those preceding it. The work is cheap and good.

THE SOLDIER OF ENGLAND.

Dedicated to the Sufferers from Russian "Delirium Tremens."

Oh speak not of Russia! Oh speak not of fear!
'Tis a word that a Briton ne'er knew in the fight.
Our fathers are gone—but their spirit is here,
And it glows in their sons with an ardour as bright,—
For the lion is roused, and is shaking his mane!
And the Soldier of England is ready again!

And hollow the "Patriot" who harbours such doubt,
With the heart of a craven, the tongue of a knave;
For better the Russian could feel his own knout
Than but dare breathe a threat on the land of the brave.
For the lion is roused, and is shaking his mane,
And the Soldier of England is ready again!

What though the vain "stripes" with the "Bear" should unite;
Ye barbarians both! Let your cohorts pour on.
The flag floats above that ye fear in its might,
And although ye were myriads—cravens, come on!
For the lion is roused, and is shaking his mane,
And the Soldier of England is ready again!

Dissensions forgotten when "England" the cry,
And a Wellington's soul in each breast is unfurl'd,
For home, its sweet daughters, and monarch to die,
Or preserve them the envy and pride of the world.
For the lion is roused, and is shaking his mane,
And the Soldier of England is ready again!

G. A. C.

Chatham Barracks, March 14th, 1839.

Captain Thomas Grant, E.I.C.S.—This officer, and estimable man, died on the 12th inst. at Bideford, North Devon, at which port he held the situation of Collector of Her Majesty's Customs. Captain Grant was in his 56th year; he had served with considerable distinction in the Bombay N.I., during an arduous period of 15 years, prior to 1811, when ill health compelled his retirement from active service. From long personal acquaintance with the deceased and many of his friends, an intimate knowledge of his public services and private worth, we can add that his death will be sincerely deplored in many quarters.

East India Intelligence.

The overland mail from India, via Marseilles, was received in town on Saturday morning, bringing intelligence from Bengal the 5th January, Madras and Bombay the 19th. The affairs of India wear a very gloomy aspect, the independent native States manifesting on every petty occasion a considerable degree of impatience, which seems likely to break out on the first reverse our troops might sustain. The whole of the powers west of the Indus appear to have formed a coalition to prevent the advance of our troops from Cabul down to Scinde, and the utmost vigilance is used to intercept the conveyance of any intelligence whatever of the movement of their troops to our camps, Dost Mahomed having prohibited the writing of any intelligence even to Lahore. All communication had been cut off between Candahar and Shikarpoor, and all couriers and travellers found on the roads are put to death. The chief of [illegible] Dost Mahomed, it is said, has [illegible] ready for the field, and is determined to fight. Considerable interruption had taken place to the advance [illegible] of the difficulty in obtaining [illegible] carts for carriage. The army of Shah Shooja, conducted by British Officers, had penetrated to Roriaok, where a camp had been formed, and was to halt several days; desertion had not been so numerous as might have been expected, and had occurred principally among the servants and camel-drivers. No movement appears to have taken place on the side of Nepaul.

By this intelligence we also learn that Prince Kamran, the chief of Herat, whom we saved from the Persians, has joined Dost Mahomed against us. Col. Burnes and Lieutenant Pottinger have been obliged to leave Herat, and instead of the aid, or at least the neutrality upon which Lord Auckland was so reasonably entitled to calculate, he will have to encounter the hostility of the Chief of Herat, as well as of Dost Mahomed. A Mr. Campbell, formerly an officer in the Madras Army, who was dismissed the service, has entered that of Dost Mahomed, and is busily employed in occupying and fortifying the passes leading to Candahar, to obstruct our passage. It is not unnatural that the treaty concluded between Lord Auckland, Runjeet Singh, and Shah Soojah, should have excited the anger of the Herat Chief, whose designs upon either Candahar or Cabul its execution must have effectually crushed. It is almost superfluous to say that foreign intrigue—the instrument of which will of course be formally disavowed—has had its share in producing this unexpected result.

Sir Henry Fane has not been heard of since he embarked on the Sutlej; he was expected to reach Sir John Keane's camp in Scinde about the end of January. It is calculated that there are boards of treasure at Hyderabad. The death of a Belochee in camp caused some sensation at Tatta; he had been taken up for selling spirits to the soldiers, refused to give up his sword, and, cutting at those who attempted to take it from him, made a rush towards the Commander-in-Chief's tent, when the sentry, a sepoy, was ordered to fire, and doing so, he brought him down.

The following is the route by which the army of the Indus is now moving from Ferozepore upon Bhawulpore, viz. Mundote, 14 miles; Mohunhe, 11½; Baggeke, 15; Bahuk Bodlake, 11½; Lukkeke, 15; Tawukul, 13½; Rahmooke, 12; Chukkoke, 13½; Mukdoomke, 13; Kassimke, 13½; Mahta Jhedoo, 13; Bhadere, 13½; Hasilpore, 11; Goth Kaim Raees, 8½; Khyrpore, 12½; Goth noon Mahomed, 13; Bakke da Dera, 10; Bhawulpore, 11. The Cavalry division will reach Bhawulpore the 29th—the 1st Brigade of Infantry on the 31st inst.; the 2d Brigade on the 1st—the 4th Brigade on the 2d—the Park of Artillery on the 3d—and the Irregular Brigade on the 4th prox., when they expect to halt some days, and will likely be joined by Shah Shooja's force, which has been moving about 50 miles in advance of the main body.

Burmah.—Our resident here has at last received a visit from the authorities, which was to be attributed to the wide-spreading rebellion in that province, and the appearance of H.M.'s sloop-of-war Favourite, coupled with the reinforcement of our troops at Moulmein. A party of 70, said to be conspirators, have been apprehended, five of whom were crucified in a most horrible manner, and the remainder cruelly beaten. A letter, addressed to the Editor of the Englishman states, that "Col. Benson has been received with all honour at Court. The whole Burmese officers have met him, and the King has presented him with eight elephants for his own use."

The belief at present is that the Fort of Jansi is very strong, and will give great trouble ere it be reduced. It is rumoured that many forts in Bundelkund are to be reduced, and that the force against Jansi will be employed in the work—the engineers' means are not considered sufficient. It is said Government claims Jansi as a lapsed "fief," there being no male heir. The Ranee refuses to give possession, beheaded a Minister who was favourably disposed towards our Government, and fired on the Political Agent.

Jeypore.—The mutiny at Jeypore has been satisfactorily arranged, the mutineers, amounting to between 4000 and 5000 in number, having been disbanded, after laying down their arms, and surrendering their matchlocks and 18 guns. They continued in position, however, until the preparations were nearly complete for the attack, and then turned faint. Some of the troops have been incorporated into Major Forster's brigade, which was considered more expedient than turning loose the whole of these desperate men.—Calcutta Courier, Jan. 5.

Richardson and Abercrombie. The 72d, 63d, and 60th were en route thither. Maj.-Gen. Bowen was ordered to join and assume command; but another order arrived directing all reports of the Jansi force to be made to Maj.-Gen. Sir Thos. Auburey, so that he was expected to join immediately.

We are not in the least surprised at the following Memorial from a distinguished officer of the Bengal Artillery, for we have received many letters complaining of the last selection of Company's Officers for the honour of the Bath, but which we have refrained from publishing out of delicacy to officers whose merits and demerits are reviewed. In the present case the Memorial is a public document, and does not contain a reflection upon any individual.

MEMORIAL TO GENERAL SIR HENRY FANE, G.C.B., &c. &c. &c.

COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, EAST INDIES.

HUMBLY SHEWETH—That your Memorialist, Major G. N. C. Campbell, has served thirty-two years as an officer in the Artillery regiment of the Bengal Army, and that for twenty-five years of that period, he has been attached to the Horse Artillery, has been present on every service in which his troop or company has been engaged; and that in two instances your Memorialist's conduct is publicly recorded, as having rendered special and personal service in presence of the enemy in action. In the first instance it is stated by Major-General Hardwicke (then Commandant of Artillery), that, in a report of Lieutenant-Colonel Pennington, who commanded the Artillery with Major-General Gillespie's Division, that after the assault on Kalinjhur, it required great courage and activity in preventing two Horse Artillery guns from falling into the hands of the enemy, and that your Memorialist's conduct on that occasion was above all praise. In the second instance, it is on record that, at a time when untoward circumstances had caused the failure of a cavalry charge, the prompt, arduous, and indefatigable exertions of your Memorialist were conspicuous, and obtained him the public acknowledgment of them in Detachment Orders.

Your Memorialist is not aware whether such services are considered distinguished or otherwise, and, content with the honourable rank he has obtained in a gradation service, your Memorialist would never have obtruded this statement on his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief's notice, but that two officers, his juniors in the regiment, have been selected to be distinguished by appointment to the honourable order of the Bath as C.B.'s. Your Memorialist, therefore, cannot but feel that the records of his own conduct in the Nepaulese Campaign, and the opportune service rendered at Mongroul, appear to have been utterly overlooked. The lamented death of Major-General Gillespie deprived your Memorialist of the power of making a reference to the testimony of a General, whose personal acknowledgments to your Memorialist a few minutes before his heroic death, would ever have been considered a sufficient reward, but that the selection of two officers junior in the regiment to your Memorialist for the honorary distinction of C.B. must necessarily lead to the impression that the services rendered by your Memorialist were either considered undeserving of any notice, or that the records of the services have been obliterated by the more recent achievements of junior officers. Though your Memorialist, in common with some Captains of Artillery, served at the last siege of Bhurtpore and for the last ten days was in personal command of the Left Grand Battery; still as this service, though the only duty that an Artillery Officer can look to perform at a siege, was not considered at the time deserving of any official mention, your Memorialist does not regard himself justified to rest any claim for consideration on the performance of this duty, though it is recorded that, for the last ten days of this siege, your Memorialist was commanding a battery of twelve guns and ten mortars, and that he solicited permission to remain there until the termination of the siege without any relief—and as it is usual for the name of officers commanding batteries to be officially mentioned, and as this custom was conformed to in Sir Archibald Campbell's despatches, your Memorialist is satisfied that the fact of His Excellency Lord Combermere having adopted a different rule, was never intended by his Sovereign to prejudice the just claims of your Memorialist to military reward.

In respectfully submitting this statement to your Excellency, your Memorialist ventures humbly to observe, that as an Officer in the East India Company's Army, serving in a distant land without influential friends or connexions, and with the knowledge that those Commanders under whom he has served, and who have publicly testified to his conduct referred to in this memorial, have long since descended to the grave, that your Excellency, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army of India, as a distinguished British General, will not, therefore, permit the services of an old officer to be altogether overlooked, and that this appeal to your Excellency's sense of justice and military feeling will insure to your Memorialist a due enquiry into the truth of the statements herein contained; and if it should appear on an investigation that your Memorialist's statements are correct, that [illegible] which your Memorialist has been so unjustly excluded.

To conclude, your Memorialist has the honour to subscribe himself, your Excellency's obedient and humble servant,

Extract from the copy of a memorandum sent by Maj.-General Hardwicke, Commandant of Artillery, to Lieutenant-Col. Do[illegible], Secretary to the Marquis of Hastings:—

"Engaged in every service in which the corps of Horse Artillery has been employed, Lieutenant Campbell had the honour to command one of the advanced guns placed with General Gillespie, close under the walls of Kalinjgah; and Lieut.-Colonel Pennington, on that occasion, in his report to Major-Gen. Commandant Horsford, after observing that it required great activity and courage to prevent the guns from falling into the hands of the enemy, characterised Lieutenant Campbell's conduct as 'above all praise.'"

Extract of orders of Lieutenant-Colonel Maxwell, commanding at Hawcontie, third Camp, near Mongroul:—

Detachment Morning Orders.

Tuesday, 2d October, 1821.

"The promptitude, arduous and indefatigable exertions

Captain Campbell and his troop of Horse Artillery, were so conspicuous throughout the whole operations, as to claim the Commanding Officer's warmest approbation and thanks."

Copy of a letter from Colonel Maxwell to Captain G. N. C. Campbell, dated Agra, 30th November, 1841:—

My Dear Sir,—It is with great pain and mortification that I acquaint you the Commander-in-Chief has much disapproved of my conduct in the action of the 1st October last at Mongrool, and that unfounded, and I fear I may add false and malicious, representations have been forwarded to Calcutta respecting the events of that day; it is, I am told, mentioned almost as a defeat on our part instead of a decided victory? I feel, therefore, no difficulty in requesting of you, who bore so conspicuous and honourable a part in the whole transaction, to report to the best of the whole business, as far as your observation and collection will admit of. As to myself, I feel conscious that my duty is every respect throughout the whole day, nor to upbraid myself with the commission of any one intentional mistake; the victory was decidedly as complete as possible, hundred navies were with almost of allies, dangerous to many moments, and nearly fatal in all.

On the present occasion I do not make this appeal as a matter of favour the short acquaintance existing between us precludes any thing of this nature), but as a man of honour and a soldier whether in your opinion every thing was done, that circumstances admitted of, and whether the victory was not as complete as possible by the disconfiture and flight of the whole of the enemy's army—the capture of their two guns—the camp bazaars, &c. &c., at a loss on our side comparatively very small, although no one can lament more than I do the death of the two very fine and promising young men. The wounds of Major Ridge are severe; this in all human probability would never have occurred had the two squadrons of the 4th Naval Cavalry waited a very few minutes, either for a few shots from your guns, or the arrival of Major Kennedy and 5th Cavalry, who were not more than one quarter of a mile in their rear, I can of course that your guns must have dispersed the small the enemy's horse expose them (the squadron under Ridge).

Having now mentioned ears to me necessary to you, as honour, to give your s, and impartial to the occurrences which t within your own k, on the day of the action—and, at the same time, so far from ing any objection, it is rather my wish that this letter should every publicity, and that, it may be through the medium of your brother, I believe Deputy-Secretary Military Department, communicated for the information of Colonel Casement, who, at his own discretion, will or will not submit the contents to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

My reasons for making this appeal to you in particular are manifold:—1st. As having commanded the most active arm of the service on that day; 2dly, As having had the good fortune to be present at the most critical moments. 3dly. That your presence at the Head-Quarters may tend on inquiry to confirm or contute all that I have asserted in my public despatches on the occasion. I have already written to the Adjutant-General, entreating, that should His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief not be fully satisfied with the reasons and explanations transmitted by me a day or two ago, my conduct might be submitted to the decision of a General Court-Martial. I am, my dear Sir, very sincerely yours, (Signed) Wm. Gko. Maxwell.

Copy of a letter from Major G. N. C. Campbell, Commanding 1st Batt Artil., to Major Cartwright, Assist.-Adjut.-Gen. Artil., dated Dum Dum, 24th November, 1838.

Sir,—I have to solicit that you will do me the favour to submit the accompanying Memorials in duplicate to the Brigadier-Acting-Commandant of Artillery, with my respectful request that the same may be forwarded through the prescribed channel to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, with whatever observations Brigadier Faithfull may deem proper. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

Copy of a letter from G. N. C. Campbell, of Ar ary, &c., &c., &c., to Colonel Berseford, M Dum, 24th November, 1 warding, through

Sir,—I did myself the scribed channel, a Mer Excellency the Coma in-Chief on the 24th I eg that you will do i favour to submit, for His Excellency's private perusal, t closed private letter, written by the late Colonel Maxwell, to me, and which, at the Colonel's request, I forwarded to the Military Secretary to Lord Hastings, with a letter from myself, exculpating Colonel Maxwell from the unjust representations referred to. My object in now transmitting this letter is that, as the officers under whom I served are almost all dead, I cannot but feel that it is my duty, under existing circumstances, to make use of whatever documentary testimonials the officers under whom I served may have furnished me with, in support of pretensions, founded on services which are recorded in official documents. The forms of public official memorials, not, however, admitting of appending a private letter, I adopt the only alternative left me, of addressing this communication to yourself, and solicit that you will do me the favour of submitting the enclosed to the perusal of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and kindly explain my reasons for so doing. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

When O'Connell crossed last from Dublin, the sea was very rough, and the great Precursor exceedingly discomposed. "How are you, my man?" said Mr. M. of Liverpool, bending kindly over him. "Infernal sick," sighed Dan. "Well, then (rejoined M.), I hope this will convince you how little good, and how much ill comes of agitation!"

Count D'Orsay, it is said, laid a wager with the Marquess of Salisbury, that he would cause a diplomatic note to be delivered from the Tuileries to the English resident, respecting a dinner party given by him. The Count won his wager by inviting a party to meet Prince Louis Napoleon!

THE LATE VICE-ADMIRAL THE HONOURABLE SIR CHARLES PAGET, KNIGHT, G.C.H.

It is with sincere regret we announce the death (on the 27th January last) of the gallant Naval Commander-in-Chief in the West Indies and North America.—This intelligence was brought to England by H.M.'s brig Harpy. Sir Charles had embarked on board the Tartarus steamer, at Jamaica, for the purpose of going to the Bermudas, where his family are. He was off those islands during three days, but being unable to reach them, was obliged to go back to St. Thomas's.

Sir Charles was the fifth son of Henry, the late Earl of Uxbridge, by Jane, eldest daughter of Arthur Champagné, Dean of Clonmacnoise, and a brother of the present Marquess of Anglesey, was born Oct. 7, 1778; entered the Naval service at an early age, and commanded the Martin sloop of war, attached to Admiral Duncan's fleet, in the memorable battle off Camperdown, Oct. 11, 1797. He was advanced to Post Captain on the 17th of the same month; and in the following year appointed to the Brilliant, a small frigate, in which he captured Le Dragon, 14, laden with cocoa, cotton, coffee, and indigo, from Guadaloupe, bound to L'Orient; and the St. Jago, a Spanish privateer of 18 guns and 50 men. The Brilliant formed part of the armament sent against Ferrol, under the orders of Sir J. B. Warren, in the autumn of 1800. On 20th March following, she experienced a very heavy gale of wind in the Channel, during which she strained so much as to render it necessary for 14 of her guns to be thrown overboard. She arrived at Plymouth in a very leaky state on the 5th April, 1801. Some time previous to the gale, Captain Paget had been chased by a French squadron, commanded by M. Nielly, but fortunately escaped under cover of the night. His next appointment was to the Hydra, 38, in which ship he proceeded to the Mediterranean, where he remained about twelve months. On 6th April, 1803, he commissioned the Endymion, a frigate of the largest class; and in the course of the ensuing summer captured La Bacchante, a French corvette of 18 guns, pierced for 22, and 200 men, from St. Domingo, bound to Brest; L'Adour storeship, pierced for 20 guns, from Martinique to Rochefort; and Le General Moreau, schooner privateer, 16 guns and 98 men. The former vessel persisted in her endeavours to escape till she had sustained a loss of eight men (including her Second Captain) killed and nine wounded by the Endymion's bow-chasers.

Captain Paget subsequently intercepted several richly-laden Spanish merchantmen coming from South America; but is said to have realised nearly 50,000*l.* less than he otherwise would have done in consequence of an agreement he had entered into with Capt. T. Elphinstone, of the Diamond, that they should share with each other whatever prizes were made during their continuance on the same station—an engagement which Captain Paget most strictly fulfilled. The Endymion also captured La Colombe, French corvette, 16 guns, off Ushant, June 18, 1805. In the night of March 8, 1806, the boats of the Egyptienne, into which ship Capt. Paget had recently removed, made a gallant attack upon L'Alcide, a large French privateer, frigate-built, and pierced for 34 guns, which they succeeded in cutting out from under the protection of two batteries in Muros harbour. This exploit was performed under the directions of Captain Handfield, late First Lieut. of the Egyptienne, who was serving as a volunteer on board her, in consequence of his promotion not having been officially communicated to him.

Capt. Paget, in the summer of 1808, obtained the command of the Revenge, 74. In 1810 he was employed in the blockade of Cherbourg; and whilst on that service captured Le Vengeur, a French lugger, of 10 guns and 78 men. He was subsequently appointed to Superb, another third rate, belonging to the Channel fleet; and during a cruise in the Bay of Biscay he took several prizes, among others the Star, an American brig, 6 guns and 35 men, and Viper, letter of marque, of the same force. In 1814 he was employed on the coast of N. America, under the orders of Sir A. Cochrane, by whom he was entrusted with the command of a squadron stationed off New London; and during his continuance there, he gave the enemy great annoyance, particularly in an attack upon Wareham, at which place upwards of 2000 tons of shipping, together with a valuable cotton-mill belonging to a company of merchants at Boston, were destroyed by the boats of the Superb and Nimrod, under the directions of his First Lieut., James Garland, in the face of a numerous Militia, and without the loss of a man.

Capt. Paget was appointed to the command of Prince Regent yacht, Jan. 1, 1810; afterwards to Royal George; and attended George IV. in all his marine excursions, from whom he received the honour of Knighthood at the Pavilion, Brighton, Oct. 19, 1819, on the occasion of being nominated a K.H. Sir Charles succeeded his brother, Lieut.-Gen. Sir E. Paget, as groom of his Majesty's bed-chamber, Jan. 30, 1822, hoisted the superior broad pendant of a Commodore on board the last-named yacht, July 26 following; was advanced to the rank of Rear-Admiral, April 9, 1825; and to that of Vice-Admiral, Jan. 10, 1837; Feb. 11 following he succeeded Vice-Adm. Sir Peter Halkett as Commander-in-Chief in the West Indies and North America, when he hoisted his flag in the Cornwallis. Capt. Douglas will command on the station, with the rank of Commodore, until the arrival Sir Charles's successor. He was first returned to Parliament as member for Milbourne Port, in 1806; and subsequently he represented the borough of Carnarvon.—He married, in March, 1808, Elizabeth, Araminta, second daughter of Henry (and Lady Elizabeth) Monck, Esq., by whom he has left a family of ten children, the eldest Capt. Charles Paget, commands the Howe flag-ship at Sheerness.

The history of the world perhaps, presents no spectacle so splendid and enviable as that of the Duke of Wellington. After a career of unexampled success as a warrior, and having conquered in a hundred battles, a durable and permanent peace for his country, the Duke might have closed his career under the shade of laurels unequalled in modern or ancient times. But not so. The Duke of Wellington only retires from the field of Waterloo to become as a statesman no less [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] judgment, and a [illegible] never does he [illegible] every subject which he handles, and [illegible] and gratitude of his [illegible]

Crime in Sweden.—In [illegible] the total [illegible] Sweden being less than three millions, one in every 340 persons was convicted of some criminal offence; while in England and Wales the proportion was one in every 1,005, and even in Ireland one in 723

BRITISH WATERPROOFING COMPANY, 452, West Strand, near the Lowther Arcade.—The Directors of this Company invite the attention of the public to the following report, received from the Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police Force, addressed to H. C. Moreton Dyer, Esq., one of the Directors of this Company:—

"Metropolitan Police Office, Whitehall-place, 23rd February, 1839.—Sir,—The Commissioners of Police beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, requesting to be informed of the reports made by the police constables who have been wearing the clothing proposed and waterproofed by the British Waterproofing Company. The Commissioners have to acquaint you in reply, that one suit has been in the use of a constable, whose beat is situate on Blackheath. He reports that frequently during the month of January he was out in six hours' successive rain, without getting the least damp underneath the clothing; that on the night of the 8th instant it rained the whole nine hours he was on duty, and that when he took off his great coat, in the presence of the Serjeant at the station, it was found as dry inside as when he put it on. That office he wore the waterproofed [illegible] which was wet as at one time, would have penetrated those parts of the ordinary clothing. The other police constables in the district Kingsland. He reports that he has worn the clothing during night and day, and has been under severe rain and snow storms, none of which penetrated any part of his clothing except a little wet through one of the legs of the trousers on the first day he put them on, but since then he has observed nothing more of it. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant, "C. ROWAN."

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA.

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfumier superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London any where but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street), but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

FAMILIES, TRAVELLERS, MASTERS OF SHIPS, AND SPORTSMEN,
Should never be Without MOXON'S

EFFERVESCENT MAGNESIAN APERIENT, decidedly the most generally useful Medicine ever offered to the public.

The unrivalled efficacy of the Magnesian in all Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels has obtained for it the uniform recommendation and approval of the Faculty.

This unique preparation unites all the active powers of the most approved saline purgatives with the palatable qualities of a glass of soda water. In torpid state of the liver and bowels, bilious affections, cholera morbus, pains in the head, or disordered state of the stomach, nausea, and violent sickness, it will be found a safe, speedy, and effectual remedy. It gives instantaneous relief in the heartburn, is of great service in preventing piles, fistula, and gout, and in alleviating the febrile symptoms attendant on the latter affection. Derangement of the stomach and head, &c., arising from too free indulgence in the gratifications of the table, is speedily removed by a tea-spoonful taken early in the morning.

Prepared only by BENJAMIN MOXON, Chymist, Hull.

Wholesale Agents—Barclay and Sons, London; J. and R. Raimes, Edinburgh and Dublin. Sold wholesale at all the Medicine Warehouses in London, and retail by all Venders of Medicines throughout the kingdom, in bottles at 2s. 9d.; 4s. 6d., and in family bottles at 11s., containing the quantity of five of the 2s. 9d. size, a saving of 20 per cent. to the purchaser.

N.B.—Be careful to observe that "Moxon and Smith, Chymists, Hull," is engraved on the stamp, without which it cannot be genuine.

May be had as above, that very popular and much-esteemed preparation of Sarsaparilla, the

CONCENTRATED COMPOUND DECOCTION,
Prepared by B. Moxon, Chymist, Hull.

"One table-spoonful added to a pint of pure water readily forms a pint of the Compound Decoction; and, in justice to the preparers, we must say, appears to be more impregnated with the virtues of the ingredients than the decoction made in the usual way."—See Gazette of Health and Practical Medicine for January, 1839.

In bottles at 4s. 6d., 12s., and 22s., the latter equivalent to 32 pints of the Compound Decoction of the London Pharmacopœia.

CLIMATE ON THE HAIR.—The effect of climate upon the hair is very great. Extreme cold is apt to dry and wither the roots, and, on the contrary, extreme heat to enervate and weaken this important integument of the head. The most extraordinary thing connected with the preceding fact is, that one counteracting agent should be endowed with the singular virtues of preserving the hair in health and beauty, in either the torrid or frigid zone; and it is a question, whether ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL is most used in warm or cold countries. At the Court of Russia, the above delightful conservator of the hair is lauded with extraordinary encomiums; while in India the consumption of Rowland's Macassar is immense!

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

WITHIN a period of Two Months upwards of Three Hundred Patients were successfully treated at the Metropolitan Hospitals with FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

By JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.—

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

(Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

"45, Lincoln's-inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

This invaluable Medicine is confidently recommended in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Urethral Discharges, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland; its purifying effects upon the general health render it particularly applicable in all cases of relaxed fibre and nervous debility.

Prepared only by GEORGE FRANKS, Surgeon, 99, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

Mr. FRANKS may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

CAUTION.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

BALSAM OF SPERMACETI.—Asthma, Shortness of Breath, Wheezing Coughs, soreness, tightness, and oppression of the Chest, and most affections of the Chest and Lungs, relieved in ten minutes, by taking one dose of WOODHOUSE'S BALSAM of SPERMACETI, or PECTORAL COUGH DROPS. Persons doubting the efficacy of this Medicine may take a dose in the Proprietor's shop before they purchase. The Proprietor earnestly recommends a trial of these Drops to persons afflicted with the above complaints, but he does not introduce them as being an infallible cure (as many do), but is warranted in asserting their efficacy, from the extensive relief afforded in numerous cases of the above description. Constitutional Coughs of three, four, and more years' standing, have been cured in the course of a week by the use of these Drops. In the Hooping and Chin Coughs it will be found equally valuable. Two tea-spoonfuls of the Balsam are equal to one ounce of Spermaceti—it will at all times relieve the most violent Consumptive Cough.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. each.

This preparation is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist extraordinary to his late Majesty, at his Laboratory, 12, Little James-street, Bedford-row; of whom it may be had Wholesale; also Retail of Nash, 18, King William-street, London-bridge; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Hannay, 3, Oxford-street; and of all Medicine Venders.

The great superiority of J. BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared expressly for her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY GEORGE IV.'S PERFUME, BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove.—"Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. Lawrenson."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Venders.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

FOR THE FACE AND SKIN.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, a mild and efficient Protector of the Skin and Complexion from the baneful influence of Frost, Cold Winds, or Damp Atmosphere; heals Chilblains, Chaps, and renders the most harsh and rough Skin delightfully soft, fair, and smooth; effectually eradicates all Pimples, Spots, Redness, Tan, Freckles, and other Cutaneous Defects, at the same time imparting a healthy juvenile bloom, as well as realising a delicate White Neck, Hand, and Arm; in cases of Burns and Scalds, it immediately allays the irritability and relieves the inflammation.

This exotic preparation is perfectly innoxious, acting, in all cases, by promoting a healthy tone of the minute vessels; and is the most elegant as well as effective toilet appendage hitherto submitted to universal patronage.

GENTLEMEN, after shaving, will find it allay the irritation and smarting pain, and render the skin smooth and pleasant.

Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per Bottle, duty included.

OBSERVE.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON, is engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on the Cork, also printed, in red, on the Wrapper in which each bottle is enclosed. Ask for "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR."

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.—FAMILIES

in WANT of really good SERVANTS, of every description, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, 326, Oxford-street, corner of Regent-circus, (removed from 134, Oxford-street—established in 1830), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as domestics are waiting to be hired from Ten to Five o'clock. Convenient rooms are appropriated to engagements, which prevents unnecessary trouble at home through promiscuous applications. Many persons are prejudiced against an establishment for hiring servants; but if the servants possess good characters, it must certainly be obviously absurd to suppose that they can be injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure situations. Fee for obtaining a servant, 2*s.* 6*d.*; as many as may be required in a family per annum, 14*s.*

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE

SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Trademen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 79, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lacombe, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

52d—On the 9th Jan. this regt., at Barbadoes, passed a brilliant inspection before the Lieut.-General Commanding the Forces. The light-infantry movements were numerous and admirably executed, and the advance in line across the extensive parade ground of St. Ann's called called forth the approbation of Sir Samford Whittingham, who was pleased to issue the following flattering general order taking a rapid but accurate review of the formation of the 52d Regiment to Light Infantry under Sir John Moore,—tracing the corps through its honourable and distinguished career, praising the present discipline and excellent system adopted in the internal economy of the regt., and holding forth inducements to emulate its former glory, and to add fresh laurels to those that already cover its colours. Capt. Forrester and Lieut. Twopenny embarked for Europe in the Lyra packet on the 14th Jan., on six months' leave.

"Head Quarters, Barbadoes, 10th Jan., 1839

"The Lieut.-General has great pleasure in conveying to Major De Bosc, the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of her Majesty's 52d regt., the expression of the peculiar satisfact[illegible] he experienced at the review of that corps yesterday evening. All the movements united activity and precision, and the very long advance in line could not be better executed.

"The 52d [illegible] and has long been one of the most brilliant corps of Light Infantry in the British Army, and its discipline in the field is equalled by its good conduct in quarters.

"It is now thirty-five years since the ever to be-lamented Sir John Moore undertook the organization of the 52d reg. as a Light Infantry battalion. What complete success has attended his efforts, the whole British Army can testify.

"The world, and the Light Infantry in particular, [illegible] the master-hand which inspired it, but to the admirable interior system adopted by Sir John Moore, the durability of the superior discipline of the regiment must be attributed.

"The ground work of the edifice is the elementary drill, from the first position of the recruit to the complete drill of the company without this elementary school, all subsequent labour will be of little avail. No body of men not so instructed, whatever their length of service, could have made the long advance in line, on subsequent charge, in the masterly manner yesterday executed by the 52d reg. But there is another part of the organization of the 52d reg., to which the Lieut.-General is anxious I call the attention of all the regiments under his command.

"It is impossible for any Commanding Officer to conduct efficiently the command of a regiment, unless aided and assisted by that class of officers who have ever, in all well-organized regiments formed the basis upon which military discipline must rest.

"The Chains of companies are the responsible agents to the Commanding Officer for the different portions or divisions of which a battalion is composed; but, in order to ensure their cordial cooperation in the wishes as well as orders of the chief, a certain due proportion of power must be delegated to them; and the non-commissioned officers and men of their respective companies must be accustomed to consider their Captain, as the superior authority of the Commanding Officer, as distributor of all minor rewards and punishments.

"This is, invariably acted upon, has preserved the 52d for thirty-five years in its present splendid condition, and, as long as that system shall be rigidly persevered in, we have a right to anticipate the future the same happy results." Signed, &c.

68th Depot—the officers in Waterford issued cards for a ball and supper on Wednesday.

69th—On Jan. H.M. brig Racer anchored in Carlisle Bay, having sent out express to order the 69th to Canada. "Aptitude is the life and soul of the Army, and never more truly displayed than in the rapidity with which Excellency, the Lieut.-General Commanding, made arrangements for embarking the South Lincolnshire. The only transport on the station, the Elizabeth, had gone to Antigua for Col. Everard, K.H., and the head-quarters of the 14th Regt.; but, quick as thought, two comps. under the command of Capt. Thomas, 69th Regt., were got ready, and embarked in H.M.S. Crocodile, on the forenoon of the 12th, and, 48 hours after the orders were received, the entire of the regt. was ready to proceed to its destination. On the 17th Jan. the second division, under the command of Capt. Rose, embarked on board the Numa transport, and, on the return of the Elizabeth transport from St. Lucia, the head-quarters, band, and staff of the regt. embarked in that ship for Canada. The officers who have gone with the 69th to Canada, are—Captains Blackburne, Thomas, Rose, O'Halloran; Lieutenants Mundell, Sir Osborne Gibbes, Bt., Losack, Magnay; Ensigns Coates, Acting-Adjutant, Edgar, Law; Quartermaster Hollis; Assist.-Surgeon Irwin. Hewson, Ensigns Macdonald, Sandes, Aplin, Assist.-Surgeon Morrison, and one Serjt., 32 r. and f., five women, and five children, disembarked, (See 74th.) The Adjutancy is vacant by the promotion of Lieut. Egerton to a company.

BARBADOES, 17th Jan.—(From a Correspondent.)—We are in a fine bustle here, apparently nothing but disasters. On the night of the 24th ult., the hired vessel, the Duke of York, ran upon a rock off Guadaloupe, with Col. Everard and the head-quarters of the 14th regiment, and was dashed to pieces. No lives were fortunately lost, but the soldiers escaped with only their arms and accoutrements, and all the baggage lost; and, indeed, had not the French authorities at Guadaloupe been active in sending assistance, all on board would have perished. Now I must tell you, Sir, this Duke of York belonged to Government, and has been used for many years in conveying troops and stores from one island to another; but in the year 1837 she was condemned as no longer sea-worthy, and was sold to a Mr. Grant, who botched her up, and, forsooth, she was hired by the authority here to effect a change of troops—a pretty change he has made of it!! Are soldiers' lives of no value? Will no one institute an inquiry about this? We had scarcely got over this shock, when this day we learn a most violent earthquake, such as never was known before there, has visited St. Lucia, knocked down houses, and the barracks at Pigeon Island, and cracked and damaged the barracks at Morne Fortuné, which, from all accounts, appear to be over-filled with troops. Col. Everard is now going to St. Lucia with head-quarters—I should say he is an able person, from what I have seen of him; and then the head-quarters of the 1st West India regiment is, they say, to come direct to Barbadoes. This will be an agreeable change, for St. Lucia barracks are only built for the left wing of a regiment, although two head-quarters have been crowded into them for the last nine months. West, at Dominica, we hear, Major Mannin, of the 74th regiment, is administering the Government. The earthquake, I now hear, has played sad havoc at Martinique,—killed 500 persons, and laid houses in ruins, whilst we sit snug here at Barbadoes (now the fever has left us), and look on. The 89th are coming to Antigua and St. Kitts, whilst the 74th are doomed to that charnel-house, St. James's, Trinidad. We want some one to look into our West Indies, and judge from ocular experience how things are carried on. I will give you some fresh news soon about the staff here; in the meantime, always yours,
LOOK OUT.

[From a Correspondent.]—On the 12th Jan., at three minutes before six o'clock, A.M., a severe shock of earthquake was felt at Barbadoes: it took a northern direction, and the islands have suffered more or less. The barracks at Morne Fortuné, St. Lucia, are greatly shaken; at Pigeon Island the wings of the new barracks are down, Hospital Commissariat stores; but fortunately no loss of life. At Fort Royal, Martinique, several houses, public buildings, &c., were destroyed, and many people buried in the ruins. At St. Piers the barracks were levelled to the earth, and the return of killed amounts to 500, chiefly Military. On the estates throughout the island the damage done to property has been considerable. Accounts from Antigua, St. Kitts, and Nevis, report, that the earthquake was felt very severely, but no loss of life or property has taken place. A few days previous to the 12th the weather was sultry and oppressive. The earthquakes will form an agreeable variety to the hurricanes: these, with yellow Jack, and a touch of small pox, render the West Indies delightful!

The will of the late Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Elley has been proved in the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The personal estate is sworn under 25,000*l.* The testator, amongst various legacies, leaves to the person who shall be the Lieutenant-General of the regiment to which he belonged, after his decease, the sum of 300*l.*, to purchase plate for the use of the mess of the said regiment, and also to the Col. of the 17th Lancers a like sum of 300*l.* for the same purpose, and the following charitable legacies:—Magdalen Asylum, London Road, 300*l.*; Female Orphan Asylum, 300*l.*; Westminster Lying-in Hospital, 300*l.*; Bethlem Lunatic Asylum, 500*l.*; Refuge of the Destitute, 200*l.*; Institution for the Cure of Cancer, Kent Road, 250*l.*; also, to the Burgess and Mayor of Windsor, 100*l.*, the interest to be by them applied among such poor decayed householders of the borough of New Windsor as they shall think proper. The will is dated 6th March, 1838.

Assist. Commissary-General Verfenstein, to the sincere regret of all classes of society, Military and Civil, left Barbadoes for St. Vincent on 21st January.

The commemoration dinner at the United Service Club, in celebration of the storming of Fort Royal, in Martinique, by the Duke of Kent, at the head of the brigade of Grenadiers, has not taken place on the usual day (St. Patrick's) the anniversary of that brilliant event, in consequence of the day falling on a Sunday, the dinner, was, therefore, postponed.

The Queen, at the recommendation of Lord Melbourne, has granted a pension of two hundred pounds per annum to Col. Gurwood (the editor of "The Duke of Wellington's Despatches"), on account of his services to literature.

GEORGE ANSON.

We understand that a new description of fuse for shells has been invented by Mr. Marsh, of the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, which is likely to supersede that which has been so long in use; one of its advantages over the old fuse, is, that its fire is not likely to be extinguished by sinking on water, which has been frequently found to be the case with the old fuse, in the practice carried on at Portsmouth under Capt. Hastings, of the Royal Navy.

The Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Minto, Viscount Melville, Viscount Howick, Lord Hill, Sir Hussey Vivian, Sir Alexander Dickson, Sir George Cockburn, Sir Henry Hardinge, and other members of the Naval and Military Commission, assembled at twelve o'clock on Tuesday at the Treasury. The Commissioners sat till past three o'clock.

Sir John Keane is spoken of as successor to the Commander-in-Chiefship of India. Major-General W. K. Elphinstone, C.B., goes out on the Bombay Staff, to succeed Major-General the Hon. J. Ramsay.

Presbyterian Chaplains will, it is expected, be appointed to the 25th, 26th, 42d, 71st, 72d, 79th, 91st, 92d, and 93d Scotch regiments.

COLONEL JONES.—[From a Correspondent.]—Leslie Grove Jones was well known from the prominent part he took in public affairs, and particularly as the writer of the letters in the Times, signed Radical, which were read with so much interest and instruction by the many, and so much wrath and disquiet by the few. The earlier history of Leslie Grove Jones is associated with that of the foremost men of his day, in the most open assertion of the great principles of civil and religious freedom. From his very boyhood he was engaged in struggles against oppression; and before he was 16, while a Midshipman on board the Revolutionaire, he got censured for his interference on behalf of a poor negro cook, on whom the Captain had inflicted the lash for some petty offence. Of an excitable and enthusiastic temperament, in which firmness, singleness, and sincerity of purpose were intimately blended, no man was ever a more ardent lover of truth, or a bolder advocate of liberty. Strong in his intellect, warm in his affections, his attachments were not only devoted, they were sometimes heroic. He served and defended many a friend whom, but for him, the world would have abandoned; and his benevolence was often of that high character which demands the noblest moral courage for its display. Beneath an external roughness of manners, not always intelligible to those who imperfectly knew him, there lay an amiable, simple, and philanthropic nature, which exhibited itself in countless deeds of kindness and generosity. He was born at Bradford, Wilts, on the 4th of June, 1770. His father had been an officer in the Navy, and died Inspector of the Board of Works, in 1807. The Colonel was twice married—first, to the daughter of Mr. W. Miller, Burns's friend and patron; and, secondly, to Mrs. Dashwood, the grand-daughter of Bishop Shipley. He has left behind him two sons.

Late accounts from Canada state that Captain Otway's comp. Rl. Artillery, from Quebec, had arrived at Kingston, and the last detachment of the 93d, from New Brunswick, had joined head-quarters at Toronto. The Coldstream Guards were performing theatricals at Quebec for the public charities. The Grenadier Guards had moved from Lapraire to Montreal. Maj.-Gen. Sir James Macdonell has returned to Quebec, from Montreal, and resumed the command of the former garrison. Lieut.-Colonel Cathcart, 1st Drag. Guards, was appointed to command the five frontier counties, hd.-qrs. at St. John's. The 66th, under Major Johnston, had changed quarters from Chambly to Lapraire; the 15th, under Lieut.-Col. Lord C. Wellesley, from Isle-au-Noix to St. John's; and the 65th, under Lieut.-Col. Senior, proceed to Isle au-Noix. Capt. Bourchier, 93d, had assumed his duties of Fort Major at Prescot. Two comps. 89th landed at Halifax from Barbadoes on 8th Feb., in the Crocodile. Maj. T. Fitzgerald, Town-Major of Kingston, died there last month.

MILITIA.—Notice has been received that one third of the available force of the militia will be called out for twelve months' permanent duty, to be succeeded by the other portions in rotation, and the whole body to be called out for 28 days' training yearly.—Exeter Flying Post.

PORTSMOUTH, March 22.—(From our own Correspondent).—The Indus was launched on Saturday morning between 11 and 12 o'clock. An immense assemblage of persons was present. She was named by Miss Bouverie, a niece of the Admiral Superintendent. One of the dog-shores did not work well, and some of the ribbon of the ways was torn off. In getting her into the basin, owing to the very inconvenient position of the outer sheers, she got foul of the northern one, and slightly sprung it. The Indus is in dock to be coppered and have her ballast put in. The Royal Frederick, to be named Royal Sovereign, will not be launched on the day intended, it being expected that the Queen will be down to witness it. A bust of her Majesty is to form the figure-head. The Zebra did not leave St. Helen's until Saturday morning. Barham has gone to Sheerness to be paid off, and the Winchester is ordered to be commissioned at that port, as the flag-ship of Sir Thomas Harvey, the newly-appointed Commander in-Chief in the West Indies. It appears that Scylla has gone into Plymouth, possibly the crew may be sent from thence in a steamer, as orders were in the dockyard for them to be turned over to Clio, now in this basin, masted and ready for commission. Powerful is at Spithead; she is nearly 200 men short of complement: she left an anchor in the Swin, and has been furnished with another from this dockyard. Curlew, Waterwitch, and Snipe are fitting in the basin. Ætna alongside the hulk in the harbour; she has bent sails, and will go to sea in a few days. Meteor steamer came in this morning, on her passage to Plymouth and Dublin. Rattlesnake and Tweed are in dock fitting, and Childers in the basin: she will have her masts put in next week, and be then ready for commission. Ships in Port—Powerful at Spithead; Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Ætna, Meteor, Snipe, Curlew, Waterwitch, Messenger steamer, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, March 21st.—(From our own Correspondent.)—March 15th—Arrived Scylla, 16, Com. Hon. J. Denman, and came into harbour on 20th, to be paid off; she is in very bad condition, and it is supposed will be sold out of the service. She has been in active service upwards of 33 years, with the exception of a thorough repair some years since. She was built by contract, and is an excellent sea-boat, as was proved in the experimental squadron under the command of the late Sir Pulteney Malcolm.—16th—Sailed Boreas, Dutch corvette, 24, for the Texel: her officers, on visiting the dock-yard, expressed their admiration at the manner in which every department was conducted. 18th—Arrived Aid, lighter, with stores from Sheerness. 20th—Rhadamanthus, steam frigate, Com. A. Wakefield, moved from the harbour into Barn Pool; she will be paid wages on the 23d, and proceed for the Mediterranean in a day or two after. 100 boys go out passengers in her, to be distributed on board the squadron under the command of Admiral Sir R. Stopford. 21st—Sailed Acorn, 16, Com. John Adams, for the Cape of Good Hope and the Coast of Africa. Wolf, 18, Captain E. Stanley, was paid off into ordinary this day. Sergeant Woodgate, commanding the party of Marines on board her, received a gratuity of 15*l.* and a medal, for good conduct. Harpy, 10, Lieut.-Com. John S. Ellman, is daily expected at this port to be paid off. Mr. Wm. Crealock, a Clerk of the 3d class, in the Storekeeper's office, is promoted to the 2d class in the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. John Shaw. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Inconstant, Scylla, Tyrian. In the Sound—Implacable. In Barn Pool—Rhadamanthus.

MILFORD HAVEN, 20th March.—The Harpy, 10, Lieut. Ellman, which arrived here last week from the Coast of Africa (last from the West Indies), brings accounts of the death of Adm. Sir C. Paget, Commander-in-Chief on the station, which took place at St. Thomas's, after an ineffectual attempt to land him in a state of severe illness at Bermuda, from the Flamer steamer. The Dee and Tartarus were at St. Thomas when the Harpy left, and the squadron under Commodore Douglas was cruising off Vera Cruz. The fever had been raging severely in Jamaica, but was gradually abating. The Harpy suffered much while on the Coast of Africa, particularly at Sierra Leone. She is very short of hands, and was compelled to obtain some that brought the Windsor Castle here, to navigate her to Portsmouth, where she is ordered to be paid off, and left for that purpose yesterday. The Gorgon was docked up at the Dock-yard on Friday, to have her bottom examined, and there being little or no defect, she was taken out again on Saturday. She then went alongside the pier for a supply of coals, and, having taken on board about 150 tons, is now at the moorings off the Dock-yard. She is to go to Liverpool in charge of the Medusa, new steamer. The Medusa was undocked on Friday, to make way for the Gorgon, and taken in again on Saturday. On Monday again she was undocked, being partially jury-rigged, and the same dock is being cleared for the reception of the Windsor Castle, where she is to be taken to pieces. Mr. Lawes, the storekeeper, has not yet returned from public leave. The chimney for the new steam-engine being now complete, the machinery will be speedily put up for pumping out the dock, for want of which a good deal of difficulty has arisen during the late docking and undocking her Majesty's ships and vessels.

DEPTFORD, 21st March.—The Vanguard freight-ship has sailed for Jamaica, and the Boadicea transport, Lieut. Ward, Agent, to take convicts from Woolwich to Bermuda. Remain at Deptford—Alonzo transport, Lieut. Spencer, Agent, loading for Plymouth; Egyptian and Hindostan, convict ships; Bussorah, emigrant ship, for Bristol; Isabella, for Cape of Good Hope; and Prince George, for Halifax. The double dock in Deptford Dock-yard is repairing by contract, and is to have new gates, &c.

FALMOUTH, March 18.—The Seagull packet, Lieut. Parsons, with mails from the Brazils, arrived this day (being nearly a fortnight before due). She sailed from Rio de Janeiro on 2d January. The last accounts received from the Rio Plata represented it as still blockaded, but with somewhat relaxed rigour, Admiral Le Blanc having permitted the packet Roza to run twice a-week between Monte Video and Buenos Ayres. The Seagull has brought on freight from 12,000*l.* to 13,000*l.*

MALTA, March 2.—Capt. Walker, Commanders Massie and Legard, with Lieut. Foote, R.N., took their passage to Constantinople on board the Acheron steamer, to join the Turkish service.

The Hecate steamer will be undocked at Chatham on 30th inst., where the Kite steamer has returned with Mr. East, Master R.N., and the men that navigated the Hecla to Cicenock.

A splendid bust of Adm. Vernon has been presented by Lord Vernon, and a noble portrait of Adm. Smith, better known by the sobriquet of "Tom of Ten Thousand," has also been recently presented to the Painted Hall of Greenwich Hospital by Adm. Sir George Martin.

Mr. W. Kerr passed examination at the Rl. Naval College on Tuesday se'nnight, for a Naval Instructor and Schoolmaster.

Early on Monday morning, an alarm was given in the dockyard, Woolwich, that the Ganymede convict ship, with about 300 men battened under hatches, had caught fire. The officers of the dockyard were sent for, as well as the Naval Police under Lieut. Pearse, R.N., for assistance, to preserve the poor fellows from being drowned, as the mud and water were fast filling the cabins. The means of egress were only obtained in time to prevent those lodged on the starboard side of the ship from being suffocated, and they emerged drenched to their skin, all their beds being saturated, as the vessel had fallen on her bilge, from part of her moorings having given way, so that as the tide was coming up, and she being in some degree suspended by the larboard side to the wharf, she was in a measure "scuttled," and could not right herself. The men were lodged for the remainder of the night (or rather morning) in the convicts' chapel. In the course of the afternoon the Meteor steam-vessel, Lieut. Pritchard, and Lightning Admiralty steam-yacht, Lieut. Williams, got up their steam to tow the Warrior, 74, to the dockyard side, from her moorings in the river stream, as, in consequence of the oversetting of the Ganymede, the Warrior is to be fitted as a convict hulk.

The insurance offices have awarded 5*l.* to the Royal Naval Police belonging to the dockyard at Woolwich for their exertions, under Lieutenant Pearse, R.N., their director, at the late fire in that town. The money was distributed by the director to the force, as a reward for their exertions during five hours in the wet and cold, and the Captain-Superintendent, Phipps Hornby, C.B., expressed in an "order of the day" his admiration of their conduct, from his personal observance at the time.

On Wednesday morning H.M. armed steamer Meteor, Lieut.-Com. R. D. Pritchard, left Woolwich dockyard, having taken on board the baggage, plate, and part of the suite of the newly-appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. The Commander of this vessel is an old Trafalgar Officer, and served on board Nelson's own ship the Victory, and was severely wounded; it is therefore expected that after this trip he will receive a step of rank, this being the second occasion on which the gallant officer has hoisted the royal standard.

The ceremony of launching a splendid steam-vessel, the Nicholai, took place on Saturday at Deptford. She is 800 tons burthen, and has been built for the Emperor of Russia.

SHIPS OF WAR LYING AT MALTA ON THE 28TH ULT.:—Princess Charlotte (bearing the flag of Admiral the Hon. Sir R. Stopford); Ceylon (bearing the flag of Rear-Adm. Sir J. Louis); Rodney, 92; Asia, 84; Vanguard, 80; Bellerophon, 80; Hastings, 74; Talavera, 74; Talbot, 28; Harlequin, 18; Scorpion, 10; surveying vessel Beacon; cutter Magpie; steamer Confiance; steam-packets Firefly, Volcano, Blazer, Megæra, and Acheron.

Le Toulonnais gives the following:—The ships of the line Hercules (Admiral Lalande's flag-ship), Santi-Petri, and Triton, were anchored at Ourlac on 16th Feb. The Favourite corvette remained at Smyrna, and the Messange escorted the merchantmen in the Archipelago. Admiral Stopford's squadron was to leave Malta shortly, to resume its station at the entrance of the Dardanelles. The Ottoman was taking in provisions to sail as soon as possible for the Mediterranean. The Egyptian fleet was ready to leave Alexandria. The Austrian squadron was dispersed in the Archipelago. Such were the positions of the squadrons according to the latest news that we have received from the Levant.

The British squadron had nearly completed all their repairs, according to the latest advices from Malta. The Queen Dowager intended to leave the island for Naples in the early part of March.

The Inconstant will take out Vice-Admiral Sir Thomas Harvey, K.C.B., appointed to succeed the late Sir Charles Paget on the West India and American station. Capt. John Parker and Thomas Triphook, Esq., are to be the Flag Captain and Secretary to Vice-Adm. Sir Thomas Harvey.

The Powerful still remains short of hands.

Sir Graham Moore will relieve Lord A. Beauclerk on the 1st of May, with Capt. Eden as Flag Captain, and Joseph Edye, Esq., now with Sir P. Durham, as his Secretary.

Barham arrived at Portsmouth on Saturday, just as the Indus went off, and it was not a little singular that she rushed to her native element under the answering salute of the Britannia.

Mr. O'Brien, B.A., of Caius College, Cambridge, is to be First Instructor at the Scientific Institution established at the Naval College.

Letters have been received from the Lynx, dated Sierra Leone, 3d December last. She had just arrived from the Bight of Biafra, where she had captured a fine Portuguese brig, the Liberal, with 593 slaves on board, all in a healthy state. The officers and crew were all in good health and excellent spirits, and were about to return to the Bights immediately, as information had been received that other vessels were taking cargoes of slaves on board.

[From a Correspondent.]—How greatly I lament that they have so wilfully and obstinately cut down the waist of the Warspite, thereby lost ten guns. Is not this madness? Can we afford to give the Americans or French these, with their accompanying complements of men? The approaching contest will decide. I hope favourably for the system of open waists, but I have my doubts; not alone either, for many talented Naval officers deprecate the system. Another thing they have done, I consider, very foolishly, viz., altered the ports on quarter-deck and forecastle from being between those on main deck, and have now placed them over. Now this must be bad in action. Suppose the men on main and upper deck fighting their respective guns at the same time, those on main deck loading or sponging would be seriously affected! added to which, the strain must be much greater with one gun over the other!

[From a Correspondent.]—It has been found altogether impossible to get the Royal Sovereign ready by the 16th of April, as was intended, therefore it is determined to put it off till the end of the month (the 30th), by which time they think she will be ready. There appears a general belief here that the Queen will grace the imposing ceremony with her presence, and that Lord A. Beauclerk will vacate his command earlier than otherwise to attend upon her. The figure for the ship is a half one of the Queen, and very pretty—'tis just begun upon. As the vessel, from her great size, will only clear the top of the shed by three or four inches, it is intended to remove the top altogether, in order to prevent the possibility of any accident, this is highly judicious. The slip on which the Indus was is in a very unsound, bad state, and doubtless the other will be as bad.

[From a Correspondent.]—I was delighted to read the article in your last upon the subject of the "Express and the Falmouth Packets"—nothing could be better. You may depend upon it, that the feeling of indignation is both great and general throughout the country; a more disgraceful and wanton insult was never perpetrated upon a nation's honour. The individual seized being a PILOT, rendered the occurrence infinitely worse—they of all other individuals should (as you justly observe) be sacred; and as for the Lieutenant Commanding, what he was thinking of I cannot imagine: it is quite incredible that any British Officer, much less one said to be a very brave man, should so have acted; had he defended his flag, which he was bound to do to the last, the whole country would have supported him, his promotion would have been certain, and his name honoured in history. Oh, had some of the old English spirit been there! It is utter always complete in complement, in either of the three component forces, by extra men or cutter's men filling up instantly all casual vacancies, whether from leave of absence, sickness, or non-appointment.—The Blockade is always incomplete, not only from these casualties, but from drafts to ships, slow entry, continual discharges, and frequent desertion. The Coast Guard is a sentinel constantly at his post—the Blockade but generally. The Coast Guard forces are sworn servants of the revenue, to which they devote a faithful life of servitude—the Blockade parties not—they are birds of passage, from the sea to the shore,—a temporary skylarking trip out of their element, taking flight * every three years—useless to the Navy during that migration—faithless to the revenue! The Coast Guard cutter's-seaman, or boatman, or riding officer, is selected from ships-of-war or dragoons, from specific recommendations of ability, age, and conduct, from commanding officers—the Blockade seaman is received, if in good health and appearance, but his character, whether good, bad, or indifferent, there is no possibility of ascertaining.

A public servant, according to his trust and responsibility, should be adequately remunerated with wages, salary, or reward, if it is material; he should be honest and faithful. Each man in the Coast Guard is so remunerated—each man in the Blockade not. The boatman of either grade has 4*l*. 4*s*. per mensem wages, and 5*l*. salary per annum—the chief boatman 10*l*. Allowing 10*s*. 6*d*. per week for the value of the Naval provisions issued to the seamen, the common boatmen will still receive 2*l* 2*s*. per mensem, exclusive of salary; whilst the Quartermaster of the Blockade ship (a third rate) has but 2*l*. 3*s*., Captain of top 1*l*. 19*s*., able seaman 1*l*. 14*s*., ordinary 1*l*. 6*s*., landsman 1*l*. 3*s*., per mensem, without salary. When these petty officers and seamen perform duties on the beach, they, in reality, become boatmen; the whole performing the same routine of duty by day and night, viz., beach sentinels or boat's crews, each becomes entitled to equal monthly wages, because each has a station of great responsibility; consequently the power of seriously injuring the revenue, by neglect of duty, or betrayal of trust: yet the landsmen, or ordinary, or able seaman, or Captain of top, as a sentinel is very inadequately paid, compared to the Quartermaster, who has no greater charge than the chief boatman of the Coast Guard; hence the notorious bribery, enormous loss to the revenue, and great desertion, in the Crown's debt, for slops, winter clothing, bedding, and tobacco. If the Treasury raise the pay of the Captain of the top, A. B., Ord., or L. M., to the pay of the Quartermaster, 2*l*. 3*s*. per mensem, the 2000 seamen's pay and provisions would amount to double the expense of the 1000 boatmen discharged from the Coast Guard, and reckoning the officers and crews of the Blockade ships and tenders, at 500 persons; Lieutenants, 160; Medical officers, 40; Pursers and Clerks, 30; mechanics, servants, grooms, and stewards, 300; say 1000; the whole 3000 would treble the expense of the 1000 boatmen, and, after all, from bribery, desertion, sickness, prisoners, short complement, discharges, the line is ineffectually guarded, and the revenue unprotected. When drafts are discharged, or lent to sea-going ships, the whole system is in one day disorganised—the entire coast vulnerable to the incursions of the wily and active smugglers; and, although 2000 men so withdrawn may immediately complete the complements of four sail of the line, yet, the other 1000 persons I have enumerated as necessary appendages to the Blockade, remain behind, at least of equal expense to the 1000 Coast Guard boatmen, without planting a sentinel on the beach to prevent smuggling, or embarking a seaman for the service of the fleet. Sir J. Barrow never thought of all these considerations when, in his supplementary chapter, he lamented the abolition of the Blockade, as a state assassination. "The deed has been done." Yes, and well done, for it was done quickly.—Et encore—the Coast Guard boatmen receive their wages monthly, to discharge their debts, support their wives and families,—the Blockade seamen half-yearly, when regularly in course of payment; et encore—the boatmen, according to their rating, receive 10, 8, or 6 shares of the seizure or salvage, reward, paid in a few weeks, without deductions: the seamen but shillings to the Lieutenants' pounds, and the Captains' hundreds, after many months' delay and various deductions. At one payment Captain M'Culloch received 1,900*l*., the Lieutenants each 19*l*., the seamen each 19 shillings! Hence the temptation to Jack to receive from 3*s*. to 5*s*. a tub, bribery; for Susan, or a pocket pistol "to keep the cold out," on the beach. One half-anker only of strong spirits thus smuggled nightly at each preventive station, from Sheerness to Portsmouth, amounts to more than a quarter of a million sterling per annum, loss to the revenue—a loss never reckoned by Sir John.

"To buy a bunch of blue ribbons,
To tie up her bonny brown hair;"

The worthy secretary regrets the inconsiderable drain of young seamen and ordinaries of good character from the Navy to the Coast Guard, when he should rejoice at the encouragement of that drain of tens annually, which allures hundreds to join ships-of-war, to obtain permanent appointments on shore. The Legislature will not equalise, and raise the petty officers' pay by voting 12,000*l*. The Admiralty has, therefore, no other means of rewarding good conduct, and tempting respectable characters to enter the Navy, than by appointments to the Coast Guard. Soldiers are encouraged by a commission a week, at 5*s*. 3*d*. a day, and frequently a riding officer's situation of 6*s*. 6*d*. per diem for self and horse. Why should seamen be deprived of a snug berth on the sod, at 4*s*. per diem, with a salary to rent a cottage, a garden, parsley-bed, and a'?

A change of a few words in a passage of a distinguished orator will explain my meaning, and demonstrate the fatal consequence to the revenue; the ruinous effect upon the true interest of the Navy, if seamen, able and ordinary, are alternately employed as "go-along-shore men," and crews of ships-of-war. "There is no object," says Grattan, "which a system of impolitic finance" (an ineffectual attempt to prevent smuggling) "will not finally ruin, morality, commerce, manufacture, agriculture, industry, Navy, revenue." But the Chancellor of the Exchequer is too wise a financier to re-establish the ineffective Blockade of 3000 seamen, for the prevention of smuggling between Sheerness and Portsmouth, at treble the expense of 1000 Coast Guard boatmen—an effective force for that duty, for the protection of the peace, of property, droits of Admiralty, and manorial rights. The First Lord of the Admiralty, too experienced in office to trust to the untried character and ability of Blockade half-and-half, amphibious sailors, who exist, but who, either on land or water, are out of their element, to man three or four sail of the line, when his Lordship can, for 70,000*l*., (the saving effected by the abolition of the Blockade) keep, for emergency, a sufficient reserve of chosen seamen in the guard ships, trained to sea-gunnery, ship duties, and discipline, employed, in the interim, with benefit to the state, in dismantling ships paid off, equipping and manning those newly commissioned.

This "demonstration" page is respectfully dedicated, to all whom it may concern, by thy friend, Tristram.

REGIMENTAL RANK OF FULL COLONEL.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—This is the first time of my addressing you on Military affairs; but as now is the chosen time for fully discussing all subjects connected with the Army, I, an old soldier, call upon you to strongly advocate the cause of the officers of the Line, and to bring to the notice of the Navy and Military Commission the necessity which exists, as an act of justice, of placing the officers of the Line on an equality, in point of regimental rank, with the other branches of the Service; for you have no idea how the regimental rank of full Colonel operates to the disadvantage and annoyance of the officers of the Line in most garrisons abroad, and I will give you a very strong instance of it. In the year 1834 the 96th regiment was stationed at Halifax, Nova Scotia, and in consequence of the Governor being obliged to return to England from ill health, the command of the garrison devolved upon Lieut.-Col. Fullarton, the Commanding Officer of that regiment, and who of course received the emoluments of the command. In the garrison was also a Lieut.-Colonel of the Artillery in command of two companies, and in about three months after Colonel Fullarton had assumed the command, this officer of the Artillery obtained the regimental rank of full Colonel, and deprived the other of his command, although Colonel Fullarton was five years his senior, as a Lieut.-Colonel. A few years after [illegible] in a garrison with a Brevet Major of Artillery, [illegible] an old Lieut.-Colonel (caused by the [illegible] Lieut.-Colonel), and so high up, that in two years more he will be a full Colonel—a rank which I shall not succeed to for the next twenty years, if I should live so long; and the evil will be augmented tenfold, if the Brevet promotion should be prolonged, or discontinued.

Every regiment of the Line should have a Colonel-Commandant, a Lieut.-Colonel, and a Major, and this promotion could be given without any additional expense to the country, as the senior Major has now, with his non-effective allowance, 17*s*. per diem, and the Colonel-Commandant would receive, as now, his command money.

The first rank should be made a Line step, similar to promotion in the Company's Army, and given to the oldest officer on full-pay, having the regimental rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant, W. Hulme, Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, 96th regt.

Haydock Lodge, 28th February, 1838.

THE NAVY OF ENGLAND IS THE BULWARK OF THE NATION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Pretty words, though pleasing, are but light payment for past services; the bondsman, however, must lick the hand which feeds him, regardless of the quality or quantity of his food. Such is the Navy of England, and such its recompense: deeds staggering credulity, and beyond the chivalry of man to surpass, marked its career during the longest and most eventful war upon record: yet, so soon as that war was successfully terminated by the annihilation of the several Navies of the numerous nations by whom Great Britain was assailed, the faithful and zealous veterans by whom this was achieved were heartlessly consigned to poverty, obscurity, and contumely, by a people who had grown into excess of wealth through their prowess and devotion. Degraded by want, they were unable to stem the torrent of studied contumely assumed by the superior grades of society, and too proud, from their just claim to rank in society, to mingle with the shopocracy, even tailors, and tradesman of every class, affected likewise to despise them, as a band of idle paupers. The sister service was more fortunate; ever the favourite, it was the resort of the magnates of the land, and fostered by royalty; the Army has ever been the idol of admiration, and, like the heir apparent to hereditary honours, petted and plumed off, and every circle vying in hospitality towards its polished members, whilst the Navy was subjected to the bitter treatment of a discarded step-son, by an envious parent. It is a wilful delusion to assert that Naval officers have themselves to blame for the degradation in which they are held; though probably somewhat rough in exterior, they do not lack refinement in taste, or delicacy in sentiment; they are, with few exceptions, men whose scholastic education has been matured by experience with the world; and their language and demeanour, polished, more or less, by intercourse with society, to which, in their more fortunate days, they had access in foreign lands; their resources for varied observation on men, manners, polity, arts and sciences, (the latter part and parcel of their profession), their customary habit of judging of character, and weighing consequences emanating out of emergencies, and which necessarily induce habits of reflection, fit them for society of a superior caste, and as ambition is the prime excitement among men of honourable calling, would Naval officers wantonly lose caste by debasing themselves through misconduct? No! they are poor, and consequently despised. Is there any one sceptical on this point? If so, and he has a Naval acquaintance among his wealthy compeers, let him turn to him, and convince himself whether that acquaintance has passed through rigidus and foreign lands, without storing his mind with observation; and if his wealthy friend has become enlightened by travel and commixture with the world, it is not because he is wealthy, but because he has, like his brother officers, been endued with the desire to imbibe information. Thus the degradations to which the Navy is subjected, is traceable to those, who, if their prosperity, despise a body of men, because incompetent to make an external display of pageantry similar to their own. I have myself met country magnistrates who conceived themselves vastly condescending when they signed my quarterly bills, some of whom, though transcendently my superiors in fortune, I could not but feel vastly inferior in erudition and general knowledge; but in England the door of friendship is not set open for Naval men, unless they are duly ticketed by wealthy patrons. Peace placed them in poverty, and their orphans and widows reduced to destitution, by a most extraordinary cold-blooded appropriation of funds subscribed by husbands and fathers, whilst professional rewards were given to favourites who never earned them, and the warriors suffered to languish with despondence during a quarter of a century. The bounding heart which was wont to expand at the chance of hazardous enterprise, the animated eye, which brightened at the prospect of war, where, where now is the thrilling emotion of the one, or the sparkling glow of the other? Yet all around breathes of coming strife, and promises a field for enterprise: but the veteran's heart is under a deadly blight; the warrior of by-gone days has felt the chill of neglect, and seen wealth and influence grasp those honours which he had won, but were cruelly denied to him. Think you, because wealth and influence embrace youth and vigour, that success must follow despite of inexperience? Fatal delusion! Neighbouring nations were never deficient in spirit, or in gunnery, but we exceeded them in seamanship, and thus we beat them. Twenty odd years of peace and unceasing practice have rendered them also skilful, and another war will not flourish under the guidance of either wealth or influence, if not backed by thorough knowledge of practical manœuvres. And where can you look? To your discarded warriors? Their zeal must first be re-excited, it is now dormant; and it is in vain that compulsory service be enforced, apathy will attend his every step; remembering the past, he will conclude that any success through his exertions will only tend to advance a more fortunate competitor of influence. Unless, then, the Commission now deliberating, places the Navy on such a basis of respectability as shall rouse the disappointed hopes of the friendless and long neglected, the veteran will not barter his independence and poverty, for fallacious and expensive employment in an ungrateful service, and all the "young blood" of the United Kingdom will not insure that most important event, "a successful result in the first Naval fight," even though flowing in the veins of nobility.

An Old Sailor.

LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR JASPER NICOLLS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—The remarks in your Number of this date regarding Sir Jasper Nicolls, have struck me as most just, in reference to the talents and character of that distinguished officer, and his fitness for the high appointment of Commander-in-Chief in India, from his long and extensive services in that country, his general knowledge of the character, habits, and prejudices of the native armies, and the high respect in which I am, from my own experience, aware that his abilities are held by all ranks in India. I am unacquainted with Sir Jasper Nicolls, and consequently can have no personal prepossessions in his favour, but having served several years in India, I know the estimation in which he is held, I believe, by all ranks in that country. It has been hitherto the practice at home to select officers from those of Her Majesty's Forces for the high command of the Company's Armies, without any apparent reference to their experience in Indian warfare, or discipline, or knowledge of the regulations of that service; and officers of established reputation and high rank have been invariably selected for the very responsible stations of the command of the Armies of the different Presidencies; but, from my own experience I am not prepared to assent to this practice, feeling, as I do, convinced, that officers of Her Majesty's Forces, who have served long and in high commands in India, are the very best description of General Officers that could be selected for the high and important responsibility which attaches to the command of the native troops of either Presidency. Without this previous experience, a Commander-in-Chief is wholly dependent on his Staff for information on all subjects purely local; and, except in matters of general discipline, almost all the regulations of the Indian Armies are of a local description. The habits, prejudices, and feelings of the native troops, which are all in direct contradiction to those of Europe, are alike unknown to an officer who has not served long in India; and this circumstance alone is calculated to beget a distrust in the minds of the native troops, of the competency of any stranger to the high duties which must ever attach to the important station of a Commander-in-Chief of an Army. It may be objected, from his comparatively low rank in the list of Lieutenant-Generals, that a difficulty might be experienced in finding officers junior to Sir Jasper Nicolls, to be appointed to the commands at Madras and Bombay; but a reference to the Army List would at once remove that difficulty, for therein would be found the names of many General Officers who have served many years with credit, in highly responsible commands, in the different Presidencies, who are junior in rank to Sir Jasper Nicolls, who might be appointed, and would willingly accept the commands of the Presidencies.

HER MAJESTY'S ARMY AND THE CO[illegible] ARMY IN INDIA.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—One of 1200 of H.M.'s Officers is in the field again, or rather in imagination wandering to the land of sun, of rupees, and reptiles. If the officers of the Company's Army are, in his opinion, so much better off than those of the service to which he belongs, what a pity it is that he did not make this discovery on receiving his first commission, when he might, perhaps, have exchanged services with some Cadet who, with impaired health, has been obliged to retire on half-pay, or taken the place of one out of many others who have left their bones in the climate of India.

But to the point. Like a boa-constrictor awoke from a state of torpor and lethargy, One of 1200 now appears with an appetite so keen, that I fear the whole hog is going to be swallowed, and will not satisfy him. From a former letter we were told of 4000*l.* being granted to Majors of the Indian Army for their retirement, and now we are informed of a Captain refusing to retire 5000*l.* Throwing the gall and venom of his last letter to the winds, allow me to repeat part of what I stated in your Gazette of 22d of September last, and then hear what One of 1200 says on 9th of Feb. following.

I said:—"It is to be regretted that many glaring misstatements have been published by One of 1200 of Her Majesty's Officers,—amongst others, 'Company's officers amassing very considerable sums of money, and feathering their nests very handsomely' are some of his idle dreams. There were such golden days once; but now where are they? Alas! like the friends of our youth—echo replies—where are they? Gone—for ever gone!

"Majors of the India service receiving 4000*l. for their retirement* appears to be a common occurrence in the opinion of One of 1200. Such an instance is almost impossible ever to take place. Few, very few, have received 3000*l.* to retire as Majors; and, in most cases, the amount rarely exceeds 2000*l.* If the Indian Major receives even 3000*l.*, and brings it home, he may have a wife and family to provide for, and might not wish to sink his money in an annuity. Supposing he gets four per cent. for it, the interest, including his pension for 25 years' service in India, could not exceed 400*l.* per annum. Some few officers, holding Staff appointments in the Company's service, may have saved a little fortune in the course of ten or twelve years, but what proportion do they bear to the Army at large? How many hundr[illegible] from the want of means to live in this country, have ended their days in India? and how many hundreds of Company's officers, with broken constitutions and small pittances, are there now residing in remote parts of Great Britain?"

One of 1200 now says, "I shall very shortly answer your correspondent, One of the H.E.I.C.'s Service, perhaps not much to his satisfaction. Your correspondent accuses me of publishing many glaring mis-statements, &c., but if he will condescend to particular points, I will pledge my utmost credit with the British Army and public that I can refute by proofs all he brings forward against the statements made in these letters. I now send you a list of four Majors, who have each received 40,000 rupees (which I call 4000*l.*) as a bonus, and their full [illegible] from the Honourable Company; of two Majors, [illegible] have received 35,000 rupees bonus to retire from the [illegible]ce; and also the names of three others who have [illegible]d 30,000 rupees as a bonus, &c. These are amply [illegible]ent to prove the correctness of my statements, &c. [illegible], Sir, the Honourable Company's Captains receive constantly 20,000 rupees as a bonus, and one positively refused 50,000 rupees!"

The veracity of the above statements I do not for a moment doubt—nay, I will go further than the writer has done, and allow that there are ten times as many Majors as he has stated who would not for a bonus of 30 000 rupees retire from the service, and for the following reasons:—They are in good health, with the command of their regiments, in expectation of getting it, or probably hold some Staff appointment. An intimate friend of mine demanded, as I have been told, 6000*l.* from the officers of his corps for retiring as a Major—A few instances such as this would make a good show in another letter from One of 1200. But this officer held a good appointment, and it is not to be expected that officers, either Majors or Captains, would retire from promotion and resign an official situation of 500*l.* or 600*l.* a year, whether in the service of Her Majesty or that of the Company, for a bonus of 3000*l.*

I again say, it is almost impossible for an officer in the service of the Honourable Company to receive, or expect, from the corps a bonus of 4000*l.* for the mere regimental step of Major. Not a single instance has come within my personal knowledge of such being the case [illegible]om the side of India in which I have served, and I [illegible]e been well acquainted with the Military service of country for nearly twenty-three years. If any of [illegible]rade have received a sum beyond 3000*l.*, it must [illegible]een for resigning the actual or expected command regiment, or some official appointment. Why more the numerous officers in Her Majesty's Navy and Army, who were so deserving of honours and distinctions, have not been rewarded in the late distribution of orders and titles, I must leave One of 1200 to find out, by inquiring at the Admiralty and Horse Guards, or elsewhere. The reasons that I should give would be as satisfactory to him as the explanation may be for Majors in the Company's service receiving 4000*l.*, or more, for giving up the command of their regiments. I shall here end my explanation with the words of Hudibras—and now I say, farewell.

ARMY AND NAVY RANK.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—A recent writer on Naval affairs has thrown out a suggestion, which, if acted upon, would only be just to the Navy, at the same time that it would do more to remove any latent feeling of jealousy between the "United Services," than any other step that could be taken (and without a costless one), that of assimilating or equalizing the titles of rank in the two services. What objection can there be to doing away with the name of Mate (which is most objectionable) and giving that officer the title of Lieutenant, to rank with his compeer the Lieutenant of the Army? What possible objection to styling the present Lieutenant of the Navy Captain, as well as his equal in the Army? The Commanders' title conveys an equality of rank with Major, and might be continued; whilst the Naval Captain has only that of an officer three grades below him, and might be changed, if not to Commodore, to some other which should convey an equality with his equal. That this would be one of the most popular measures in our service, there can be no doubt, and I feel assured it would remove a feeling which approaches at least to envy of our more favoured brethren of the sister service, which always must exist with the present arrangement.

In 1832 a young friend of mine joined the Army; I have lately seen his name gazetted as Captain in some regiment at Guernsey or Jersey. Now I entered the Navy 20 years before that period, and have been said by the "initiated in deep mysteries" to have had that rank about 17 years: whilst greatly coveting the title, I am really nothing more or l[illegible] than your ob[illegible] a rank. A Lieutenant, R.N.

THE NAVAL SERVICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—A brief statement of the services of officers of different ranks in the Navy and Marines, would enable the Commission to form an opinion on the relative claims of those classes. I therefore forward to you a few observations; and as the cases referred to resemble very strongly the relative positions of hundreds of officers, perhaps they may be of some use at the present moment.

My entry as a volunteer into the Naval Service took place in the revolutionary war; and having served eight years as Midshipman and Mate, and shared in some of the noble actions of that period, I was in 18[illegible]3 promoted to the rank of Lieutenant, and, without being one day on shore, was appointed to a ship, and constantly served until 1814, the conclusion of the war, when, at the strong recommendation of the Captain, with whom I had served many years as a junior Lieutenant, and for the last two years and seven months as First Lieutenant, in a ship of the line, and having also commanded on some successful boat service, I received a Commander's commission. With much regret I now, for the first time since my entry into the service, found myself on shore. Interest to obtain employment I had none; but still I hoped I might get a turn as sloops became vacant. I therefore yearly made my personal appearance before the First Lord, and applied frequently by letter to the Board for employment. I received very courteous replies, and for a few years imagined I should be ultimately successful; at last my patience began to tire, at seeing younger officers pass continually over my head, and I made up my mind to go to town, and see the "ruling Naval Lord," who, in answer to my remonstrances, very coolly informed me, "it was useless my wasting my time and injuring my finances by coming to London, without I could bring some Parliamentary influence forward to support my application." This was, indeed, a clincher; I had not the honour of Parliamentary acquaintance: recommendations from Admirals and Captains I could and did obtain, but they were useless. Finding that all my attempts to obtain a command were unsuccessful, I was advised to try for the Coast-Guard; and thinking it probable that young men of family and Parliamentary influence would hardly condescend to accept employment under the Board of Customs, I was in hopes my services might here assist me. But in that also I was disappointed; another ruling Naval Lord had made his appearance on the stage: he "much regretted that, as I was now above forty-five, I was ineligible" for that 'long-shore employment. I must fairly own that I could not understand the necessity or wisdom of that arrangement. I was in the habit of using the most active exertions—the day was never too long for me; and, as I lived on the coast, my nights were frequently engaged in my boat, fishing, &c. Reflection, however, enabled me to discover the reason of this rule; some of these young gentlemen not liking blue water, it was necessary to reserve some snug quarters for them, and by fixing the age of admission under forty-five, it would keep the old war officers out, and let the "young blood" in. At last a ray of light opened on me; I received a letter from an old friend who was just employed, offering to take me with him as Commander in a ship of the line. I was delighted at the prospect, and immediately prepared for my departure; judge then my bitter disappointment at being informed, that in consequence of having "only served two years and seven months as First Lieutenant of a Post ship," I was not qualified to serve as Commander of the —— ——, the very ship which, in the arduous period of war, I had performed the very same duties which I was now deemed unqualified for. This, Sir, is not only my case, but the case of many. I ask, would the Army be satisfied with such a system? Would not the gallant officers who hold seats in the Legislature interfere to put a stop to such a course? Can the officers of the Navy be satisfied without something is done to destroy such monstrous favouritism?

Since I have heard of the Commission, I have been looking round me to see what has become of my old shipmates. My late gallant Captain, who, like myself, has never served since the peace, is now an old Vice-Admiral; the junior Lieutenant (an Honourable) is a Post-Captain, and has been frequently employed, and made large sums of money by carrying freights, passengers, &c.; two young gentlemen, who entered the Navy in 1813, are also Captains; my old messmate, the Captain of Marines, sold out some years ago, and received 4,500*l.* for his commission; the First Lieutenant of Marines is now a Lieutenant-Colonel at one of the divisions; the Second Lieutenant of Marines has retired on the full-pay of a Captain, 10*s.* 6*d.* per diem—in fact, every Ward-room Officer has had some increase to his half-pay but myself. I remain on the same allowance I had twenty-five years ago. I trust this inequality will not escape the observation of the independent and gallant officers who compose the Commission. The Navy look to them with confidence, feeling well satisfied that whatever they recommend, a generous and grateful country will not deny to those who have fought their battles, and who have held themselves in momentary readiness to again come forward in her defence should their services be required.

nonsense and trash to talk about his being surprised and confused; he had best have shown such from the muzzles of his guns!—(We have not space for the numerous letters that have poured in upon us on this subject; it must therefore be sufficient to say that they are in unison with the above.—Ed. N. & M. C.)

THE LATE SIR ROBERT SPENCER.—With reference to the anecdote given in our Paper of 9th inst., page 157, we have been favoured with the copy of an unpublished letter from the Captain of the Algerine corvette, captured in the early part of 1824 by H.M.S. Naiad, commanded by the late Hon. Sir Robert Cavendish Spencer, K.C.H., and Cameleon, Com. J. R. Burton, in the Bay of Algiers.

"Malta, March 7th, 1824.

"Rais Cader begs to express his grateful acknowledgments to Captain Spencer and the officers of H.M.S. Naiad for the kindness shown him while on board that ship. He also begs to say, that should the chances of war cause any English subject to be placed in similar circumstances, he hopes by his endeavours to alleviate their sufferings, in some measure to repay the favours conferred on him.

"To Capt. Spencer and the Officers of H.M.S. Naiad."

THE NEEDED REFORM IN THE NAVY.—"The British Navy is insufficient for the protection of British commerce; therefore let there be more seamen and more ships." Such is the assertion and the demand of the Tories. Whigs reply, that British commerce has been amply protected, that whenever and wherever ships of war were wanted, they were supplied; and that no loss has been incurred or injury sustained from lack of Naval power. Nevertheless Whigs join with Tories in augmenting the Navy; and larger estimates than have been prepared since the peace in 1815, were voted on Monday by the House of Commons with scarcely a remonstrance from any quarter. That the foreign commerce of the country is safe from attack, and that the outcry about the dangers to which it is exposed is sheer canting, may be inferred from the fact, that not a single instance of injury was cited in the course of the long debates on the state of the Navy in both Houses. An outrage upon a merchantman would have been hailed as a godsend by the Tories; but nothing of the kind could be trumped up. The old case of the Varn was worn out: besides, it could not be pretended that it was occasioned by the want of British ships of war, since the Mediterranean fleet, as Sir Robert Peel himself declares, was larger than necessity called for. We are justified, therefore, in concluding that no increase of the Naval force is required for the protection of commerce. Complaints there have been, that British officers on foreign stations have failed in their duty; that American Captains have been requested to perform services for English merchants which their own countrymen refused or neglected to perform, and that cruises for pleasure, or for profitable freight, have too often tempted our Commanders: but, assuredly, the remedy for these evils is not to be found in putting new ships into commission, or sending out more dandy officers to the Atlantic or Pacific. The recent debates on Naval affairs resemble what in pugilistic slang is termed "a cross," the boxers being the Ministers and Opposition, John Bull the pigeoned spectator, whose purse is to pay both. The time of Parliament was occupied for several nights—many rounds were fought—without more damage to one party than the other; both laughing at the gullibility of the public, whose cash, to the handsome amount of a million and a half, was quietly pocketed by the sham combatants; and thus the sport concluded. But, like losers at other games, the people may soon become sulky and indeed they have cause for unpleasant reflection, while the prospect is not cheerful. Although it is true that their commerce has not suffered by that species of open attack which armed vessels can repel, and from foreign invasion the coasts of England are safe: nobody in reality supposing that France or Russia meditates a war with this country—it has nevertheless been broadly stated, that the Naval affairs of England are badly managed; that the system of manning ships of war is defective; that in return for the millions annually voted, only a scanty supply of materials for building and equipping vessels is exhibited; and that discontent pervades "the service," from the Admiral to the man before the mast. To some of these evils a partial remedy may be applied; but there is not the smallest probability of speedy alteration in the principles of promotion and reward; without which, all the money that Parliament can vote, and the people may be compelled to pay, for putting mere ships in commission, and augmenting the number of seamen, boys, and marines, will avail little towards creating a Navy such as England ought to possess, and with which she might defy "the world in arms." It is indeed sorry consolation to know, that in this respect Whigs are no worse or better than Tories; but that is the result of the Naval debates. Nothing like a pledge was given, nothing like a symptom appeared, that the selfish views of the aristocracy should in future give way to the necessities and advantage of the service. Men with interest and high connexions will continue, as heretofore, to step over the heads of experienced officers, qualified to be their schoolmasters, and whom they ought reverently to obey. In the present condition of the finances, a large increase of expenditure becomes a very serious consideration; but we should regard the amount of the vote for the Naval service of the year as of little comparative moment, if there were any probability, any reason to hope, that a real reform in the Naval Administration is contemplated. We are satisfied that nothing of the kind is thought of by those who, by willing, could do it. There will be some more talking, and the Estimates will be finally voted; after which, jobbing and favouritism will reign as usual at the Board of Admiralty; and there will be much exultation over the increased means of expenditure to which Tories have helped Whigs. To this costly joy there will at last be an end, but not before disgraceful defeats and heavy losses have roused the people to a full sense of the folly, extravagance, injustice, and peril of the system which has converted the Navy into a nest wherein aristocratic and "exclusive" officers may comfortably repose, while men, who understand their profession, can navigate a ship, and "fight her," are laid on the shelf.—Spectator.

THE NORTH AMERICAN AND WEST INDIA COMMAND.—The decease of Sir C. Paget, the late Com.-in-Chief of the N. American and W. India Station, offers an opportunity to the Admiralty to restore that vast and unconnected command (as it ever must be under one Commander-in-Chief,) to the old and efficient system of three separate commands, or distinct stations; it is called for not only on the score of economy, but of utility and benefit for the future carrying on the public service. The late contre-temps with the French Admiral, in the case of the Express, at Vera Cruz, would never have happened, in all probability, if Jamaica had been a distinct command; for no Commander-in-Chief would have allowed so large a French force to have proceeded to the Gulf of Mexico, without feeling it imperative on him to have followed them, to watch their proceedings and guard the British mercantile interest; but in this case the Commander-in-Chief was absent at Quebec, where his presence was also urgently required. We have no hesitation in saying, that if it is to remain one undivided station, it may be as well arranged and managed by the Admiralty Board themselves, as by an Admiral generally stationed at Bermuda and Halifax. On the score of economy, less ships would be required to give the same protection to our commerce and fisheries, as one-third of the ships (since the formation of this vast command) have always been running after the Admiral with despatches or seeking him for orders—many vessels of his squadron do not see him for two or three years, and we have no doubt that the late Commander-in-Chief never saw all the vessels under his orders. Presuming the stations to be divided, give to Barbadoes, one 50-gun frigate, one 28-gun ship, two sloops, one large steamer, two small brigs—to Jamaica, one ship of the line, two 28-gun ships, four sloops, one large steamer, three small brigs or schooners—and for the Halifax and Newfoundland, one fifty-gun frigate, one 26-gun ship, three sloops, two small brigs.

The present force on the West Indian & American Station is—	The Force remodelled should be,—
1 Line-of-battle Ship,	1 Sail of the line,
2 46 gun Frigates,	2 50-gun Frigates,
3 28 gun Frigates,	4 28 gun Frigates,
13 Sloops,	9 Sloops,
2 large Steamers,	2 large Steamers,
6 small Brigs.	7 small Brigs.
27	25 Ships.
Men at present—3,900 Men.	3,870 Men.

The wear and tear of 25 ships, instead of 27, would amply repay the additional expense of two additional Commanders-in Chief, either of the rank of Rear-Admiral or Commodore of the second class. In the above rough division, we have not enumerated the Edinburgh, Hercule, and Pique, as belonging to the station, considering them as only temporarily employed there, nor have we considered the small steamers for the mails, allowing them to remain as before. The Cape station requires equal revision with the North American. The Admiral is absent from the coast ten months in every year, leaving a Commander in a sloop-of-war as senior officer, who has an additional expense thrown on him, while his Commander-in-Chief enjoys his table money to entertain himself quietly at the Cape. The work on the coast has never been done so well as under a separate Commodore.—Hants Tel.

THE LATE MAJOR-GEN. HENRY PHILLOTT, C.B.

THIS respected officer, whose death appeared in our last obituary, was born at Bath, 12th Sept., 1773. He joined the Cadet Company, 27th July, 1787, and was appointed 2d Lieut. Rl. Artillery, 24th April, 1793; promoted to 1st Lieut., 1st Jan., 1794; to Captain, 13th July, 1799; Bt.-Major, 4th June, 1811; Regimental Major, 17th Dec., 1813; Regimental Lieut.-Colonel, 20th December, 1814; Bt.-Colonel, 27th May, 1825; Regimental Colonel, 29th July, 1825; and Major-Gen., 10th June, 1837.

From May, 1793, to May, 1795, the subject of this sketch served in Flanders, and was present at the siege and surrender of Valenciennes. In 1799, he was in the expedition to the Helder, and present at all the actions on the right of the line, under the Duke of York. He next served in Halifax and the West Indies, and was at the capture of Martinique in 1808, under the command of Sir George Beckwith, on which occasion his conduct was favourably noticed in a letter from Sir George Prevost to Sir George Beckwith. From Oct., 1811, to Sept., 1817, he was in North America. In 1814 he was Major Commanding on board the James transport, on passage from New Brunswick to Canada, when that vessel was attacked by a large American privateer, of 14 guns and a hundred men, named the True-Blooded Yankee, which she beat off. His conduct on that occasion was noticed in General Orders. In 1814, he served as Major Commanding Rl. Artillery, at Fort Erie, Upper Canada, under Sir Gordon Drummond, and his conduct was again noticed in General Orders, dated Camp before Fort Erie, Sept. 19th, 1814. He also served in North America from August, 1820, to Sept., 1825: was never on half-pay, and on all occasions volunteered for active service.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

THE MILITIA, YEOMANRY, AND POLICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I cannot but think that those politicians who pray for re-organization of the Militia, prove themselves, by the very act, totally ignorant of the extent to which elements of future commotion have been suffered to lend themselves. Both Whig and Conservative Journals seek to conceal the danger: the first fearing that its existence might be attributed to Ministerial mismanagement; the second wishing to see that Ministry forced irretrievably to commit itself against the mob. However this may be, there is no question that nearly a million of Englishmen have been seduced to believe that overthrow of our institutions would double their wages, and increase their comforts tenfold; that their efforts are fast assuming a combined character; or that the manufacture of pikes rapidly proceeds. To disclose all might be neither safe nor prudent: yet it may, perhaps, be right to say, that our highest military authorities consider the force at their disposal totally inadequate to meet a general outbreak in the North even now; and much more dangerous will be the state of our manufacturing districts, if the discontented gain time to organise, arm, and combine in one focus the control of each district lodge.

If such be the case, and opposite as are their politics, it will not be denied, either by the Standard or the Chronicle, Tait or Blackwood, the Morning Advertiser or the Quarterly Review, the Argus or the Operative, that it would be nothing short of insanity to embody a force, one third of which, at least, and in all probability one-half, must be drawn from men so led away. The male population, liable to ballot, amounts to near three millions. Of these one-third, comprising all the Whigs and nine-tenths of the Tories, are of a class who always serve by substitutes, for a Whig in humble life is about as rare as a moderate Tory; and all such half-taught artisans as think at all of politics, may safely be classed, either as ultra-Tories, or decided Democrats. Now, by all concurrent accounts, the proportion of the latter is at the present time greater than that of Neutrals and Conservatives put together: I say not—I do not think—that it will always so continue. Better means, however, of perpetuating this spirit could scarcely be devised, than calling out the Militia of manufacturing counties. Were they, indeed, to be long embodied, the demon of disaffection would soon be driven away; but an enrolment of twenty-eight days would just suffice to teach the discontented their own power, and to enable the wily and artful to establish an influence for themselves over the unsophisticated and the weak, which, even after dispersion, they would yet retain. Under no circumstances could they be useful. Twenty-eight days' training could not give rustics armed with muskets, however great their zeal, power to repel a rush with pikes: it would give power to the ill-disposed to annoy better disciplined troops from a distance, and would impart to them a false confidence in their own strength. "A little learning is a dangerous thing;" and not less so in war than in any art beside. Had the Irish Militia never existed, the Rebellion of 1798 would have been pacified in less than a week by the Yeomanry alone; but the 20,000 Militia having been drilled, kept 20,000 English troops in observation, to prevent their doing mischief.

On the other hand, I must crave to dissent from the Baron de Berenger's plan of volunteer rifles, as too much for play and too little for earnest. In open ground such a force could do nothing against invaders; nor could it serve well for street fights, nocturnal onslaughts, or the attack of posts, the only circumstances under which they can be called to repress insurgency. Of what use would volunteer rifles have shown themselves in the three days of Paris, or at the Cloitre St. Mery? They might, on the other hand, if seized with any momentary mania, prove highly mischievous. A volunteer force should, in my opinion, be so formed, as to exert the utmost degree of power against insurgents, and with the smallest force against the constituted authorities. With riflemen it would be the reverse. Besides, I could point out means of rendering riflemen totally harmless. Give me the cold steel—even on land, sailors will always settle rifles unsupported by cavalry.

With a volunteer force, armed only with pistols and cutlasses, none of these objections hold good; it cannot be charged with pikes, for the pistols would make vacancies, and the sword is the only arm for a melée. It labours under no temptation to lead in the attack of houses or barricades, like the assailants at Bunker's Hill, Prescott, and St. Denis; above all, they can be held wholly under command, putting out only a necessary degree of force. You cannot do so with fusiliers, for, if they do anything at all, they must fire; and fire is of all things most uncertain—the ball strikes just as severely an innocent spectator as an attacking rebel. Several persons, at a great distance, were struck in 1812, by the Life Guards firing in the air to avoid hurting anybody; and every shot inflicts a wound both dangerous and severe. It is not so with the sabre; the risk of death from the cut of an infantry regulation sword is out of the question. If necessary, on the other hand, the lunge is at once fatal; besides, the sword keeps every one off easily. If you want to disperse without hurting rioters, the flat and back will clear them away much quicker, and hurt them much less, than a policeman's staff. If aided by a strong triangular leathern target, sabreurs may set brickbats and stones at complete, and pistol-shots at comparative, defiance, and let the mob pelt away. The very wearing a sword imparts a chivalrous feeling. Who would not be rather a scimitar-girt Osmanli of the old regime, than a burgomaster-ruled Dutchman or a Yankee democrat? For all irregulars, one good stroke of a sword is worth all the scientific training they can possibly receive. I frankly allow that the Stadium exercises would make that sword-stroke tell with tenfold force.

ARTHUR.

P.S.—I have reason to suspect that attempts are now making, through beer-shops and abandoned women, to seduce the soldiery; and I have heard unpleasant statements respecting their success with one corps at least, but which I will not believe. Some addresses, however, of the most dangerous and inflammatory nature, have fallen into my own hands, and the man who, with unfixed principles, or in a discontented mood, reads them, is, I am sure, lost. I could say more, but refrain. Verbum sat. sapienti. Prepare to guard.

WAR STEAMERS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The Admiralty have, I believe, determined to convert small-class frigates into steamers. The efficiency of a steam-vessel for war purposes will, I think, depend greatly upon the advantages of speed, compactness of hull, light draught of water, and capability of being armed with heavy mortar cannons, adapted to distant ranges. It is presumed that a steam-vessel, possessing the advantages named, can choose a distance suited to her arms; and if she be armed at bow and stern, she will, when engaging an enemy, expose so small a portion of her hull, that I question whether it would be in the power of her opponent to do her any considerable mischief; the bow and stern being also of circular form, a shot impinging in the least degree obliquely would, most probably, glance off; and, to add to the security of the bow and stern, I see no objection to the proposition of facing these portions of the hull with iron; an inch thickness of that material would be equivalent in weight to about seven inches thickness of oak, but would with greater certainty deflect a hostile shot. I should recommend the port at each extremity of the vessel to be just of such dimension as to allow the gun to run out and recoil with any [illegible] tion. I would waive the consideration of an extensive [illegible] of the horizon, as regards the ability of training to the [illegible] of attack; a steamer having always the means of keep[illegible] head or stern way, which, with the aid of the helm, the g[illegible] can be easily and steadily brought to bear.

If it be intended to convert frigates into large and loft[illegible] steamers, and to arm them on their broadsides, I should apprehend that, with the present improved knowledge of gunnery, they would not possess the advantages desired;—they would, in fact, be too much exposed, and be easily hit by skilful gunners. A carronade or two of large calibre upon the broadside would, however, be a desirable appendage to a vessel armed bow and stern; as an opponent, when reduced to a helpless state, might be approached with safety, and be speedily finished by shells or other combustible projectiles. An objection attaches, I think, to a gun pointing at right angles to the broadside; its motion in a vertical direction being much quicker and more irregular than when pointing in a line with the direction of the keel: the practice, therefore, may reasonably be expected to be more accurate in one instance than in the other. Weights at the extremities are, I admit, objectionable; but when the mortar cannons are not in operation, they can be run towards the midship section, to ease the vessel.

AN ADVOCATE FOR PEACE.

EFFECTS OF THE LAST BREVET IN INDIA.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The July mail, received here early in Sept[illegible] brought intelligence of the Brevet, and disappointe[illegible] both services—to the Queen's, because it was so sca[illegible] to be scarcely felt in India—to the Company's, becau[illegible] notice was taken of it. But in the beginning of this mo[illegible] the September mail, having outstripped the August, co[illegible] vinced our brethren that their alarm was groundless.

The ample Brevet in the Company's Army, which has promoted to the rank of Major-General 102 officers, some of whom were, as Lieutenant-Colonels, junior to many at the same time promoted to be Colonels in Her Majesty's Service—and the ample shower of the honours of the Bath, may be supposed to have silenced all complaints. This is far from being the case. I see, by the August numbers of your Paper, that your correspondents complain of grievous omissions of Company's Officers; and here the public prints, in discussing the selections and omissions in that service, have gone so far as to say, that honours, thus indiscriminately given, will cease to be objects of ambition. A looker-on is therefore naturally led to examine the state of the case.

Of the Queen's Army in India, as your correspondent, A British Soldier, observes, seven Officers have been selected to be Companions of the Bath—all of them full Colonels—all of them holding, by virtue of their seniority, the lo[illegible] rank of Major-General; one of them lost an arm and [illegible] of the remaining hand in the Peninsula, received fu[illegible] sundry severe wounds at St. Sebastian, where he c[illegible] manded a battalion, and has since for twenty years, fr[illegible] 1817 to 1837, when he became a Brigadier, uninterrupted commanded the regiment to which he still belongs, in various parts of the world*. The remaining six, though they have suffered less from hard knocks, are old Peninsular Officers, distinguished for hard service in war, and continued subsequent service in all climates,—of Peninsular Captains with rank of Brevet-Major, who were Captains at the temporary conclusion of the war in 1814, and are still serving in that regimental rank (for such there are in India)—of Regimented Majors who have served in the Peninsula or West or East, or in all—let us say nothing; we pass by such small gentry. But even of Lieutenant-Colonels holding the local rank of Colonel, and actually commanding regiments, not one has been noticed. With their respective services I have not particular acquaintance, but I know that one has lost an arm in the field, I know that another was wounded in the Peninsula, and I imagine that all have played their part where blows were going.

We come to the Company's Army—fifty Officers have obtained the honours of the Bath, of whom fourteen are Lieutenant-Colonels, six Majors, and two Captains, with rank of Brevet-Major†. Now, it is not for me to judge of the claims of these gentlemen, nor have I any wish to under-rate them; but I know that some of them are comparatively young men of comparatively little service, and I have good reason to believe that more than one, whatever may be their good will, never enjoyed the opportunity of facing an enemy but once in their lives. I happen to know a Queen's Captain who was employed on the Staff at Bhurtpore, and was honourably mentioned in despatches. This Officer, who had seen previous field-service, has never received any honorary token—probably never will; and, though I cannot pretend to see into another man's brain, I imagine that it never so much as entered into his day-dreams to look for a C.B.-ship. The Company's Captain, however, a younger man and a younger soldier, for the same service in the same appointment, obtains first, four years after the action, a Brevet Majority antedated, whereby he is placed over the heads of all Officers of both services who have gained their Majorities in those four years, and now, for identical action, is made a C.B. But I have pro[illegible] to give up our small gentry; let us admit, either among our Lieutenant-Colonels, Majors, and Brevet-Majors in India, there is not a man of equal claims to any of the twenty-two Company's Lieutenant-Colonels, Majors, and Brevet-Majors selected, or that the authorities have their reasons for bestowing a notice upon the latter, which it is not deemed expedient to extend to the former—take which version you will—yet, Sir, it is surely a little too much for an honest man's digestion, to find these Officers placed upon a par with our senior Generals—to see a Captain of Bengal Cavalry, already rewarded for his single action by a Brevet Majority, gazetted on the very same day to the very same honour which is bestowed on the maimed and veteran General, who had fought in as many sieges and actions as the other had probably numbered years when he put on his Cadet's jacket. Sir, I am not one of the disappointed in my own person, though certainly mortified for my own service. I have no pretensions; nor am I perhaps in a situation, if I had the ability, to take any comprehensive view of Indian politics, or of the merits and capabilities of the Company's Service, but as a soldier possessed of common sense, I can estimate the importance of this great empire, and understand the value of good feeling between the two services, and the expediency of emulation in the common road to distinction. It has been my misfortune to [illegible]ve many years in India, and I can with truth aver, that [illegible]far as my little influence has gone in my own little [illegible], I have always discouraged petty jealousies; have [illegible]ntended against the right of monopoly to Staff ap[illegible]ats, so loudly maintained by Company's Officers; [illegible] felt disposed to grudge them an equal share in the [illegible]ours of the Royal Service. But taking the assertion of your correspondent, A Cadet of Other Days, for granted, that the Company's Army has been neglected in past years†, I would venture, could I reach the ear of those in high places, to ask whether good is likely to be now effected by an invidious departure, in favour of its officers, from the rules which have restricted the distribution of honours to those of Her Majesty's Service? The Queen's Army, I hope and believe, does not require honouring. There may be wisdom in chariness of honours, and I, for one, would rather see them frugally than lavishly given—yet, if frugally, by one rule and with equal hand; but at least, before the Queen's Army is humiliated in the public eye, might it not be worth while to ascertain whether an equivalent amount of gratification will be given to the other services? Now, has this been effected in the present instance? If I may judge by the letters of Company's Officers in your paper, by the papers in this country, and by what I hear individual opinions, I should say assuredly not, by [illegible]son of certain selections and omissions, on which I do pretend to remark, as respects their service. FACT.

* A British Officer writes, and I have no doubt correctly, that this Officer also lost two fore-arm bones in the Peninsula.

CHANGES IN NAVAL APPOINTMENTS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—"Rome was not built in a day." This proverbial saying stands good with the gradual and beneficial reforms taking place quarterly by our excellent Naval Administration, whose patronage will in time be placed on a just principle, in spite of many bigoted and interested men who have hitherto monopolised all our civil appointments to themselves (thanks to the Admiralty and Sir John Barrow, who, I believe (from what I hear), approves of five years' appointments in all classes of Naval officers holding situations under the Crown.

Most of the changes that have yet taken place are only nominally so—mere child's play among themselves, "puss, catch corners;" but what could the Admiralty do with a "first move?" it was only the beginning to an end. It would save their Lordships a deal of trouble (and no mistake) to follow up their very judicious changes, with a proviso something in this way, viz., No appointment to be given to any officer who held a similar post under ten years from the time he was last superseded. This would allow officers of good interest, after filling a five years' appointment, to drop astern and make way for old meritorious officers to bear up for a snug port and good (five) winters' quarters: I hear, from very excellent authority, five years' changes will be general, not only at the Hook and Victualling Yards, but in the Royal Yachts and Hospitals, Coast Guard, Revenue Packets, and Transport Services, including all officers, from the flag down to Tom Pipes, the Boatswain. It is conjectured the Admiralty will appoint two Lieutenants, R.N.,—one as Warden and the other Director of Police, —to Deptford Dock and Victualling Yards, there being a greater police force there than is the case at any one of the other yards where a Lieutenant, R.N., has the command.

ARGO, Captain, R.N.

Parayon, New Kent Road, March 12.

REGIMENTAL RANK OF FULL COLONEL.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In your Paper of the 16th inst., I have read a version of Fiat Justitia, and I beg to say that he is not borne out by facts, which the annexed extract clearly demonstrates.

"Halifax, 27th Feb., 1834.—'The Jan. packet arrived this day. Heard of the promotion of the Lieut.-Col. R. Artillery, which circumstance caused him to supersede the Lieut.-Col. 60th reg. in the command of the garrison.'"

Lieut.-Colonel Fullarton died on 8th March, 1834, and until within a few hours of his death, would discuss any Military occurrence connected with the garrison, or his own regiment. I daily visited this distinguished officer during his very severe illness, and was present when the promotion alluded to was mentioned to him, and I have not forgotten the conversation which followed, therefore he was not ignorant of it. I coincide with you, that invidious comparisons may do injury to all. I shall conclude by observing that a great deal might be written on the subject of Lieut.-Colonels of the Line being dependent upon an uncertain Brevet for the rank of Full Colonel; and if the Lieut.-Col. of Royal Artillery had been so situated, he would not have been a Full Colonel until the 10th January, 1837.

OBSERVER.

EMPLOYMENT OF SEAMEN IN WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The crews of the different vessels here will feel themselves indebted to the liberality of your Paper, by your making public, and passing your opinion upon, the manner in which the seamen belonging to H.M. squadron are treated when they arrive here. The crews of all vessels here have, for some years back, been in the habit of attending (per order from the Capt. Superintendent) almost daily from 9 to 12 A.M., and from 1 to 6 P.M., to assist in all the duties of the Dock-yard, duties totally unconnected with the ships they may belong to. Some time back a request was sent that the customary allowance granted to the officers, seamen, &c., might be granted them (vide Naval Instructions—Extra Pay): it was, for what cause we know not, indignantly refused by a former Capt.-Superintendent, notwithstanding the apparently clear manner in which the Instructions are worded. But let it not be considered that the cause of dissatisfaction is that this is what galls the feelings of men. Upon landing at our daily work we find our companions are the convicts from the Hulks, and in their company are we obliged to work—such is the fact!! These are the causes that in most instances disgust the man-of-war's man: before his time of service on board one ship is expired, he is glad to change for the merchant service. Why, in the name of justice, are men to be so trapped (for by no other name can it be called) into entering for a ship, and immediately after joining, and even when his own ship is in the midst of refitting (instances—Fairy, Mastiff, Boxer, &c., more work,' refitting, in the two former than were they newly commissioned), the man is sent on shore at Hoy-head work, and gets his own ship ready the best way he can—the last fortnight she remains in port? The few seamen who will volunteer are disgusted, by finding too soon that, instead of belonging to their own ship, they are the labourers of the yard and companions of convicts, with the certain knowledge that their Captains cannot redress them, denied the little indulgence of extra pay, and not daring to refuse, full well knowing that whilst under the pennant they must obey. I, as well as all in the service, feel the injustice of such treatment, and although hating the name of sea-lawyer, shall hope to see some of your many Naval friends take our cause up, and fully hope for a speedy insertion of these facts, that we may find our grievances redressed through fear of your Paper, I am, Sir, I hope,

Woolwich, March 18. AN A. B. SEAMAN.

* One of these Officers has obtained his Regimental Majority since the promulgation of the Brevet.

† If this be true, the fault must lie with the Court of Directors: I am persuaded that the soldier's friend, the late Duke of York, of happy memory, would have duly regarded their claims, if properly brought before him, as little as he would now have consented to club together, as above shown, Officers of such immense disparity of service, rank, and age—and thus, too, all in favour of the Army.

MILITARY EXERCISES.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Having, in No. 320, perused, with inexplicable satisfaction, your very perspicacious review, and your powerful advocation, of the claims of British Fishermen (truly a "hardy, bold, and daring body of seafarers") I beg to offer you the cordial thanks of one whose intimate knowledge of their manliness, and conviction of their extraordinary influence in the maintenance of our national dignity (I hope ascendancy, in despite of sappers), enables him deeply to appreciate the importance of this addition to your other judicious efforts; and, thus emboldened, I venture to entreat your energetic perseverance in furtherance of your recommendations, if even you should be obliged to defile their purity, by resorting to pounds-shillings-and-pence appeals, as the only logic "the mercenary meanness inseparable from traders" can comprehend; for, blushing for old England and the truth, I admit that the degeneration, both physical and mental, of her sons is additionally confirmed by the dirty selfishness of their policy. To employ flattery at such a crisis would rivet to it treason, even more inseparably than were the Siamese twins, wherefore your bold but patriotic efforts are as creditable to your judgment as they do honour to a heart imbued with impartial justice, and therefore nobility the most genuine; such as prompts you in page 158,—equally to advocate the claims which Baron de Berenger unquestionably has on this Government. Nor will you censure my becoming his warm eulogist when you learn that, but for him, would have been drowned my only daughter! thanks to him, now the mother of a fine family, and wife of an officer of rank in India; a service by him so little thought of, that even hospitalities, however unfrequent, had to be forced on him. His recent writings, in your pages, in furtherance of warlike superiority, and the improvement of succeeding generations, alone entitle him to high patronage, partially unfolding only, as they do, the almost general acquirements of a very industrious, neglected, but persevering man, who, at his very advanced age even, preserves his romantic fire and daring, laboriously and with determined perseverance to cultivate the most difficult tasks obedient to a generous and enthusiastic sense of duty:—a character understood by a limited few, all cheerfully bearing testimony to his private worth, and to the public utility of his many philanthropic sacrifices. Unindemnified American Loyalist as he is—although not only cruelly ruined thus, but visited addditionally by more injustice, and consequent prejudice, than usually falls to our lot—although as frequently as basely wronged of rewards due to his many services—although offered lucrative appointments and distinctions by countries inimical to us, this martyr to his noble purpose preferred to labour on, in rendering to this country, faithfully, but to his resources destructively, the most important services; as if to confirm his bias of doing good for evil, as the most heroic revenge, and hardly thinking of the humiliation thus inflicted, alike on the authorities and the public, since both, in the continued absence of support, meanly receive what generosity bestows, to himself and his family most ruinously! With all these considerations before us, and conscious that injudicious or designing execution may provoke unmerited rejection, the belief is due to the General Commanding-in-Chief, that his refined sense of justice never will, or can, intend to carry any of the Baron's highly beneficial recommendations, either partially or fully, into effect, that is, to his exclusion as to employ, credit, and reward; all so fairly due to their author, if even he had not brought about such ends, additionally, and at an immense expense, by forming the Stadium into a most suitable institution where to perfect a succession of regimental or other instructors, not only of gymnastics, but of swimming, scientific shooting, bayonet, lance, and other fencing, &c., not to notice his being blessed with a happy facility of imparting knowledge and ambition (if the opinion of all observers and of the press can be relied on), and of securing to himself, by firmness tempered with patience and kindness, besides the affection of a large and fine family, the sincere esteem of his pupils, and the grateful attachment of humble recruits. Leaving his protection to your honourable care, I remain, with great respect, AN OLD H—R—

TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF THE LETTER BY "ONE OF THE PEOPLE," ON STEAM FLOTILLA, &c. (concluded.)

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—"One of the People" continues,—

"But the whole (thirty steamers) might be provided at an expense of less than one million of money, by the conversion of so many of our ships of war which have become useless in their present shape through the augmented dimensions of foreign Navies. Of this kind are most of our 18-pounder frigates, which it may be proposed will never again be employed with guns of that calibre. Such of them as are remarkable for sailing qualities, may be turned to account with an improved armament; but they are at present lying wholly useless in the tiers of the Ordinary, and they have neither acquitting our capacity to promise as much credit in a future war."

"It is no fault of your Lordship if vessels, which now appear to be of so inferior a description, figure upon the List of our Navy. Similar frigates, and even much smaller, did good service down to our instructive contest with the Americans."

"But as in land-warfare many a campaign has been won by a judicious use of the shovel and the axe, without a stroke of the sword, so, in like manner, has a great revolution been produced in sea affairs by the peaceful labours of the constructor and the shipwright."

And by a sailor constructor too, but no shipwright, from the School of Naval Architecture.

From reasons given in page 16, the worthy One observes:—

"Thus it has come to pass, that we have numerous frigates which are now no longer fit for anything but conversion * * * * * *. They offer the cheapest mode of establishing a system of national defence, which, if it shall be approved and adopted, would not be dear at any price."

This short paragraph calls the Admiralty and the Navy to a "Council of War," to deliberate whether the convention of the now useless classes of H.M.'s fleet would not immediately convince the maritime nations that our fortless shores are as sacred from invasion as before steam vessels ploughed the ocean. I am decidedly for conversion. Down with the defective of the forty thieves until thirty or more 50's of all build figure on the Navy List. A flying squadron of these in the East Indies, West Indies, and Gulf of St. Lawrence, attended by a portion of steam frigates (under canvass, except in emergency), could afford nearly all the protection by sea our colonies required, whilst a steam flotilla of war-ships alone would not only protect the United Kingdom, but keep in subjection or limbo the fleet in Cherbourg, Brest, or Cronstadt, and the squadron in Holland or Denmark. We are building steam ships of war,—why not convert useless sailing-frigates into efficient steam frigates, and doubly increase the national force by sea? A frigate now mounting 46 guns (which would again become the easy prey of the American 50), with 36 guns and mortar cannon, when propelled with steam, consequently enabled to take every advantage, choose her time and position in a breeze or calm, would harass a ship of double her force, and certainly defeat a 50. Then convert at once ten of these frigates requiring repair into steam frigates. They may be so converted for the amount of the loss to the Revenue in one year, if the corrupted blockade were re-established, by admitting a half-anker of cognac duty free a night at each station between Sheerness and Portsmouth. This conversion may have a particular effect upon maritime nations. France and Russia might cease to build their three-decked overgrown Leviathans; England also; each nation would prepare to war on the deep by steam and bombs. Yet England, in her own defence, having the greater number of vessels ready, and adapted for conversion, is the first sentinel on her highway, the sea, to challenge "Who comes here?" and with the best iron, the best coal, the best fire, the best oak, and best heart,—the last to cry "Sauve qui peut!"

"In my humble opinion, true economy consists, not in small savings, but in abstaining from useless extravagance. No expense can be deemed excessive which conduces to the national security, and which shall place us in an attitude that has in itself nothing of the character of menace or offence to other countries. But it is of the last moment to us, that no foreign power shall be tempted to believe us unprepared to resist aggression. The only greater calamity would be such a degeneracy of our own public spirit as would lead us to distrust ourselves and our resources in case of need; for that would involve the loss of our reliance on the beneficent Being whose favour has made of this small island the mother and queen of nations."

I need not, nor wish not, to extract more upon this subject from the letter to Lord Minto by "One of the People." The letter itself should be read for its courtesy to Lord Minto, and ability in favour of a steam flotilla as a national defence, and in refutation of the "Flag Officer's" devil-and-doctor-Forster story that frightened all the young children and old women of the parish out of their senses; it is, however, necessary to extract a sentence or two upon other matter, to compare or contradistinguish it from that of other writers. For instance, the destruction of the Russian fleet at Cronstadt:—Capt. G. Smith, R.N., in his pamphlet (a production not without its merits), says in page 7:—

"It appeared to me, while standing on the deck of the Wladimir a Russian 84-gun ship, at Cronstadt, perfectly within our power to KO, not sneak-thieves in the night, as before alluded to, but in open day, that is, as a declared enemy, up the Gulf of Finland, and (to say which I will not here point out) fire the whole of the fleet as they lay in the mole of Cronstadt—beyond which they have no retreat."

"One of the People" is of a contrary opinion, page 29:

"As to attacking Cronstadt, those who [illegible] the place [illegible] literally enclose the fleet at that place within a stone wall, [illegible] nothing but a bombardment can reach them. In the mean time, the Emperor would enjoy the satisfaction of seeing the interruption which we had thus given to our own commerce, and might calculate the expense at which we had for a season interfered with his usual summer recreations."

It strikes me that the Emperor is preparing, not to attack Sheerness or Brighton, nor to sail up the Thames, Humber, or Forth, but to make a bolt North about for the Mediterranean, thence into the Black Sea, where his whole fleet might for a time be "cock of the walk;" but the Admiralty will have fourteen steam frigates off Cape Clear, to pluck this Baltic chanticleer low the English spit. A Russian dunghill, pitted against an English game cock—"What's the odds, ye tars of the war," who gloriously won for England the great stake played for on the main—the dominion of the sea?

DISTINCTIONS FOR SERVICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—It is galling and mortifying to the Subalterns of this and more glorious days, and who have nothing to distinguish them at a review or a levee but their weather-beaten and woe-begone countenances, to observe in almost every other Gazette something like the following announcement.

London Gazette, Tuesday, March.—"Her Majesty has been pleased to grant to A. B. C., an Ensign in the—regiment of foot, and late a Captain in the Spanish service, his permission to accept and wear the Cross of the First Class of the Order of St. Ferdinand, which the Queen Regent of Spain has conferred upon him, in testimony of her approbation of his services in the action before St. Sebastian on the 5th May, 1836."

Upon the accession of Queen Victoria, whose name is associated with the recollection of one of England's proudest achievements, the veteran (Subaltern) of many an ocean fight and battle field, vainly dreamt or hoped that their services would be recognised by some trifling distinction to commemorate the auspicious event, and to make the amende honorable for past neglect. Alas! it was a vain expectation. A shower of decorations certainly did take place at the coronation, but it was a partial shower, and it fell most unaccountably on many persons whose services are yet to be performed to show that they are entitled to them.

I say it with sorrow, that the veteran (Subaltern) of the wars of Wellington and of bygone times has been systematically overlooked through every change of administration. I must, however, partly exempt the Whigs from this reproach, as they seem to decorate their own adherents most liberally from the Bath down to the Crosses of Spain and Portugal, and the Lion and the Sun of Persia; nay, it is even hinted that an African Monstrosity is about to be instituted, or rather perpetrated, under the designation of the "Palm Tree and Alligator." If I had it in my power, Mr. Editor, I should add the Gallows, as a suitable decoration for all those gentlemen who are thus endeavouring clandestinely to depreciate and bring into disrepute the regular Naval and Military establishments of the country.

A ST. SEBASTIAN VETERAN OF THE OLDEN TIME.

MILITARY EXERCISES.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Dulci et utile.

SIR,—I was delighted to read in one of your recent Journals that it is the intention of the Commander-in-Chief to institute a system of gymnastics and other amusing and athletic exercises* for the troops in home quarters. This is a desideratum which I have long wished realised; since soldiers (like other young men) require recreation after study. Let me hope that this plan will be promptly carried into effect, and extended to every branch of the Military profession; and that adjacent commons, fields, lines, glacis, or whatever other Government ground in the vicinity best adapted, will thus frequently become the scene of JOVIALNESS and HEALTH; convinced, as I am, that when the mind is thus cheerfully relaxed, "drill" loses its sameness, and vicious thoughts cannot insidiously intrude. For, as all know the monotony of garrison routine, so all are aware that "after-hours of idleness" become, alas! too oft the "soldier's bane." During the winter season, moreover, I would strongly advocate a more equal division of the day, by making half-past one the dinner-hour instead of twelve, and establishing "an evening meal," at five o'clock, of coffee, or bread and cheese, at the option of the men of the room; each man, under the direction of a Serjeant, taking his turn to purchase and prepare it. This would domesticate them, and tend very materially to reduce the nightly list of absentees; for many (especially in unfavourable weather, and "for guard to-morrow") would feel careless about going out of barracks after that time: thus by its consequent decrease of entries in the "[illegible]" [illegible] quent, and a general moral improvement the evident result.

Woolwich, 12th March. FIAT.

A Gentleman.—In one of the bail cases that came before the Insolvent Court on Thursday, a person was described as a "gentleman" who held a situation of clerk to a Navy Agent. Mr. Commissioner Law said the description of "gentleman" not do. It was oftentimes assumed by persons who were not entitled to the appellation. He refused the bail.

* "Cricket, trap-ball, golf, foot-ball, and leap-frog; quoits, wrestling, fives, nine-holes, and vaulting;" and in the immediate vicinage of rivers, coasts, or lakes, rowing-matches may be encouraged. A piece of garden-ground too, might, with advantage, be added to every barrack as an additum amusement to those whose tastes have a bias for that equally pleasing as healthy exercise.

"A Subscriber," who dates his letter from Leadenhall-street, should have given his name; we might then have correctly estimated the value of his opinion on a question where we widely differ.—Our best thanks are tendered for the letter of "An Old Field Officer," on "Military Punishments and Regimental Discipline." We shall avail ourselves of the same.—The papers by Sir W. H., on the Naval Ascendancy of Britain, will appear as soon as we have disposed of some Naval articles in hand.—"An Old Colonist" shall have attention.

A contemporary last week has very justly drawn attention to the conduct of Mr Scott, the Secretary to the Committee on the Nelson Memorial, in withholding from his paper advertisements connected with the testimonial, because the Editor has considered him inefficient in his duties. We seldom notice such matters, though we have equal reason to animadvert on the silly proceeding of Mr. Scott in withholding the advertisements from the N. and M. Gazette, a paper enjoying a larger circulation than any strictly professional paper in this country ever attained. To be sure we have expressed our opinions very freely on the incompetency of the Secretary, and we had a right to do so. As our files will prove, and as Naval Officers are well aware, we were the first to advocate a testimonial to the immortal Nelson, and we continued such advocacy, quarter after quarter, during five years, and until a Committee was formed. We have regretted that the management was not entrusted to some Naval Officer, by whose activity the object would have been promoted. The state of the subscription, which is at this moment 14,000l. less than the amount required, sufficiently proves our strictures to have been just. However, we cannot lend ourselves, like several of our contemporaries, to bestow unmerited praise either on individuals or things; and occasionally this conduct deprives us of advertisements. As another case in point we will instance the publication on the Indian Army by Messrs. Dodwell and Miles. On examining a few pages of that work when it first appeared, we found them so full of error, that we explained to the compilers that it was utterly impossible for us to misrepresent the matter to the service, and that, in good feeling to them, we should avoid reviewing the book. The consequence is, the advertisement being withheld from the N. and M. Gazette whilst it is freely given to other papers, some without the slightest influence, but in which the publication has been absurdly puffed. Officers of the Company's Army might very justly have taken offence had the N. and M. Gazette (with the information we are well known to possess of Indian Services) pursued a different course. The position of our paper and also of our contemporary is such, that, by proper arrangements, both may command the best advertisements with the highest prices.

We have met the wishes of several friends in obtaining a correct list of the young gentlemen of the Rl. Artillery and Rl. Engineers as they stand for their Commissions. The Master-General did not attend the examinations on Monday, being, we regret to say, too ill to go down to Woolwich.

We shall be glad to receive a full and authentic account of the trials between Rover and Modeste. A letter from one of the officers of the squadron mentions the great superiority shown by Vestal over all.

The Naval and Military Distributions will be given in our next.

Naval and Military Gazette.

In spite of all the statements and attempts to demonstrate, that the invasion of India by a Russian army is impracticable—in spite of much paradoxical and conceited trash on this subject written by men who hold themselves to be the greatest tacticians of the day—who would strive to persuade us that Bonaparte was an ignoramus in war, and that military genius alone existed in themselves—that a musket is only a toasting fork with a moveable prong—that cavalry should always break infantry—and twenty other like assertions, which they perhaps believe but all the rest of the world deny—in spite, we repeat, of all these statements and assertions, put forth as proofs, we cannot, do as we may, find out the vast difficulties which Russia is to encounter, should she invade India. It is quite another question to reason about the policy of the attempt on the part of Russia, or on what advantages the Native Princes of India could derive by a change of Ruler from the English Lion to the Russian Bear. The practicability or impracticability of invasion is the question. If we look back to history, we find that Alexander, having subdued Persia, penetrated to the Indus, without having experienced any great difficulties as to traversing the intervening countries, except from the cold in crossing the Paropamisus, which we think is the Caudahar range of mountains. He marched through Bokhara and Cabul—and this said cold, we opine, would not prove very formidable to a Russian! As to provisions, the countries are now much what they were then—perhaps better—and we cannot see that a Russian requires more than a Macedonian. The one drank wine, the other drinks spirits—the one used oil externally, the other takes it internally! To the one a cosmetic, to the other aliment. Oh! but the baggage!—We read, also, that the baggage of Alexander was great, and he had not the Oxus-navigation to aid him as Russia has now.—But the base of operations!—Why, to our simple minds, the difference of the base of operations seems to be this. Alexander had Persia in possession, and he was necessitated of course to menace or to check the Scythians, or Usbecs, who were on his left flank. Now the Russians have Russia itself and the Caspian Sea for their base, and as for the Scythians, they are either themselves or their allies! They have already menaced, awed, and beaten the Persians, who are on their right flank, either into neutrality or active friendship. Where, then, we ask, is the greater difficulty for the Russians? None. But Nicholas is not Alexander! True. The attempt to invade, however, depends on one man, and the occasion is fair, the attempt feasible, when that one man, equal to the occasion, occupies the throne of Russia. Can we safely pronounce that the Emperor Nicholas is not equal to the attempt? Can we say confidently that our rule is endeared to the Native Princes of India—that our allies are all staunch—and that the Chief of Lahore is a true friend? Can we bring into line 100,000 men, and also secure our rear and the internal peace of India? Yet to fight, with success, for the sovereignty of India on the banks of the Indus, or in an advanced position, we can hardly hope, without we can bring into line 40,000 Englishmen.—The Sipahees have yet to be proved before Russians. We dare not leave the chance of defeat or revolt, on the confines of India, in the hands of mercenaries, whose country we only hold by the right of conquest, and whose fidelity is alone maintained by better pay than their own princes give, and the undisputed superiority of European arms. Has not the Duke of Wellington, long ago and lately, pressed on Ministers a very large increase of Her Majesty's Army in India? We pause for a reply.

We have prepared, with great care, a series of Tables, which fully illustrate the present state of the United Service.

The cases of greatest individual hardship, as we stated some time back, occur in the Line; but viewing the different branches of the Service separately, these returns show that the Royal Marines are immeasurably the greatest sufferers.

If the Military Commission will do us the favour of closely examining the annexed Tables, we cannot doubt but that they will come to the conclusion we long since have done, viz. that nothing short of a well-digested and unlimited full-pay retirement will meet the wants of the Service, or properly reward the greatest claimants on the gratitude of the nation—the Navy and the Army.

INSTRUCTIONS have been issued from the Coast Guard Office to suspend the half-yearly demands until further orders, it being in contemplation to alter the mode of demanding stores. We think that from this we may augur a remodelling of the service. Should, as we have continually recommended, the Admiralty take the Coast Guard under its civil jurisdiction (like the Semaphores and Dockyard Police), both the country and the Royal Navy would benefit. This is, in fact, what we believe the Earl of Minto meant when, in the House of Lords, he said that "something neutral between the Blockade and Coast Guard was under consideration by the Government;" and if so, all men, who henceforth enter, could be made available for the Navy.

We had scarcely penned the above, when we received the following:

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Thanks to Lord Minto, the country is fast recovering from its recent alarm. Maiden ladies can now enjoy their tea and cards, without much fear of being whisked off to a Turkish harem, or annoyed by the caresses of a Muscovite admirer ere morning's dawn; and I take advantage of our present security to offer a few remarks upon the wild scheme of re-establishing the Coast Blockade as a reserve for the British Navy.

No doubt the advocates of such a plan have a desire to benefit their country; but I cannot believe that they have considered the subject in all its bearings. After all, what is the surest way of getting a sufficient number of good seamen for our men-of-war? Make the service popular; let Naval officers and men secure the good-will of the coasting trade and fishermen. Can this object be attained by bringing them constantly into collision? Certainly not, and I am borne out in this opinion by the fact of the existence of the most bitter hatred of the Naval service on the coasts of Kent and Sussex, prior to the establishment of the Coast Guard. This feeling was not confined to the lower classes; persons of a higher grade made common cause with them, and looked upon Naval officers as little less than monsters. I fully agree with your talented correspondent Tristram as to the injury such a force would inflict upon the revenue. Can any return be obtained of the number of men belonging to the Severn, Hyperion, or Ramillies, who deserted whilst actually on duty; of those punished for bribery; and of the quantity of arms thrown into ditches, &c., by deserters? Is it not a fact that a whole watch has deserted in one night, and that they were provided with carts by the smugglers to take them to London?

But to the main point—were they seamen? In 1829 I was serving in a line-of-battle ship, suddenly ordered to sea on particular service. We were supplied with one hundred men from the Coast Blockade, about one hundred from the Perseus, and one hundred Marine Artillery. Working down channel in a stormy winter night, the ship was taken aback, and the fore-topsail sheets carried away: the topmen were sent aloft to hand the sail, and scarcely a man would venture on the topsail-yard: when their services were most wanted, it turned out that they were not seamen. The Marine Artillery then volunteered to go aloft, but our worthy Captain would not allow them without their officer's consent; that permission was immediately given, and many of them mounted the rigging; some of the blue jackets joined them, and the sail was soon handed.

I may be accused of a desire to lower the character of our sailors. I deny any such intention. I know their great value; but experience has taught me that it is not every man who puts on a blue jacket that deserves the name.

The duty of the Coast Guard is very severe in the winter months, and none but men of most sober and regular habits can stand it. A cool head is of far greater value in this service, than the dare-devil spirit of the man-of-war's man. Besides, in the performance of their difficult and delicate duty, the detected smuggler can never vent his spleen, and create a prejudice against the Royal Navy.

I would recommend that the Coast Guard be kept upon its present well-organized footing, and that every station be supplied with the means of acquiring a perfect knowledge of the gun exercise, to make them available for manning the forts, batteries, or gun-boats along the coast, in case of our being attacked. The Royal Artillery might then be employed with field-pieces or mortars where their services are most required. This plan would give the country a Coast Guard in the fullest sense; and by mixing these men with the defenders of our land, you would go far towards removing the prejudice now existing against them. It is quite a mistake to suppose that all Coast Guard men are sailors—not one in four was ever at sea. SARNIA.

THE following Return of all the Flag Officers who have been placed upon Full Pay since the year 1815, with the period during which they have been so employed, and on what service, has been just issued by the Admiralty. The Document will be valuable to those Naval Officers who bind this Paper, as a record for reference. The first date is that when ordered to hoist flag, and the second shows when it was struck.

Admiralty, Feb. 20, 1839. H. F. AMEDROZ, Chief Clerk.

EVERY question affecting the interests of the Army or Navy we endeavour to treat with the strictest independence and impartiality: we have never, in conducting this journal, allowed political feeling to bias our judgment, and personalities have always been avoided. In discussing, therefore, the professional claims of individuals we frequently have to sacrifice private feeling to our public duty, and such was the case when, on the 9th instant, we felt ourselves compelled to notice the recent promotion of Major Hankey to an unattached Lieutenant-Colonelcy without purchase. Last week a contemporary followed up our comments, concluding with the following opinion on the Military Commission now sitting:—

"If the appeal proceed from a body, they are coolly referred to the decision of the Naval and Military Commission now sitting; whilst, as if to proclaim to the world that the deliberations of that Commission are little more than a solemn farce, gotten up for the purpose of diverting the attention of members of the United Services from the grievances under which they labour, acts of the most flagitious injustice are perpetrated from day to day under its nose, by the very men, in their respective official capacities, of whom it is composed. What ground has either Service for anticipating justice at the hands of a Camarilla, who, with a few honourable exceptions, constituting, however, but a very small minority, have met to report upon the injustice and venality of their own conduct!"

In our remarks we stated, that this promotion was forced upon Lord Hill. Some of the distinguished individuals who compose the Commission are most highly respected by the country; and, indeed, we cannot admit that the "honourable exceptions" are "few." In proof we refer to the annexed copy of the Commission, which has just been presented to the House of Commons on the motion of Sir Edward Codrington. We will first, however, dispose of the case under review.

Towards Lieutenant-Colonel Hankey we entertain the highest respect, and, were we permitted, could record a private act of liberality for a professional object, with which we have long been acquainted, that would gain him the regard of every soldier who takes pride in the glories of his country. This circumstance, however, though impressed on our memory, could not affect our duty as public journalists. We looked only to the injury done to the service, in so much that the Commander-in-Chief should not have been forced to bestow "a good thing" in his gift on so young an officer, though an excellent man. The facts we shall briefly state, as even military men can scarcely unravel them, from the mode in which such promotions and exchanges appear in the Gazette.

Colonel Edward Wildman, 6th Dragoon Guards, exchanges to half-pay with Bt.-Colonel T. H. H. Davies, who sells out; and Major and Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel Jackson purchases the Lieutenant-Colonelcy; but, in consequence of there having been two Majors in the 6th Dragoon Guards, the further promotion, by purchase, is carried to the 8th Hussars,—where a vacancy was created by Major Hankey having been allowed to go on half-pay as a Lieutenant-Colonel, without purchase. By this means another cavalry Major is disposed of, the 6th Dragoon Guards having now one Major instead of two.

We will put another case, the reverse of the above. Captain Jarvis, of the 70th regiment, died in November last; but as the Senior Lieutenant had been only twelve years in the Service, the vacant company was given out of the regiment to Lieutenant (now Captain) Lillie, of the 58th reg.

We feel great satisfaction in announcing the publication of Captain Tulloch's Statistical Reports on the sickness, mortality, and invaliding, among the troops in the United Kingdom, the Mediterranean, and British America. We noticed at great length the previous Report of this distinguished writer on the West Indies, and we propose, in a similar manner, to lay before our readers the principal facts and results contained in the three Reports, now printed by command of Her Majesty and laid before Parliament. We have never perused any Reports which have given more clear, candid, and accurate statements; and the results deduced are in all cases fully borne out by the facts. The Army, and the public generally, owe a deep debt of gratitude to the noble Secretary at War, who has encouraged and assisted these statistic inquiries, and made such a judicious selection in the able author of the Reports.

Captain Tulloch in his introduction states the reason which has influenced him to combine these Reports in one volume,—that as they serve to illustrate the influence of climates, of which the diseases are in many respects similar, "the reference for comparison may be facilitated." To form a better estimate of the influence of various climates on the troops abroad, Captain Tulloch first proceeds to ascertain the degree of sickness and mortality to which they are liable at home. To obtain this object, many difficulties exist. The Infantry Regiments of the Line do not serve more than four years at home after returning from abroad, and mortality in them must be much influenced by the diseases contracted in foreign stations. The inquiry has, therefore, been limited to the regiments of Cavalry which have not served abroad, and to the Foot Guards. The Report is, on account of some striking disproportions in sickness and mortality among the Household Cavalry and Infantry, divided into several heads:—1st, as respects the Dragoon Guards and Dragoons; 2d, the Foot Guards; 3d, the Life Guards and Blues, to which are appended some details regarding the diseases and mortality among the depots of the regiments of the Line serving in the West Indies.

Dragoon Guards and Dragoons.—The Report states the number of men, on an average, from 1830 to 1836 (seven years and a quarter), of the Dragoon Guards and Dragoons to have been 6166; admissions to hospital, 5725; and the deaths, 87: i. e., per 1000 mean strength;—929 admitted, and 14 died. To these, caused by disease, should be added, deaths from suicide, 35; by murder, 4; by drowning, 11; and by various accidents, 6: total, 59. The total mortality from all causes will, therefore, be 15 3-10ths per 1000 annually. This mortality in our troops continuously at home is more than in the Prussian Army, which is 11 7-10ths per 1000 annually. This is probably caused, not by better climate or greater longevity in Prussia, but from the Prussian Army being composed of young men, from twenty to twenty-five, while the English force is much above that age—between twenty-nine and thirty—and subject to the consequent decrement of life. In the French Army the mortality is 19 5-10ths per 1000 annually; but this probably includes the deaths in corps serving in the French colonies, and does not afford a correct comparison like that of the Prussian Army. If we compare the number of our home troops deceasing (taking the average of the men at 29 6-12ths) with equal numbers in civil life, we find as follows:—Deaths in civil life, between twenty-nine and thirty years of age, according to the Carlisle Tables, are 10 per 1000—according to Finlayson, 13 per 1000. Now the mean in civil life seems to give us 11·5 per 1000. Comparing these rates, we find that the proportion of deaths among our "always-at-home troops" is one-third higher than among civilians of the same age, and yet the soldiers are selected for robust frames and vigorous constitutions. At first we would be led to infer that the profession of a soldier is per se prejudicial to health, even under the most favourable circumstances—home duty. But a closer examination, and a knowledge that the mortality in towns is greater than in rural districts, among equal numbers of the same age, lead us to make a comparison of Military mortality with that of towns in which the troops are generally quartered, and where density of population operates against health. Taking the age of the troops at thirty, the deaths are 15 3-10ths per 1000; and taking civilians in towns, even between twenty and thirty, the deaths among them are 16 per 1000. Thus we arrive at data which justify us in concluding that the apparently high ratio of mortality among the home troops, as compared with civilians generally, does not arise from any injurious influence exercised on their health by the duties of their profession; but from the insalubrity of the densely-populated towns in which they are quartered. The vast number of admissions to hospital among the Military is also accounted for by the fact, that every ailment of the soldier is an hospital case, but not so in civil life. Hence we see at once the cause of the apparent greater sickliness among the Military than the Civil population.

This Report very clearly shows by Tables that there is no class of diseases but those of the lungs, from which the troops suffer in a greater degree than the classes whose lives are ensured at the public offices, and therefore select lives. The large proportion of suicides among the Dragoons is remarkable; but may be fairly attributed to the number of men who, by dissipation or extravagance, have reduced themselves from a higher station in life to the necessity of enlisting—this class chiefly enlist in the Dragoons—and on whom reverses of fortune operate towards self-destruction.

Next week we shall take up the second head of this interesting Report, and examine the mortality and sickness of the Foot Guards.

We cordially respond to the following appeal, recommending a Benefit Fund for the Widows and Orphans of the Army. A measure of this kind was brought forward during the late war by a gallant Field Officer, now no more, and ourselves;—it received the warm support of the illustrious father of our gracious Queen, of several of his royal brothers, of numerous General Officers, and of regiments; but after we had sustained considerable expense, its progress was arrested by the Duke of York, who at first was induced to give it support, because the then Chancellor of Exchequer, Mr. Perceval, declared that the funds which (under calculations approved by that distinguished actuary, Mr. Morgan) must have come into the hands of the Institution in the course of a short time, "would have rendered the Army too independent of the State." At the period to which we refer, the United Service Clubs were not in existence, and now probably the times are more liberal; at all events, we shall gladly afford an undertaking of this kind any support in our power. All the documents relating to the former endeavour are in our possession.

We have been already authorised by one Commanding Officer to affix his name to any Petition, Memorial, &c.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I permit myself the honour of drawing your attention to a letter from a Retired Officer, which appeared in the United Service Gazette of the 9th instant, on the subject of establishing a fund for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the Army.

I cannot err in allowing myself to hope that the cause of the widow and orphan—a cause hallowed and sacred—will receive your best consideration, and that your just and powerful influence, as a leading Military Journal, will be zealously used in strongly recommending it to the British Army. I fearlessly say, that it is a just reproach to the Army, that, with an income of nearly two millions, it is content to leave its widows and orphans—its nearest and dearest ties,—some to the tender mercies of a cold, unpitying world; others as a legacy upon the bounty of the country, and that very bounty drawn from the hard earnings of the people. I turn to its splendid establishments—its sumptuous clubs—its Eastern luxuries—monuments of everything but a generous feeling. I see these luxuries; but I see not a sigh or a crumb bestowed upon the widow and orphan of their brave but less fortunate companion in arms. I see the Army content to leave Nature's dearest and sweetest ties to eat the bitter bread of misery, and drink the cup of misery to its last and veriest dregs. Amidst all the luxuries and splendour with which you surround yourselves, I ask you, ye chiefs of the British Army—I emphatically ask you—can you hear unmoved the touching appeal of the widows and orphans of those brave men who have gloriously fallen leading you to victory, and to honours and rewards? I ask you, ye officers of the British Army, can you hear the sighs of the widows and orphans of your former companions in arms, and yet not feel a deep and bitter self-reproach? Lives there in the British Army a heart which cannot feel for suffering humanity? I leave the Army to answer for itself.

The hallowed cause of its destitute widows and helpless orphans is now before the Army. It is a cause of deep and vital interest—deeply involving the honour and character of every officer, chief and subaltern, of the British Army. It powerfully and forcibly addresses itself to all the better feelings of the heart.

In taking the liberty of addressing myself to you, and soliciting the insertion of this letter in the Naval and Military Gazette, I feel that I am only doing that which must be acceptable to every friend of the British Army.

London, March 19, 1839. HUMANITAS.

We have been much gratified by the perusal of a pamphlet, by Major-General Sir Charles Napier, on the state of Ireland, intended to introduce to general notice a work by Captain John Kennedy, entitled "Instruct, Employ—Don't hang them,"—a name which (although we should have imagined it taking from its singularity) seems to have been an unfortunate one*. Our limits will not permit us to enlarge upon his plan, herein briefly explained, which has triumphantly endured the test of experience on his own and some adjacent estates. Suffice it to say, that men of all parties may act upon it, as they will find nothing in it to interfere with their political tenets, unless, indeed, there be a party to whom the happiness of their fellow-creatures is gall and wormwood. They will find proofs how, by a judicious colonisation of the immense tracts of waste land in Ireland, the pretended necessity for compulsory emigration may be removed; and we would hope (for here we differ from Sir Charles Napier) the inclination for voluntary relinquishment of their native land may be rendered infrequent amongst its hardy natives. Why should we lose the boldest and most enterprising from either of our British isles? We have here, too, a plan of national education, not flimsy, chimerical, and unnatural, like those of some of the political quacks of the day, but rational and practical,—one calculated to promote sound agricultural knowledge, and so far resembling that which Fellenberg has rendered so celebrated in Switzerland. Its author need not desire a voucher more deserving of trust than Sir Charles Napier, who has personally witnessed the effects of the scheme which he advocates, and whose style in this, as in his other writings, is distinguished by much liveliness, with a clearness of expression which renders it difficult for any one (unless wilfully) to misunderstand him. In this respect he bears some resemblance to Cobbett, to whom (as a writer) no man need blush to be compared.

It is to such men as the Kennedys, the Napiers, and others, of active and enduring benevolence, that Ireland must look for regeneration, and not to self-seeking and cold-hearted agitators. Sir Charles Napier rightly says, that "the wish to pour balm into the wounds of Ireland is universal in English breasts." We can ourselves, indeed, recollect when a strong prejudice against Irishmen was very common in England, particularly amongst the humbler classes, but it appears to be gradually wearing away. Although we have lately exposed the falsehood and folly of some who would arrogate for the sister isle the claim of having won all our trophies by land† and sea during the late wars, we have never been backward in doing justice to the gallantry with which her sons, of all ranks, have done their work in battle, and to their many estimable qualities in peace; and it is with the utmost sincerity that we recommend all who have estates in Ireland to read first this pamphlet, and then the work which it illustrates, and if (as there can be little doubt they will) they find its precepts wise and salutary, to put them into earnest and immediate practice.

The Court.

Her Majesty held a court at Buckingham Palace on Thursday afternoon, for the reception of an address against the extension of the Metropolitan Police to the City. The Lord Mayor arrived in state, accompanied by many of the Aldermen and City Officers, and also by 194 members of the court of Common Council. Her Majesty received the address on the throne, and returned the following answer:—"The peace and security of the inhabitants of my capital require my care, and the attention of my Government. With these objects in view I have directed measures to be submitted to Parliament, which will, I have no doubt, receive their deliberate consideration. I fully rely on their zeal for the welfare of my people, and their regard for the rights and privileges of all my subjects."

On Tuesday evening the Queen honoured the Italian Opera House with her presence.

The Queen held a Court yesterday afternoon, at which the Hon. J. D. Bligh, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of Hanover, had an audience to take leave on returning to his mission.

A suggestion has been submitted to Lord Melbourne, which, if acted upon, will render the Ladies of the Knights of the Garter, St. Patrick, Thistle, St. Michael, and St. George, the Military Order of the Bath, &c. &c., eligible to wear the decorations which specially denote the distinction that has been graciously conferred by her Majesty, and her Majesty's Royal Predecessors on their noble and gallant husbands. A similar Order exists in Spain, created in the year 1792, designated the Order of "Dames Nobles."

Her Majesty's Government and that of the King of the French are at present engaged in arranging the terms of a convention, which has for its object the more speedy transmission, through France, of despatches from India for the British Government.‡ When this convention shall have been concluded, there will no longer exist that individual monopoly which is now so just a matter of complaint.

Instead of a monthly communication, as formerly, steamers will now be despatched on the 1st and 15th of each month.

Insolvent Government Clerks.—It was stated in the Insolvent Court this week, that Sir Robert Peel, while in office, had ordered every government clerk, who took the benefit of the Act, to be discharged from his situation forthwith. This determination had, it is said, been productive of much benefit.

It appears from a Parliamentary paper that 4,600,000 less persons travelled by stage coaches in 1838 than 1836; and 14,400,000 more persons by railway in the same period.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

TUESDAY, March 19.—The Earl of ABERDEEN said, that he was prepared to wait for the papers regarding Persia, and therefore would make no observations in reference to our relations with that power; but that he must apply for papers regarding the warlike proceedings at Afghanistan, and of the Governor-General's declaration, &c., and at the same time condemn the conduct of the Government, as far as he understood it.—Lord MELBOURNE complained of the condemnatory language of the noble Earl in the present state of affairs in the East.—The Earl of ABERDEEN claimed the right to comment on the Governor-General's declaration, it having been laid on their table.—The motion was supported by the Duke of Wellington, Lords Ellenborough and Brougham.—The Earl of RIPON wished to know whether Sir Henry Bethune, who was a Major-General in the army of the Schah of Persia (but not in our service), and who had been sent out from this country while we were friendly with the Schah, to assist him with his professional advice—whether that gentleman, notwithstanding the removal of the mission, notwithstanding the misunderstanding that existed between this country and Persia (in the service of whose Sovereign he still remained), continued to receive from this country his salary of 2,000*l.* a year?—Viscount MELBOURNE answered, that if the differences were not settled, the salary would cease.—The Earl of Aberdeen withdrew his motion.

THURSDAY, March 21.—The Earl of ROSSE brought forward his motion on the state of Ireland. It abounded with details of the most frightful character, exhibiting a list of murders perpetrated, in many instances, in the open day, and, for the most part, unpunished, in consequence of the system of intimidation, which prevented witnesses from giving evidence, under the apprehension of death. He concluded by moving for a committee of inquiry, which he maintained was loudly called for by every consideration of justice and humanity.—The Marquis of NORMANBY defended his conduct in the government of Ireland, and resisted the motion as calculated to have an injurious effect on the tranquillity of that country.—The Duke of WELLINGTON maintained that the case for inquiry had not been answered.—After further debate, in which the Earl of Charlemont, Lord Rossmore, Lord Donoughmore, Lord Lismore, Marquis of Westmeath, Earl of Fingall, Viscount Melbourne, Lord Brougham, Lord Plunket, and Earl of Winchilsea took part, the house divided, when the motion was carried by 61 contents to 38 non-contents.

* As we have had the pamphleteer's authority for adding, was that of his own book on Military Law; certainly one of the most amusing as well as instructive works we ever read.

† It is true that Wellington is an Irishman, and may be considered equal to a host, but then the parties alluded to disown him as a countryman, and sneer at him as a Commander.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 18.—Mr. Horsman gave notice that soon after Easter he would call the attention of the House to the subject of Impressment in the Navy.—In answer to an inquiry, Lord Palmerston said, that Mr. M'Neill, after returning from Persia, had returned to this country on account of ill health, and that he had left Col. Shiel as Chargé d'Affaires.—Mr. T. Attwood moved, "That it be an instruction to the Committee of Supply to reconsider the vote of 34,160 seamen and marines, and to inquire whether it would not be advantageous, in the present state of the country, considering its foreign relations, to make an immediate and considerable increase;" but, after a short discussion, he consented to withdraw his motion.—Several votes connected with the Army were agreed to.—The debate on the Corn-laws was resumed for the fifth time, and, after a discussion of several hours, the House divided, when Mr. Villiers' motion was lost by a majority of 147; the numbers being, for the motion, 197, against it, 349.—Mr. Rice obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the acts whereby certain annuities had been granted to the Duke of Wellington. The bill was with the full consent of the Duke. Under the existing acts the Duchess of Wellington would, if she survived her husband, be entitled to draw by way of jointure a sum of 2,500*l* from the annuities which had been granted by the State for the maintenance of the dignity of the titles and honours enjoyed by the noble Duke; but no provision had been made for settling a jointure upon any wife whom the eldest son of the Duke of Wellington might marry. The object of the bill was to supply this omission, and likewise to make provision for the settlement of the objects of value presented to his Grace by foreign potentates and other personages.

TUESDAY, March 19.—Lord Sandon moved an Address for copies of any memorials addressed to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, by British merchants trading with Mexico and Buenos Ayres, praying his interference to protect British commerce against the effect of blockades established in the ports of those countries by the Government of France, together with the correspondence with the said merchants arising thereout; 2nd, for copies of any communications with the French Government, founded on the said memorials; and, 3d, the amount of British force in the Bay of Vera Cruz at the time of the taking of the Castle of San Juan d'Ulloa by the French squadron under Admiral Baudin, and at the taking of Vera Cruz by the same squadron.—Lord Palmerston had no objection to the production of the papers, except the correspondence; but to that he must object, as negotiations were proceeding, and to which he expected the most satisfactory result.—Mr. E. Tennent moved an amendment, for the production of any papers and correspondence regarding occupation in Brazil by the French.—Mr. Grote complained of the conduct at Vera Cruz and Mexico of the French, maintaining that it called for the marked interference of the British Government.—Dr. Lushington condemned the proceedings of France, as oppressive and unjustifiable, and contrary to the usages of nations, and urged the interference of our Government, by the most decided remonstrances that could be well enforced after what had taken place in that House, to show France that England was "wide awake" to its conduct.—Mr. C. Wood stated what force had been sent to the station, declaring that there was sufficient to protect British interests, the best proof of which was that they had not suffered.—Sir R. Peel said, Lord Palmerston's argument against sending a competent force and taking a dignified tone, went to show that there was no use either in a Navy or an Ambassador. We had two pendants, which he had thought were for the protection of British commerce. It was pleaded that the Commodore might have sent a detachment, but that was a delicate discretion for an officer to assume; one would like to know what were his instructions from the Admiralty. When the bombardment of San Juan d'Ulloa began, the British in Vera Cruz were induced, in that alarm, to quit their homes. Here was a case in which British ships might have rendered great assistance, if British ships had been off the town, and this without giving any possible umbrage to the blockading force. If ships were of no use then, why had they been sent now? Lord Palmerston had said, to give moral weight to our intercession. But would they not have given the same moral weight to our remonstrances if the French authorities on the spot had seen them there when the blockade began? If our commerce and our character were to be undermined by the consequences of such hostilities as these, it was a bootless boast of Mr. Canning, that he had called the new world into existence to redeem the balance of the old.—The motion was eventually withdrawn.

THURSDAY, March 21.—Mr. Labouchere said, in answer to a question from Mr. O'Connell, that, from despatches received from Sir J. Colborne and Sir G. Arthur, it would not be necessary to carry the infliction of capital punishments further in Canada.—Mr. Hume moved a resolution, the effect of which was to introduce household suffrage as an amendment of the Reform Act, but concluded his speech by simply moving for leave to bring in a bill to amend that act. After a short discussion, the motion was negatived by a majority of 85 to 50.

FRIDAY, March 22.—The Duke of Wellington's Estate Bill was read a third time and passed.—Sir Charles Gray gave notice that he should, on Tuesday next, move that a copy of Mitchell's map on the subject of the disputed territory, on the borders of the State of Maine, or the province of New Brunswick, or so much of it as comprised that territory, should be laid on the table of the House.—Lord John Russell, in moving that the commital of the Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill be postponed till 16th of April, announced that, in consequence of the vote passed by the House of Lords on the previous night, he would, on one of the earliest days after the recess, take the opinion of the House with respect to the government of Ireland in late years. His Lordship, in alluding to the state of Ireland, said, "The measures we ourselves thought it advisable to pass I candidly admit we have not been able to carry through Parliament; but this we have been able to do with the confidence of one House and the forbearance of the other—we have been enabled to carry on the administration of Ireland in a manner that has conduced to the prosperity of that part of our Empire. On these grounds, we think it necessary to ask of the House of Commons whether it is disposed to approve of my noble friend, Lord Fortescue, continuing to adopt the measures which I have hitherto been adopted. He will continue to execute the laws in the manner in which the executive has hitherto been carried on, if the House is pleased to agree to those measures, but if, on the other hand, the House does not approve of this plan, but is willing that it should be abandoned, and other principles be adopted, then there is nothing left but to relinquish into other hands the government of the country."—On the motion of General Sharpe, a return was ordered of the number of Cavalry Officers appointed Colonels of regts. since 1828, with a statement of the length of service of each.

Lord Howick brought forward the Army Estimates. His Lordship stated that, although there was apparently but little difference between the regimental establishments of this year and those of former years, he was bound to inform the house that there was a very considerable difference as to the real amount of force that he should call upon the house this year to provide for, and that which he had required in former years. There would be a total increase of the army, as compared with former years, of 9,414 men. Since the estimates had been prepared, it had been found necessary to make some further augmentation of the force in India, but that would involve no additional charge on the country. It would, however, be necessary hereafter to propose an additional estimate to provide for the expense incidental upon supporting a considerable amount of irregular force of Militia and Volunteers which it had been found necessary to raise in Canada. The materials for forming an estimate had not yet been received. There was an increase of force, as compared with last year, of 5,600 men, which, coupled with the increase of the preceding year, made in all 9,400 men. He begged attention to an item relative to an accommodation of the soldiers, viz. 2,500*l*. for military libraries to be established in the barracks in this country and in the colonies. This was a matter of policy, which had been frequently urged on the Government by Members—a policy which had it in view to endeavour by all indirect means to abate crime, and to diminish the necessity for corporeal punishments. In tropical climates, the soldiers found great difficulty in filling up their time when off duty, and too often they betook themselves to intemperance, as a resource against tedium. For a considerable period, libraries had been established in barracks in the East Indies, and they now proposed to establish, in concert with the Commander-in-Chief, libraries at all the principal stations, at home and abroad. The vote was not a large one, as there would be at first some difficulty. It would be necessary, by way of experiment, to establish these libraries at some places in the first instance, and after they saw how they worked, they might then easily extend them. It was proposed that a room in each barrack should be set apart for the library, which should be placed under the charge of the Barrack-Master, that it should be lighted and warmed, and that the soldiers should have the use of the books. It was also supposed that it would lead them to value the indulgence more highly by subjecting them to a trifling payment, a payment almost nominal, to the Barrack Master, for his trouble. He hoped that they would in a short time be enabled to carry this experiment into effect. What was proposed was, not that there should be regimental libraries, for that would lead to great difficulties in the removal, but that there should be fixed libraries in all barrack establishments. By this means, as the books would not be the same in all, in changing from one station to another the soldiers would find that they had recourse to a different selection of books, and of course to a greater variety of reading. Communications had been already had with booksellers, many of whom were willing to make a large reduction in the retail prices of the books to be supplied. The noble Lord moved that the sum of 121,383*l*. be granted in addition to the 3,000,000*l*. already voted for the army services of the year.—Sir Henry Hardinge considered the proposed augmentation insufficient; he went into a review of the various stations of the British Army, in order to prove that the amount of force in each was below what was necessary. No army in the world, in ancient or modern times, ever did so much duty as the British. Alluding to the force destined for Affghanistan, he observed that the length of march was so great, the conveyance of ammunition and provision required so much caution and management, that he felt convinced that the army would have a most difficult operation. He would not say whether the force in India were sufficient or not for the services in which it was engaged, but he would say that it was a great deal less than on any former occasion. When he compared the state of the force in India at the present moment with that of the time of the Burmese war, he found that it was now of a much smaller amount. He thought a much greater force necessary in India, to guard against any dissatisfaction on the part of the natives, or jealousies on the part of the frontier tribes. A long discussion ensued as to whether the army should be increased or not; but ultimately the vote was agreed to. Several other votes were also agreed to.—Lord Howick brought up the Mutiny Bill, which was read a first, and ordered to be read a second time on Monday.—Mr. C. Wood brought up the Marine Mutiny Bill, which was also read a first and ordered to be read a second time on Monday.

[The Debate on the Army Estimates will be reviewed next week.—Ed.]

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

France.—The New French Ministry is, we believe, at length decided:—Soult, War Minister and President of the Council. Thiers, Foreign Affairs; Passy, Interior; Humann, Finance; Dupin, Justice; Duperre, Marine; Sauzet, Public Instruction; Cunin Gridaine, Commerce; and Dufaure, Public Works.

Ancona.—The expenses already incurred in making the new fortifications amount to 200,000 Roman crowns, and the contracts entered into are very considerable. Twenty-five pieces of cannon and seven or eight howitzers, or mortars, are on their carriages, and ready to be mounted on the batteries. The covert ways of the outworks have been repaired, and the detached fortifications, as well as those which command the sea, have been the first object of attention. Palisades, gun-carriages, and other materials, have been brought from Trieste. The garrison has been gradually reinforced, but even now does not amount to more than between 1500 and 1600. A convention, however, is said to have been negotiated with Switzerland for an augmentation. The Austrians have a force of between 6000 and 7000 men on the extreme frontier.

Spain.—The following toasts were drunk at the farewell dinner given by General Semane to the Earl of Clarendon:—"To Queen Isabel II. May God confound her enemies." "To Queen Victoria. May Heaven grant her a long and prosperous reign, and a numerous progeny." "To General Evans." "To the Earl of Clarendon." "To the King of Denmark, who disdained to imitate the cruel example set by the absolutist sovereigns, and was one of the first to recognise Queen Isabel."

Greece.—Accounts to 17th Feb. state that the English General, Gordon, had retired from the service because he had not been included in the list of the promotions to the Order du Sauveur. The reason why the Talavera was sent to Patras was because the English Government began to think that there was some foundation for the suspicions that the Greek Government intended to make some attempt upon the Ionian Islands.—Gazette du Midi.

North America.—The intelligence received this week is, upon the whole, of a satisfactory character. Notwithstanding the disposition of the citizens of Maine, and the apprehensions which a portion of the American press entertains, that some hasty and inconsiderate proceeding of that State may precipitate events, we are strongly disposed to confide in the prudence of the Central Government, without whose approbation it is scarcely possible that a general collision should take place. Where the disposition is so manifestly good, we are justified in anticipating a peaceful issue.

Theatres.

Italian Opera.—Belisario has been repeated every night. Great preparations are making for the novelties after Easter. Persiani makes her first appearance on Easter Tuesday. The Opera, we believe, will be either Lucia di Lammermoor or La Sonnambula. We are also promised Grisi, Lablache, and Rubini. The ballet of Robert le Diable increases in public favour on each representation.

Covent Garden.—Sir Lytton Bulwer's Richelieu continues to be most popular. The theatre is crowded every night it is performed. The receipts on Thursday were the largest of the present season. The play has been twice commanded by her Majesty.

Haymarket.—This house opened on Monday night for the season with the Love Chase. A novelty followed in the shape of a one-act farce, called A Wife for a Day, and written for the purpose of exhibiting the Yankee eccentricities of Hill, who is in this country the admitted representative of Brother Jonathan. He personates a young raw Vermont farmer, full of quaintness, shrewdness, and what many would call vulgarity, but which really is not vulgar in the true understanding of the word. His dry humour kept the audience in a continued roar, and he announced the piece for repetition amid loud approbation.

Polytechnic Institution.—In addition to the highly interesting series of Lectures on the Physiology of Man, which we noticed as in the course of delivery at this institution, a series has commenced on Chemistry, by Mr. J. T. Cooper, which promises a fund of scientific instruction, and also a series on vocal music by Mr. Phillips. Another object of great interest has been added to the daily attraction of this institution,—we allude to the exhibition of an entirely new plan of exploding wrecks under water, by means of voltaic electricity. This latter novelty promises to be of real importance, as it seems to offer a means of attaining the object in question with perfect safety.

We have been for some time silent observers of the affairs of the Hon. Artillery Company, and have felt surprised that a corps which ought to be respected and distinguished should become ridiculous, through the imbecility of the "powers that rule," alias the Court of Assistants. One amongst the many corruptions and absurdities they practise is that of having the members drilled by the amateur Serjeants of the Company, who are totally incompetent to the task; and the natural and inevitable consequence is a corps of the most awkward and undisciplined men that ever played at soldiers. We understand that a motion has been made to have a Serjeant from the regulars to drill the men; and from what we know of the sapient body composing the Court of Assistants, we should not be at all surprised to hear of its being rejected. Whoever witnessed the memorable march of the corps from Bunhill Row to Westminster Abbey on the occasion of the Coronation, must have been filled with ridicule and pity for the patient and suffering warriors. At the utmost, not four men together kept the step, and a general kicking of heels was the consequence. A parcel of schoolboys would have done it infinitely better. The other events that took place, and which must be most painfully impressed upon every mind, were equally deplorable; yet these men, who have the vanity and folly to take upon themselves the "management" and "discipline" of the Company, cannot see the necessity of having Serjeants from the Line to drill the men. Surely Government, if they tolerate the existence of this presumed Military body, should make it obligatory that they be efficiently drilled; or of what use in times of disturbance would such an awkward, ignorant, and confused mass of men be? It cannot be otherwise than extremely painful to some who are sensitive enough to feel the jeers and laughter their awkwardness never fails to occasion whenever they appear in public. We shall watch the movements of the Court, and expose any mismanagement, either of the military or monetary matters.

the above and subsequent clauses, in the same chapter, for its security, we do not feel competent to offer an opinion; but we are glad to observe it is provided in the previous Chap. 2, clause 41, on punishments,—

"That in every case in which sentence of death has been passed, the government of the Presidency, within which the offence has been sentenced, may without consent of the offender, commute the punishment for any other punishment provided by the code."

We take leave, however, to observe, that in clauses Nos. 43 and 44, Chap. 2, relative to the commutation for imprisonment, we think the addenda to the sentence of banishment for life, requires reconsideration and amelioration, and also the enactments, Nos. 49 and 50, with the illustration appended, by which the East India Company are to seize the property, to the third and fourth generation, in punishment of the transgression; it does not seem just, that if a son, or grandson, have committed crime and received sentence, whereby he forfeits all his property, that, at the death of his father or grandfather, the East India Government should seize the property to the ruin of his wife and children. The ten enactments comprised in Chap. 7, upon offences against the public tranquillity, appear to us to be the result of an attempt to substitute a civil code in place of a military government; an amalgamation of the two tribunals; which, it may be alleged, the varieties of languages, religions, moral character, and magnitude of the population of the empire, in its present state, render essential to its efficient government, and the same considerations probably apply to the restrictions imposed upon the Press, in order to prevent the anticipated evils of disaffection, or turbulence, from appeals to the passions and prejudices of the uneducated portion of the natives, by irresponsible public writers.

We have endeavoured, by the preceding remarks and quotations, to place before our readers an outline of a few of the most striking lineaments in this code, with the view of directing public attention to this most important document, involving the future welfare and security of an immense nation, and the vital interests of Great Britain. To the great mass of Englishmen, who must be unacquainted with the interior structure of the existing Indian Government, it will appear marvellous that a great country, containing more than one hundred millions of natives, should be governed by a foreign power, placed at its antipodes upon our globe, and of different language, manners, customs, religion, and government; whilst it is most obvious that to continue that supremacy to mutual advantage, the most sacred duties, not only of a moral but Christian legislature, must be performed on our part towards them as fellow subjects.

The East India Government, and the Board of Control, have thus far discharged their duties; they have availed themselves of the highest talents of the country, to obtain a code of laws adapted to the present improved state and condition of society and jurisprudence: but here the GREAT QUESTION presents itself—How are the laws to be carried into execution, and what is the machinery required to be used as the primum mobile?

Upon this subject the code affords no information;—with this inquiry the Commissioners appear to have had nothing to do: it must, therefore, be presumed, that the Governor in Council in India, the East India Company at home, and the Board of Control, are, subject to the approbation of the Imperial Parliament, the parties to carry out this measure: but still we naturally ask, "Where are the materials?" To those who are acquainted with India we need not observe, that with a population exceeding 123,000,000 of natives, the British civilians do not at present, we believe, amount to 700 individuals in the whole empire; and although some writers assert that the handful of professional gentlemen resident at Calcutta always talk, and write of, and in reality believe themselves to be, all India; yet we take leave to say, that if India is to become permanently an integral portion of the British empire, it can only be by a just participation in all its civil rights and liberties. Nothing can be more fallacious, than to represent the incapacity of the natives for the administration of Civil government. One of the best informed, most experienced, and intelligent officers* of the Company, introduced several years since the experiment of juries in his own presidency, amongst the natives, similar to our own in this country, and upon an inquiry of a highly criminal nature; and nothing can carry stronger conviction than this gentleman's evidence before a Committee of the House of Lords on this most interesting subject, of the great benefit and advantage to be derived from similar improvements. By committing to themselves the administration of just laws, common to all, without distinction of country or caste, and the collecting of the revenue amongst themselves, by their own agency, we should cultivate at the same time their intellectual and physical capacities; and in return they would give us that confidence which ever results from mutual benefits, reciprocally bestowed and received; wherens, an attempt to exclude them from those enjoyments and privileges, and to place the civil government of this extensive empire in the hands of a few British residents, in the present progressive state of human society, must inevitably lead to all those evils and miseries which follow in the train of injustice, and assuredly will end in final separation.

The Bury and Norwich Post contains a paragraph, stating that the Chartists of Norwich are generally arming; that about 300 are already armed with pikes, of which the description is given; that these pikes are fast making their way into the country villages, and that about sixty will leave Norwich this week so armed, and some also with pistols, for the North of England!

The Observer of Sunday stated that Miss Davys had been dismissed from the Queen's service, and added that "the dispute between her and her Royal Mistress was a very angry one, the Queen expressing her sentiments in a very undisguised and unequivocal manner." Some wag, knowing the avidity of our somewhat gullible contemporary for intelligence of this description, has thus pleasantly imposed upon him.

It has been reported in some of the papers that Capt. Tucker, whose name has lately been so unfortunately placed under the notice of the public, stated himself to be of the 27th Regt. No mention whatever was made of that regiment during the proceedings. Had Capt. Tucker been questioned on the subject, he would have answered, that he now belonged to no regiment, having sold out many years ago: he did belong to the 27th in 1801, and was with it in Egypt, but he ceased to belong to it about thirty years ago. It is not very probable that a gallant officer, decorated with three orders honourably won, who was found stretched on the field of Waterloo, wounded in three places, should wish to conceal his identity, or be at a loss to prove it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

[illegible]DAY, March 18.—Mr. HORSMAN gave notice that soon [illegible]aster he would call the attention of the House to the sub- [illegible] Impressment in the Navy.—In answer to an inquiry, [illegible]ALMERSTON said, that Mr. M'Neill, after inforing from [illegible], had returned to this country on account of ill health, and [illegible]e had left Col. Shiel as Chargé d'Affaires.—Mr. [illegible]. ARKWOOD [illegible]il, "That it be an instruction to the Committee of Supply to [illegible]sider the vote of 34,160 seamen and marines, and to inquire [illegible]her it would not be advantageous, in the present state of the [illegible]try, considering its foreign relations, to make an immediate [illegible]onsiderable increase;" but, after a short discussion, he con- [illegible]ent to withdraw his motion.—Several votes connected with [illegible]rmy were agreed to.—The debate on the Corn Laws was re- [illegible]d for the fifth time, and, after a discussion of several hours, [illegible]House divided, when Mr. Villiers' motion was lost by a ma- [illegible]y of 147—the numbers being, for the motion, 105; against it, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] whom those returns were furnished—some of these officers of very distinguished character and high rank—should have been exceedingly hurt that any doubt should have been expressed as to the accuracy of any statements proceeding from them. He was now authorized by the whole of them, and by Sir Philip Durham in particular, to state that the returns from which he had quoted were strictly correct. There were two points upon which the noble Earl (Earl Hardwicke) seemed chiefly to conceive that there must be some error. The first related to the state of some of the ships at Portsmouth, and referring to the Revenge in particular, he said, that the masts necessary for her equipment, instead of being ready, were only in a state of progress and preparation. In consequence of the statement on the part of the noble Earl, he (Lord M.) had desired inquiries to be made, from which he learned, that instead of there being no masts for such a ship as the Revenge, there were in fact five sets of third-rate masts in a state fit to be shipped at any moment at which the necessity for them should arise, and that of these five sets of masts, three sets were wholly unappropriated. The other statement made by the noble Earl was, that there was no sufficient provision of topsails for ships of the line at Plymouth. Upon that point also he (Lord M.) had desired inquiry to be made by the Admiral Superintendent at Plymouth, and the answer he received was that the noble Earl had been greatly deceived in the information with which he had been furnished; for that so far from there being no topsails for ships of the line at Plymouth, there were seven complete suits of sails for line of battle ships, containing, in the whole, sixty-six topsails. He had thought it due to the officers, by whom the returns which he quoted, were made, to offer this explanation; and he thought their Lordships would see how important it was that discredit should not slightly or hastily be thrown upon documents quoted by a member of the Government.—Lord FORTESCUE (Ebrington) entered into a lengthened explanation of the speech to which Lord Lyndhurst made reference on a former evening, and said that the report to which reference had been made was not characterised by desirable correctness and fullness, adding, however, that, in the discharge of the office to which he was called, his principle of action would be to maintain and enforce, not to alter, the laws. A long discussion followed, Lord Lyndhurst, the Duke of Wellington, &c., taking part in it. His Grace said that he did not think it the wisest appointment that could have been made.

THURSDAY, March 7.—The Earl of HARDWICKE said that he was necessarily absent on a former evening, when the Earl of MINTO contradicted his statements with respect to the incorrectness of the Government returns as to the condition of the demonstration ships. He still maintained that, with twenty one sail of the line in commission, and eighteen frigates, Government were only provided with three complete suits of sails for line-of-battle ships, and an equal number for the eighteen frigates. He confessed, however, that he was led into an expression which was, perhaps, too strong, "that the returns supplied by the Admiralty were false," but he still impugned their accuracy. The Earl of MINTO observed that the officers at Portsmouth and Plymouth were exceedingly anxious to vouch for the accuracy of the returns which they had presented, and which the Noble Earl had called in question, but which he (Lord Minto) nevertheless believed to be correct.—The Duke of WELLINGTON could not help thinking that those who were inquiring whether such a vessel had or had not three masts, or whether there was a sufficient store of sails in our dockyards, were on an entirely wrong scent. The Earl of Minto maintained that demonstration ships were ready, while another Noble Earl opposite to him insisted that they were not ready. Demonstration ships! (exclaimed his Grace), why this country was at war [hear! and cheers]—she was at war in two quarters of the world. She was at war in America, and likewise in Asia, and what he said was, that when a country was at war, the establishments of that country should be war establishments—where ours were all peace establishments [cheers].—The Marquess of LANSDOWNE, although he did not shut his eyes to the fact that there were grave subjects of apprehension as to the manner in which the interests of this country might be affected in various parts of the world, he could not admit that it was in a state of war with any maritime power; and the peace establishment was superior to any known to exist, or which was maintained in former periods of the maritime history of this country.—The Duke of WELLINGTON said that when they commenced making war with a peace establishment, they were obliged to starve the peace as well as the war establishments. That was his opinion, and he sincerely and anxiously hoped that they would not experience the truth of it, and find, when they brought, in a time of war, their peace service to the lowest possible state, that they were left without any reserve anywhere for any purpose whatever [cheers]. He did not wish to give any trouble or inconvenience to any Noble Lord; but he thought he was bound to state his views on a subject on which he felt strongly; and with respect to which he was actuated by no other motive than an anxious desire for the honour of the service.

FRIDAY, March 8—Lord LYNDHURST complained of the insult offered to the British flag, and asked whether any apology had been received from the French Government. When the English vessel passed the French corvette, friendly salutes passed between them, and not the slightest intention was manifested of interrupting her course. But immediately afterwards signals were seen flying on board the French Admiral, and then it was the first shot was fired, and the subsequent outrage committed. He (Lord L.) was satisfied that the insult was offered, not by an unauthorised act on the part of the young commander of the corvette—but under the direction of the French Admiral.—Lord MINTO said that a very short and confused account had reached him from the Commander of the Packet, and he had written to Lieut. Croke, desiring him to furnish a more distinct and more detailed account of all that had occurred, both as regarded the conduct of the French officer, and the steps that he himself had taken. That information had not yet been received. Communication had been made by this country to the Government of France, and it would be but decent to wait for their explanation. Lord Brougham and Lord Melville thought this explanation anything but satisfactory, and were of opinion that redress for the insult must be required from the French Government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 4.—Mr. C. WOOD, in answer to Lord Ingestrie, declined submitting the letters regarding the outrage on the British flag at Vera Cruz, the correspondence on the subject being still in progress. Having moved that the House resolve into committee of supply on the "Navy Estimates," the motion gave rise to much preliminary discussion, in the course of which Captain BOLDERO said that the general duties of Marines were fully equal to troops of the line; and, with regard to discipline and manœuvring, they were quite equal to any regiment of the line. At the same time, however, the Marine force had been treated in a way to lead to the impression on the minds of the soldiers of the line, that it should only be considered as an inferior branch of the service. Indeed, on more than one occasion, they had been stigmatised by the soldiers as being only half soldiers—[a laugh]. The Order in Council of 12 July, 1837, had never been applied to the Navy. How was it that it had only been made applicable to the Marine force? Was the Admiralty ashamed of it? If they were, he was glad of it. Their services were admitted by all persons to have been of the highest value, and he trusted, therefore, that justice would be done to this much deserving corps.

Mr. G. BERKELEY said, that in the hour of danger the line had never allowed the Marines to go before them.

Mr. C. WOOD said that Sir H. Hardinge, in giving his evidence before the commission on Military rewards and punishments, had stated his decided opinion that at some future period great inconveniences and danger might arise from the unequal system which gave the soldier a pension of only 6*d.* a day, while the Marine had 1*s*. Upon inquiry it was found that the Marine had not only this and other advantages over the soldier, but also over the sailor. While the Marine was entitled as a matter of right to discharge at the expiration of twenty one years, the soldier or seamen could only obtain his as a matter of favour, at the expiration of twenty-five or twenty-eight years; and here again the Marine had an advantage over the sailor, for his service was continuous, and a great deal of it passed less hardly than the seamen's service, while the service of the latter was not continuous. The Government was determined to act upon the principle of assimilating as nearly as possible the position of the three services. Upon the whole, the Marine was afloat about two-thirds or three-fourths of his time, and he and the sailor would now be entitled to a pension after about the same period of service.

Sir H. HARDINGE said that the Warrant of 1833 gave a soldier 6*d.* a day pension after twenty-one years' service, while the Marine had 1*s*. All the different Warrants ought to be revised and assimilated as much as possible.

Viscount HOWICK said that when the right hon. gentleman opposite was Secretary at War, he perceived that the non-effective Army was rapidly rising to an equality in numbers with the effective, and proceeded to take steps to counteract the mischief. It had been the practice, whatever the rule might have been, to give a man his discharge at the moment he had completed his twenty-one years of service, whether he was capable of further service or not, and the consequence was, that stout able men of thirty nine or forty years of age were discharged on pensions nearly equal to the pay they had received, to remain a useless burden on the public for thirty or forty years. The determination which the gallant Baronet proceeded to act upon was, that no soldier should be admitted to a pension until by a strict medical examination it had been ascertained that he was not fit for further service. It was then found that another description of abuse arose, for the men who by a long course of drunkenness and debauchery had ruined their health, were admitted to their discharge, and had thus an advantage over the men of sober habits and regular conduct, who remained fit for service and kept in the Army for long periods. After an ineffectual attempt on the part of the noble Lord who had become Paymaster of the Forces to remedy this abuse, it was found necessary to make an alteration in the amount of pensions, and the principle on which this alteration was made was this:—A soldier dismissed at an early period of life received a smaller amount of pension than the soldier whose good conduct and attention to his health enabled him to continue a longer period in the service, and still less than he who continued in the service till he was altogether disabled from earning his livelihood. The Warrant of 1833 had been submitted to the Commander-in-Chief, and had received his full concurrence. Nay, more, it was thought that so important an arrangement ought not to take place without the sanction of the Cabinet. This Warrant was formally brought before the Cabinet, of which Sir J. Graham, as First Lord of the Admiralty, was a member, and was approved of. The right to pensions established by that Warrant with regard to ordinary service and ordinary disabilities, was framed with a just regard to what was fair to the soldier, and just to the people of this country, by whom those pensions were to be paid. But some farther provision was necessary for rewarding the good conduct of the soldier. Accordingly, he (Lord Howick) had the honour of submitting a warrant to his late Majesty, authorising the issue of good-conduct pay to soldiers under certain rules and regulations, allowing them to carry that extra pay as given for good conduct, in addition to their pensions. The effect of the Warrant of the gallant officer, as contrasted with the Good-Conduct Warrant to which he had referred, would appear from a statement which he held in his hand. By that paper he found, that instead of the soldier being now in a different or worse situation than after the established object of attention, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

BRITISH WATERPROOFING COMPANY, 482, West Strand, near the Lowther Arcade.—The Directors of this Company invite the attention of the public to the following report, received from the Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police Force, addressed to H. C. Moreton Dyer, Esq., one of the Directors of this Company:—

"Metropolitan Police Office, Whitehall place, 23rd February, 1839.—Sir,—The Commissioners of Police beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, requesting to be informed of the reports made by the police constables who have been wearing the clothing prepared and waterproofed by the British Waterproofing Company. The Commissioners have to acquaint you in reply, that one suit has been in the use of a constable, whose beat is situate on Blackheath. He reports that frequently during the month of January he was out in six hours' successive rain, without getting the least damp underneath the clothing; that on the night of the 8th instant it rained the whole nine hours he was on duty, and that when he took off his great coat, in the presence of the sergeant at the station, it was found as dry inside as when he put it on; that since he wore the waterproofed clothing he has been out in as much wet as at one time would have saturated three suits of the ordinary clothing. The other police constable is situate at Kingsland. He reports that he has worn the waterproofed clothing night and day, and has been under severe rain and snow storms, none of which penetrated any part of his clothing, except a little wet through one of the legs of the trousers on the first day he put them on, but since then he has observed nothing more of it. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant, "C. Rowan."

The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. BALSAM of SPERMACETI.—Asthma, Shortness of Breath, Wheezing Coughs, soreness, tightness, and oppression of the Chest, and most affections of the Chest and Lungs, relieved in ten minutes, by taking one dose of WOODHOUSE'S BALSAM of SPERMACETI, or PECTORAL COUGH DROPS. Persons doubting the efficacy of this Medicine may take a dose in the Proprietor's Shop before they purchase. The Proprietor earnestly recommends a trial of these Drops to persons afflicted with the above complaints, but he does not introduce them as being an infallible cure (as many do), but is warranted in asserting their efficacy, from the extensive relief afforded in numerous cases of the above description. Constitutional Coughs of three, four, and more years' standing, have been cured in the course of a week by the use of these Drops. In the Hooping and Chin Coughs it will be found equally valuable. Two tea spoonfuls of the Balsam are equal to one ounce of Spermaceti—it will at all times relieve the most violent Consumptive Cough.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. each.

This preparation is prepared only by Dr. James Woodhouse, Operative Chemist extraordinary to his late Majesty, at his Laboratory, 13, Little James street, Bedford-row; of whom it may be had Wholesale; also Retail of Nash, 18, King William street, London-bridge, Senger, 150, Oxford-street; Hannay, 3, Oxford-street; and of all Medicine Venders.

FAMILIES, TRAVELLERS, MASTERS OF SHIPS, AND SPORTSMEN,
Should never be Without MOXON'S

EFFERVESCENT MAGNESIAN APERIENT, decidedly the most generally useful Medicine ever offered to the public.

The unrivalled efficacy of the Magnesian in all Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels has obtained for it the uniform recommendation and approval of the Faculty.

This unique preparation unites all the active powers of the most approved saline purgatives with the palateable qualities of a glass of soda water. In torpid state of the liver and bowels, bilious affections, cholera morbus, pains in the head, or disordered state of the stomach, nausea, and violent sickness, it will be found a safe, speedy, and effectual remedy. It gives instantaneous relief in the heartburn, is of great service in preventing piles, fistula, and gout, and in alleviating the febrile symptoms attendant on the latter affection. Derangement of the stomach and head, &c., arising from too free indulgence in the gratifications of the table, is speedily removed by a tea-spoonful taken early in the morning.

Prepared only by BENJAMIN MOXON, Chymist, Hull.

Wholesale Agents—Barclay and Sons, London; J. and R. Raimes, Edinburgh and Dublin. Sold wholesale at all the Medicine Warehouses in London, and retail by all Venders of Medicines throughout the kingdom, in bottles at 2s. 9d.; 4s. 6d.; and in family bottles at 11s, containing the quantity of five of the 2s. 9d. size, a saving of 20 per cent. to the purchaser.

N.B.—Be careful to observe that "Moxon and Smith, Chymists, Hull," is engraved on the stamp, without which it cannot be genuine.

May be had as above, that very popular and much-esteemed preparation of Sarsaparilla, the

CONCENTRATED COMPOUND DECOCTION,
Prepared by B. Moxon, Chymist, Hull.

"One table-spoonful added to a pint of pure water readily forms a pint of the Compound Decoction; and, in justice to the preparers, we must say, appears to be more impregnated with the virtues of the ingredients than the decoction made in the usual way."—See Gazette of Health and Practical Medicine for January, 1839.

In bottles at 4s. 6d., 12s., and 22s., the latter equivalent to 12 pints of the Compound Decoction of the London Pharmacopœia.

Climate on the Hair.—The effect of climate upon the hair is very great. Extreme cold is apt to dry and wither the roots, and, on the contrary, extreme heat to enervate and weaken this important integument of the head. The most extraordinary thing connected with the preceding fact is, that one counteracting agent should be endowed with the singular virtues of preserving the hair in health and beauty, in either the torrid or frigid zone; and it is a question, whether Rowland's Macassar Oil is most used in warm or cold countries. At the Court of Russia, is most used in warm or cold countries. At the Court of Russia, is most used in warm or cold countries. At the Court of Russia, the above delightful conservator of the hair is lauded with extraordinary encomiums, while in India the consumption of Rowland's Macassar is immense!

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:— "Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"Dear Sir,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. Longhouse."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Senger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.—FAMILIES in WANT of really good SERVANTS, of every description, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, 320, Oxford-street, corner of Regent-circus, (removed from 134, Oxford-street—established in 1830), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as domestics are waiting to be hired from Ten to Five o'clock. Convenient rooms are appropriated to engagements, which prevents unnecessary trouble at home through promiscuous applications. Many persons are prejudiced against an establishment for hiring servants; but if the servants possess good characters, it must certainly be obviously absurd to suppose that they can be injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure situations. Fee for obtaining a servant, 2s. 6d.; as many as may be required in a family per annum, 14s.

It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 79, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand; Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading or any other Sauce.

ADMIRALTY, March 26TH, 1839.

"H.M.S. Volage, Aden Back Bay, 22nd Jan. 1839.

"SIR,—I have the honour to inform your Excell that the expedition under my command against this place, anchored in the afternoon of 16th inst. The same evening I received a letter (No. 1) from the political agent, informing me that all negotiation on his part had failed, and that hostilities had already commenced. On receipt of this letter, I communicated with Major Baillie, the officer commanding the troops, and we determined to lose no time in attacking the place. The 17th was spent in drawing up the plan of attack, and in making the necessary preparations. On the morning of the 18th I weighed with the squadron* to proceed to the front of the town, which I reached in the afternoon, in company with the Cruiser (towing a mortar-boat) and Mahé schooner. On standing in towards the Island of Seerah, a fire was opened on the ship with musketry and several large guns, when I commenced a partial attack. The Coote (corvette) and transports not having come up, I hauled off and anchored for the night. On the morning of the 19th, the whole force having arrived, I made the signal to prepare to attack, and the troops to be held in readiness for landing in two divisions: at half-past nine the Volage anchored, with a spring on her small bower cable, in four fathoms water, at about three hundred yards distance from the lower battery on the Island of Seerah, at the same time the Mahe took up her position to the southward of the island. On standing in, the enemy opened a fire of great guns and musketry on us, but the ship being laid so close to the shore, the guns on the heights were rendered useless, their shot passing over us. At ten the cruiser anchored, and was of essential service in destroying the flank of the battery. During this period a heavy fire was kept up; but in a short time two of the guns in the lower battery were dismounted, and most of the people were driven from the remainder; they, however, took shelter behind the ruins of the battery, and kept up an incessant fire of musketry on the ships, and although the lower battery was almost knocked to pieces, still we had great difficulty in dislodging the men. At this period I directed the fire to be opened on the round tower and batteries on the heights, which were filled with men armed with matchlocks, and in the course of one hour I had the satisfaction to see this tower (though 60 feet high, and strongly built) a mass of ruins. At 11 the Coote anchored with the second division of the troops to the southward of the island, and opened her fire upon the town. Finding the firing had not ceased from the lower battery, I directed the Mahe schooner to proceed to the end of it, and endeavour to drive out the men from behind it, by musketry, this service was performed by her Commander, Lieut. Daniels, in a most gallant manner, but I regret to say that Mr. Nesbitt, Midshipman, was severely wounded. The firing having now almost entirely ceased, I gave directions for the boats of both divisions to land. Lieut. Dobree, who had charge of the first division, Mr. Rundle, Mate, and a Quartermaster of this ship, were the first on shore, and made for a 68-pounder, which had been fired at us several times, when a matchlock was fired at the Quartermaster by a man behind the gun, who was immediately cut down by him, and the first British flag was planted by Mr. Rundle. So completely were the enemy driven from all points (with the exception of the Island) by the fire of the ships, that the whole of the troops landed with the loss of only two men killed and three wounded. A partial firing was still kept up from the island, when I directed Lieut. Dobree (who had returned) with two Mates (Messrs. Steward and Rundle), with a party of seamen, and Lieut. Ayles with the Marines, amounting altogether to 50, to land and take possession of it. This was gallantly accomplished, the party ascending the heights, spiking and dismounting the guns, taking the flag which had been flying from the tower, and making prisoners of 180 armed Arabs, who were conducted from the island to the main by the party, and given over into the charge of Major Osborne. In an attempt to disarm the prisoners (made by the military) they made a most formidable resistance, and I regret to say that several lives were lost on both sides. Mr. Nesbitt, a Midshipman of the Mahe, was the only person hurt on board the squadron, and of the part of the military 16 were killed and wounded, most of them dangerously, and one Sergeant has since died. The enemy's guns were served badly and fired irregularly, they appearing to have most confidence in their matchlocks; and there can be no doubt that if it had not been for the total destruction of their defences by the squadron, the troops would not have been able to have so completely accomplished their landing without a very severe loss. I have not been able to ascertain the number of armed men that defended the town, but from what I can learn there must have been upwards of one thousand; nor can I come at the exact number that were killed or wounded, 25 dead bodies were found on the island of Seerah alone, several in the town, and at this moment there are 26 wounded lying in the Mosque, amongst whom is the Sultan's nephew, who defended the island. I beg to recommend to your notice the gallant conduct and services of Lieut. Dobree and Messrs. Stewart and Rundle (Mates); nor can I omit mentioning the assistance I received from Capt Haines, the political agent, who, from his local knowledge, piloted the ship in, which enabled me to take up so effective a position. I herewith transmit to your Excellency a plan of the attack (No. 2), and a list of the ordnance stores (No. 3) captured. Lieut. Dobree is now employed with a party of men in endeavouring to get off the three large brass Turkish guns, which it is the wish of the captors should be presented to Her Most Gracious Majesty. I intend to send the Cruiser to Berbera for water, and I shall leave this place as soon as tranquillity is restored, and measures are taken for the security of the troops. I have, &c. H. SMITH,

"Captain, commanding the Expedition.

"Hon. Company's sloop of war Coote, Aden Back Bay, Jan. 16.

"SIR—All negotiations with the chieftains of the Abdalla tribe having failed in bringing them to perform their written promise of transferring Aden to the British, and their having declared war by opening fire on the Hon. Company's sloop of war Coote, and her boats; in fact, after all reasoning and every strenuous endeavour has been exerted on the part of the Bombay government to bring the deceitful and dishonourable tribe to their senses by mild and conciliating measures have proved unavailing; I am under the necessity (as the last and only resource left to obtain satisfaction for the repeated insults offered to the British) to solicit force may be used to compel them to evacuate the ground ceded to the British under their Sultan's seal, in Jan., 1838. 2dly. I have, therefore, the honour to request that you will, with the squadron under your command, in co-operation with the troops under the command of Maj. Baillie, adopt such measures for the immediate capture and occupation of Aden, as may appear to you best calculated to obtain it. 3dly. I take the liberty of pointing out that many of the poor inhabitants of Aden have been compelled by the chieftains to remain there, consisting principally of Jews, Banians, and Zoorties; I therefore earnestly solicit that, if possible, their lives be preserved. 4th. I also beg that if fortune should place the Sultan or his sons, any chieftains or seids, in our possession, that their lives be spared; and that any individual so captured be secured to await future decision regarding them. 5th. Having a perfect knowledge of the localities of the place, I shall feel most happy to afford you any information on the subject; and if, from a thorough knowledge of the bay and anchorages, my services or advice be advantageous, I shall feel proud to accompany the Commander of any vessel or squadron in taking up a close position for the destruction of their strongest battery. I have, &c.,

"J. B. HAINES, Political Agent.

"To Capt. Smith, H.M.S. Volage, Senior Officer, Aden."

"Return of Brass and Iron Ordnance captured at Aden on 19th Jan., 1839.

"In battery, on carriages—1 brass eighty-five pounder, 1 brass sixty-eight pounder, 1 brass thirty-two pounder (dismounted by fire of the squadron), 1 iron eighteen-pounder (dismounted by fire of the squadron), 2 iron twelve-pounders, 5 iron nine-pounders (dismounted and thrown into the sea by sailors), 5 iron six-pounders, 1 iron four pounder, 5 iron three-pounders. Not in battery—1 brass eighty-nine pounder, 6 iron six-pounders, 1 iron four-pounder Total 34 guns. 2,000 pounds of powder, 1,200 shots of sizes (35 stone, 48 grape shot, 2 pigs of lead, 111 matchlocks.

PORTSMOUTH, March 29.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Dasher steamer arrived from Weymouth on Monday to be repaired, in consequence of some of the beams near the chimney having caught fire: she is lying alongside the Dock-yard, and will be fit to return to her station next week. Cleopatra came from the eastward on Tuesday, and is ordered to hoist the flag of Sir Thomas Harvey, K.C.B., and carry him out to the West Indies. Sir Thomas is expected in Portsmouth on Saturday or Sunday, and will sail immediately. The Winchester being the flag-ship, is to follow when ready. Mr. Woodman, the Secretary to the late Commander-in-Chief, is to continue, and not Mr. Triphook, as has been stated. Victor arrived from the East Indies yesterday: she was nearly four months from Trincomalee; was at the Cape on 2d Feb.; St. Helena, the 14th; and Ascension on the 19th Feb. No men-of-war were at either of these places, except the Columbine, and she was at the Cape. The Admiral and his squadron were cruising on different parts of the station. Victor is to be paid off all standing, upon the new plan about to be generally adopted, if found to answer in this case. Signals were made for her to have her powder ready for landing, and it was removed in the afternoon. Her Commander brought the pay-books on shore with him; and when the vessel is in harbour, and the victualling stores returned to the department, she will be handed over to the Admiral Superintendent, and the crew paid and discharged: this day not being one for work, will keep her in commission probably until Monday, otherwise there is no reason why she should not be cleared by Saturday evening. Victor has no news: she brought letters from Hyacinth, Algerine, and the other vessels in the East Indies; also Capt. Kingcome, late of the Wellesley, who was promoted on the Coronation. The officer sent to command at Ascension (Capt. Thuklar, R.M.), had arrived there after a pleasant and good passage. It is reported that orders have been sent for Adm. Sir Philip Durham to strike his flag next week, and for the Britannia to be paid off and re-commissioned by Capt. Ellice, for the flag of Admiral the Honourable E. Fleeming; if so, both these movements will take place before the 5th. Diligence transport is here, on her way to the western yards with stores, and the Boadicea transport to wait orders. The Powerful is still at Spithead; she obtains but few volunteers, and will probably have to be completed by a draft of the new-raised men on board Britannia. Curlew and Waterwitch are fitting in the basin by these people, and probably, when the dirty and hard work is over, some seamen may enter for them. Snipe has a few men. Ætna is in the harbour with sails bent and ready for service, and will be packed off next week to Bristol, Liverpool, &c., if there are any seamen ready to be removed from those ports to the flag-ship. Revenge has had her copper finished, and is lying alongside the jetty ready for her masts to be put in. Clio waits the crew of the Scylla. Childers is nearly ready. Indus is in dock having her copper put on and ballast put in; she will go up the harbour next spring-tides. The day is not yet fixed for launching the Royal Sovereign; a bust of the Queen is making, to be affixed as the figure-head. Ships in Port—Powerful, Cleopatra, and Boadicea at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Victor, Ætna, Waterwitch, Curlew, Snipe, Dasher and Messenger steamers, Diligence transport in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, March 29.—(From our own Correspondent.)—22d. Arrived Harpy, Lieut.-Com. John S. Ellman, from Milford, and came into harbour the following day, to be paid off. 24th—Arrived City of Londonderry, peninsular steam-packet, having landed the Lisbon mail at Falmouth the same day. 25th—Rhadamanthus, steam-frigate, Com. A. Wakefield, was paid wages, and proceeded for Malta, touching at Lisbon on her way out. 26th—Arrived Meteor, st.-v., Lieut.-Com. R. D. Pritchard, from Portsmouth, and sailed again on the 28th for Pembroke, with provisions for the party of men who took the Windsor Castle, 74, to that port. Also arrived Lively, lighter, from Portsmouth; and Steale, tender to Astrea, from Falmouth, with old stores, and returned to that port the next day with stores for the packets. The Aid, lighter, also sailed for Pembroke with stores. 28th—Scylla, 16, Com. Hon. J. Denman, was paid off into ordinary this day. 29th—It is expected Inconstant, 37, Capt. D. Pring, will move into the Sound this day, and it is currently reported she will take out Vice-Adm. Sir F. Harvey to the W. Indies. Sterling Castle, 74, will be taken into dock on Monday next, to be fitted for a convict hulk. By a letter from Talbot, 28, Capt. H. Codrington, we learn that she was to be hove down at Malta, to ascertain what damage she had received by getting on shore at the Isle of Tenedos, and if it can be repaired at Malta, she will not come to England as was intended. Rodney, 92, Captain Hyde Parker, was to leave Malta for England on 15th instant. Sixteen apprentices are ordered to be entered in the blacksmith department in this Dock-yard. The crew of the Malabar, 74, who were turned over to the Implacable, 74, Capt. E. Harvey, will be paid wages on Tuesday next; and the newly entered men will be paid wages in advance. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Inconstant, Harpy, Tyrian. In the Sound—Implacable.

MILFORD HAVEN, 27th March.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Windsor Castle was taken into dock at Pembroke Yard on Friday last, and preparations are being made by the workmen for taking her to pieces. The Gorgon, having in tow the Medusa, new steamer, left for Liverpool on Tuesday, at noon. She is to return here for orders. The Medusa was partly fitted, and jury-rigged at the dock-yard, before she left, and has hitherto had a most favourable wind. The Advice steamer for the service of the post office at this port is expected back from Holyhead in the early part of the ensuing month, with new boilers and other machinery repairs. The Pigmy will be sent round with her crew to take charge of her, in which vessels they have been running during the absence of the Advice. That splendid ship, the Superb, is complete in frame in the dock-yard. The Cyclops steamer will be launched there in the course of two or three months, as well as the Persian, 16 guns. Mr. Turner the new Foreman, joined last week, and Mr. Cheesema immediately left for Chatham.

DEPTFORD, 27th March.—Arrived—The Hero, for Australia; Morning Star, for the Cape and Trincomalee; Asia, for Bermuda; Blenheim, for Australia. Sailed—Isabella, for the Cape of Good Hope; Egyptian, for convicts; Alonzo transport for Plymouth; Buscarah, for Bristol, to embark emigrants. The contractors are repairing the double dock, and fitting new gates and entrance.

CHATHAM DOCKYARD.—No less than 27 of the best shipwrights in this dockyard have recently, within a fortnight, left their employment; and we believe that many of them have been engaged for the service of the Emperor of Russia. Thus the "penny wise and pound foolish" policy of the present Ministry is daily producing consequences, which, perhaps, they themselves did not contemplate. We hope, however, the evil itself will work its own cure, for surely the country will not allow its most skilful workmen, and bravest seamen, at the same moment, to quit their native land to build and man an enemy's fleet, at a time when their services at home are so much required. Well may the nations laugh at us if "England, the Mistress of the Seas," submit to this. We can give millions in support of a moonshine scheme in Ireland, but cannot afford to properly remunerate men by whose assistance alone we can even maintain our national existence.—Maidstone Journal.

ADMIRAL SIR ISAAC COFFIN.—The West of England Conservative and Plymouth and Devonport Advertiser of last week contains the following amende, for some unjustifiable remarks on this veteran and highly-respected officer:—

"It has been intimated to us from a quarter of high respectability, that the observations which we made some weeks since, relative to Sir Isaac Coffin, were more stringent than the circumstances which gave them origin would fairly justify. On giving them that reflection which, in the hurry of writing, we were unable to bestow on them, we feel bound to state our opinion that our language and statements were in some respects too highly coloured. With that frankness, therefore, which has ever distinguished us, we hasten to make all the reparation in our power to the gallant Admiral, convinced that our readers will give us credit for making it, not from any unworthy or sordid motives, but because the warmth of the moment has betrayed us into expressions which we should not have uttered under different circumstances; and if Sir Isaac Coffin has felt aggrieved either as a gentleman or a man of honour, we have no hesitation in expressing our sincere regret."

Mr. Allan, foreman of Portsmouth dockyard, whose appointment as Superintendent of ships building at Bombay we recently noticed, was formerly one of the students of Naval Architecture. He will have an Inspector and Foreman attached to his office, and proceed shortly to assume his duties.

H.M.S. Powerful, Capt. Napier, has, it seems, lost several men by desertion, and it is found impracticable to complete her crew for active service. This is said to be owing to the adoption of some novel mode of propelling the ship by a machine resembling a tread-wheel, which the sailors think degrading, as resembling the labour of convicts, and not that of their native element.—Times.

Vice-Admiral Sir F. Harvey, K.C.B., has appointed Mr. Thomas Woodman (secretary to the late Sir Charles Paget) his Secretary, and not Mr. Triphook, as has been stated in several of the papers.

We are happy to say that Rear-Admiral Sir Thomas Hardy, who has been ailing some time, is restored to perfect health. The gallant Governor is most highly esteemed at the Royal Hospital, and by a very extensive circle of professional friends.

Mr. D. P. Dumaresq, Mate of the Volcano, has been tried on board the Bellerophon, in Malta, 28th ult., on charges of misconduct made by a seaman of the said steamer, who had been on shore without leave, came off drunk, and was insolent, when the accused, as officer of the watch, ordered him in irons. Sir John Louis, Rear-Adm., President, and nine Captains. Mr. Dumaresq was most fully acquitted, and the President returned his sword, assuring him, in the most handsome manner, he left the Court "without the slightest stain or imputation on his character." He was warmly congratulated by every officer on retiring from the Court. The seaman in question was tried on board the Bellerophon, it is supposed to avoid further proceedings.

Orders are received to enter twenty petty officers for the Ordinary in the Medway, not to exceed 35 years of age.

The Lords of the Treasury have sanctioned the survey of the eastern coast of England, not alone for the purpose of building forts, as is generally reported, but also for the purpose of constructing harbours of refuge for H.M.'s smaller vessels, against the easterly and north-easterly gales. Lowestoft, Southwold, Hollesley Bay, and Harwich harbours, offer the most eligible sites for the purpose above named, and amongst these Harwich is understood to have a decided preference. In these works of the Government, it is not intended to prevent private companies from making docks basins or inland harbours. It is said that the Harwich southern pier will be made to terminate in a six-gun battery, and that a pier of a similar form will commence from the breakwater, and terminate 50 yards from the other pier head. This will be accessible at all times of the tide, and will be known by a green light.—Essex Times.

The Magistrates of Poole have awarded 200*l.* to H.M. rev. cutter Turtar, in the salvage case of the French brig Jean Marie and cargo, accompanied with strong commendation on the conduct of Lieut. Davies, R.N., the Commander, Mr. Leggett, the gunner, and Charles Stubbs, a mariner, who, at imminent risk, went on board to her assistance, as also upon Mr. Pritchard, R.N., the Mate, and officers who volunteered to go.

The Wolf, 18, Com. E. Stanley, was paid off into ordinary on Thursday se'nnight, as mentioned in our last, on which occasion the whole of the ship's company remained on board until every man was paid; and on the Captain's leaving the ship's side in the Admiral Superintendent's barge, the hardy and gallant crew expressed their attachment by three hearty British cheers; and declared their readiness, in case of his obtaining another appointment, to volunteer en masse to serve under him.

The Rodney.—The Queen Dowager visited, on Wednesday last, H.M.S Rodney, 92. Her Majesty was received with a royal salute, fired from all the ships of the squadron, and in passing to and from the Rodney the yards were manned. Capt. Hyde Parker attended Her Majesty to every part of that splendid ship. Her length being 205 feet, and her breadth of beam 54½, her decks afford great space for working her formidable batteries of long 32 pounders, and Her Majesty could not have a better opportunity of seeing the Naval exercise of gunnery. As soon as the wish was expressed, the men were piped to quarters, and went through their exercise, under the direction of Lieut. Wise, with the precision and alacrity for which Capt. Parker's officers and crew are justly remarkable in this branch of the service. One of the guns, weighing 56 cwt., was dismounted and replaced upon its carriage, in the course of three minutes, to the great surprise of Her Majesty and suite. The officers of the ship were afterwards presented to Her Majesty, who was graciously pleased to express her pleasure and satisfaction at having witnessed the good order and discipline with which so mighty an engine of war is managed, and the regularity with which each man, in a crew of 720, repairs to and acts at his proper post.—Malta Gazette, 6th March.

Deal.—V.-Adm. Sir T. Harvey took leave of his friends yesterday, and proceeded to Portsmouth, to join the Cleopatra, and assume his Command-in-Chief on the West India station. It is currently reported that a squadron will shortly assemble in the Downs, and proceed to sea on an experimental cruise during the summer.—Kent Herald.

Considerable armaments are talked of at Toulon. An evolution squadron, destined for the Levant, and to consist of ten ships of the line, four frigates, and five or six corvettes and brigs, is to assemble there in a month, under the command of V.-Adm. Rosamel, who will shortly be promoted to the rank of Admiral. Two Rear-Admirals, supposed to be Messrs. Casy and Lalande, are to command under his orders. The Prince de Joinville is to command the Thetis frigate.—Galignani.

Letters from the Ganges, 84, Capt. Reynolds, report that that ship is to remain at Lisbon until the arrival of the Powerful, 84, from Spithead, when she is to go on to Malta to send home the Rodney, 92. There was no news. Mr. Dyer, the Admiral's Secretary, had resigned his situation, and the vacancy had been given to the Chief Clerk. The ships in the Tagus were, Donegal, 78; Ganges, 84; Espoir, 10; and a French frigate.

It is the universal opinion among Naval Officers, that our men of war of every class should be fully and effectually manned, in order that the duty might be carried on with that degree of smartness and alacrity which was the by-gone war custom of the service; in order also, that in manœuvring in company with the national ships of other countries, our seamen may have the conscious pride of being enabled to out-do all their competitors; and still further, that, with the increased armaments, our seamen may entertain a confidence of success, in the event of any untoward or pre-meditated contest—that their colours may be proudly secure, as far as human power can defend them. It strikes us, therefore, that the Navy should make a movement in its own behalf, either by address to the Crown, by memorial to the Admiralty, or by petition to Parliament. The adoption of either method would greatly assist Sir Edward Codrington, who, shortly after Easter, will move a resolution in the House of Commons, in which he will be seconded by Capt. Lord Ingestrie, to the following effect:—"That the system of reducing the crews of H.M.'s ships in time of peace, below the number required to make them efficient in time of war, is injurious to the best interests of the service. That it is the opinion of this House, that all H.M.'s ships, when actively employed, or about to quit the British Channel, shall in future have but one complement of men, whether in peace or war."—The names we have mentioned will sufficiently show this is no party question as regards politics, but is purely a professional one—the gallant member for Devonport being a Radical, and the noble Lord an Ultra Tory,—and as Lord Melbourne defended and acknowledged the right of one of his colleagues to agitate on the Corn Laws, surely there can be no objection in the officers of the service agitating the propriety of effective or non-effective men of war.—Hants Telegraph.

The Admiralty have issued the Regulation which we mentioned some time since for an increase of pay to the Petty Officers, according to the following rates per mensem, viz.:—

We have the means of knowing that it was the late Lieutenant R. Standish Haly who suggested to the public and the Admiralty the necessity of more attention to Naval gunnery, in his pamphlet published in 1822, page 32.—Times.—[Our contemporary is correct, and we long since repeatedly stated this fact.—Ed N. & M. G.]

Royal Horse Guards, Blue—At the Wandsworth Petty Sessions, on Thursday, Capt. the Hon. Horace Pitt, of this corps, was brought up in custody of the police from Wimbledon Common, charged with intending to fight a duel. The Captain was called upon to enter into his own security in the sum of 500*l.*, and two sureties of 250*l.* each; Lord G. Gordon, and — Drummond, Esq., of Belgrave sq., became the sureties, and the party left for town. The name of the other party did not transpire, nor the cause of the intended duel.

3d Drag. Gds.—The officers have established races each fortnight at Huddersfield.

2d Drags.—The troop from Athlone and Longford to Ballinamuck, in aid of the civil power, (to return when dispensed with), 4th April.

12th Lancers.—Private W. Johnstone, who wantonly fired a loaded pistol at his comrade, at Chichester, is sentenced to six months' imprisonment—the first and last months of which are to be in solitude, and the four intervening months with hard labour.

Infantry.

1st Foot, 1st Batt.—Two cos., under Maj. Mullen, were last week sent from Edinburgh to Dundee, in consequence of apprehensions having been entertained of disturbances at an execution of a man condemned to death for the murder of his son. They have since returned to head-quarters.

6th—The head-quarters arrived at Colaba, Bombay, on 17th Jan. from Poona, where a wing of the 41st, under Lieut.-Col. Booth, had relieved them; the right wing, 41st, was at Belgaum.

There is no truth whatever in the report generally current for some days, that a battle has taken place in Scinde. The rumour that H.M.'s 6th reg. will be forthwith despatched to that country is equally unfounded. Sawunt Warree was quiet up to the date of our last arrivals.—Bombay Times, 19th Jan.

14th Depot—The command at Brecon has devolved upon Captain Haslewood.

21st—The Hobart Town paper of 30th Oct., announces the arrival of the Coromandel, with First Lieut. Faunce, Second Lieut. Martin, and five privates. Lieuts. Mortimer and Deare, and six r. and f., arrived at Hobart Town from Sydney, on 12th Oct., in the Marian Watson.

29th—Assist. Surgeon Dr. Hawkey is on leave for two months. The sentence of the General Court-Martial lately held on a private of this regt., for repeated acts of insubordination, has been made public; he is sentenced to seven years transportation, as a felon, to New South Wales.

32d Depot—Maj. Wingfield has left Fermoy for England, preparatory to embarking to join the service cos. Brevet-Maj. Birtwhistle has assumed the command of the depot.

34th—It will be seen, by our Parliamentary Report of Wednesday, that the conduct referred to in our last was noticed in the House of Commons.

"It has been represented to us, from a quarter upon which we implicitly rely, that a paragraph in the last number of our paper respecting the alleged desertion from the 34th, stationed at Malden, is entirely erroneous. For the character of the noble British soldier we entertain a high regard; delighted shall we always be to see him true to his Queen and country, abhorring all connection with the U. States, whose citizens are always too happy to seduce him from his duty and allegiance, and having done so, to discard and basely turn their backs upon him."—Montreal Gazette.

10th—Adm. Sir F. Maitland sailed from Bombay in the middle of last January for the port of Mandaree, in Cutch, there to take on board H.M.'s 40th Regt., which marched from Deesa in Dec., via Raddinpoor, and through the lower part of Cutch to Mandaree. The Wellesley was to proceed with the 40th to Kurachee Bunder, and then to return to Bombay.

43d—The Speaker, in a sitting of the House of Assembly of New Brunswick, on 15th Jan., read the following letter:—

SIR,—For the very handsome and liberal grant of the House of Assembly of the Province of New Brunswick, in aid of the soldiers' wives and children who were left in the province this last winter, when the troops proceeded to Canada, I beg you will do me the honour to accept, yourself, and convey to your hon. house, the warmest thanks and acknowledgments of myself, as commanding the 43d regiment, of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates, and more particularly of those married soldiers whose wives and children have derived so great additional comfort and assistance, by the generous vote of your hon. house. I have, &c., H. BOOTH, Lieut. Colonel Commanding 43d Regiment.

The Hon. the Speaker, &c.

45th—This regt., under the command of Major Armstrong, in the absence of Col. Vigoureux, has replaced the 1st Batt. Rifle Brigade at Windsor. The 43th, which has not returned more than a year from the East Indies, has added a considerable number of recruits to its ranks, being at present between 800 and 900 strong. It was stationed at Canterbury during the Courtenay riot, and Lieut. Bennett, who was killed in that sad affair, was a distinguished officer of the corps. The band, which is an exceedingly good one, enlivens the town every morning on relieving guard, and from the novelty and elegance of their dress, and their excellent performances, attract general notice.—Windsor Paper.

46th—The Post has alarmed the Military circles with a circumstantial statement from its own "Dublin Correspondent," to the effect that "A very melancholy account had reached that city of a quarrel between the 46th and 82d regts., now quartered in Gibraltar. It ended in a regular fight, in which, it is said, Col. Campbell, 46th, was killed." We have authority to state that there is not a syllable of truth in the statement. A common canteen row had taken place some time previously, which was dealt with by the usual application of common Military discipline; and at the date of the last letters to the War-office (Feb. 24), the garrison was perfectly quiet and healthy.

46th Depot—at Plymouth, change quarters with the 47th Depot, at Jersey.

48th Depot—Ensign Corcoran having returned home from leave from Gibraltar, is ordered to join the depot. Two Ensigns are ordered to hold themselves in readiness to embark at Cork to join the service cos. Lieut. G. S. Tidy has been appointed Act. Paymaster, in succession to the late Lieutenant Stubbs.

54th—Extract of a letter.—"The old Flamers muster 620 bayonets for any service, ready and willing to do anything their country requires; they have two Lieut.-Colonels (old Peninsular men), with 25 other officers now in India."

55th—The Secunderabad Barrack Job is one of the most atrocious affairs ever heard of in Military History; and shows that the health of the Queen's troops is a very secondary consideration in this Presidency. The mortality in this corps, which has been for some time quartered in that said barrack, amounted last year to 150!!—Madras U. S. Gazette.

58th—Will not return this year to England.

59th Depot—Detachment of 70 r. and f., from Mullingar to Ballinamuch, in aid of the civil power, (to return when dispensed with,) 4th April.

61st—This corps will not return this year to this country.

67th Depot—The Acting Paymastership is vacant by the promotion of Lieutenant Byrne to a company.

68th Depot—Major Huey, Capt. Gillman, Lieuts. Ouvry and Wynne, are on the list of stewards for the Waterford fancy ball.

70th—Major-Gen. Sir J. Harvey has sustained a severe loss by the death of his son and A.D.C., Capt. Harvey, of this reg., at Fredericton, in his 31st year. The company goes to Lieut. Kelsall, Fort-Adjut. at St. Kitt's, a near relative of the Lieut.-Col. of the 70th.

71st Depot—From Buttevant to Cork, 27th and 28th Mar.

73d—Assist.-Staff Surg. Dawson has arrived in Limerick garrison, and is attached to this depot.

74th—Lieut. Evans has arrived at the mansion of his father, Ash-hill Towers, Ireland, after serving five years in the West Indies.

76th—Capt. and Brev.-Major Fitz-Gerald is now the last survivor of four brothers, who devoted their lives to the service of their country in the Army, viz.—Major A. Fitz-Gerald, 49th; Major T. Fitz-Gerald, 41st; and Capt. E. Fitz-Gerald, 48th.

83d—Lieut.-Col. the Hon. H. Dundas and the officers of the reg., gave a splendid ball and supper on Monday evening, at the Tête de Pont Barracks, to the garrison and inhabitants of Kingston. The company, from two to three hundred, appeared much pleased with the entertainments. Dancing commenced about half-past nine, and continued till four in the morning, under the enchanting influence of the charming band of the reg. Much taste was displayed in the decorations of the rooms, and the supper was greatly admired for its elegance. Nothing 85th—We have elsewhere contradicted the report of the death of the gallant and universally esteemed Colonel of this corps, Lieut.-General Sir Herbert Taylor.

The Speaker of the House of Assembly of N. Brunswick, in the sitting of 15th Jan., read the following letter:—

SIR,—I have just been made aware of the handsome grant of money voted by the House of Assembly of N. Brunswick, to relieve the soldiers' wives who were left at St. John's when the 85th reg. was ordered to proceed to Canada in Dec. last. Be pleased to convey to the hon. house my grateful sense of the assistance thus afforded by them. The kindness received from the inhabitants by the different divisions of the reg. on their march through the province, demands also our warmest thanks. Without that claim to their friendship which a long residence amongst them might inspire, the just cause which we were about to maintain was deemed a sufficient reason to extend it to us. Generosity is the character of Britain and her sons; and the generous conduct of the people of N. Brunswick adds to the many proofs they have given, that theirs are truly British hearts. It is gratifying to find that, in asserting the supremacy of our most gracious Sovereign, H.M.'s troops are acting in unison with the feelings of her loyal subjects in the N. American provinces; who, though resident at a distance from the shores of old England, reverence her institutions, and are prepared to defend the genuine freedom which they secure. I have, &c. F. MAUNSELL, Lieut.-Col. 85th reg.

The Hon. the Speaker, &c.

93d—Capt. H. P. Bourchier, appointed Fort-Major of Prescott garrison, and to assist Col. Young in the organization of the Militia, has assumed the duties of his office.

94th and 95th—On arriving at Ceylon from England were to proceed to Bombay, as a temporary arrangement.

99th—Private J. M'Donald, stationed at Shannon Bridge, fell over the battlements of the bridge, and after struggling for some time was unfortunately drowned. Detachment of 100 r. and f. from Athlone to Ballinamuck, and detachment of 30 r. and f. from Longford to Ballinamuck, in aid of the civil power, to return when dispensed with.

2d West India Regt.—In consequence of a renewal of warfare in the republic of Central America, Lieut. Elliott was sent in Jan. last, by Her Majesty's Superintendent of Honduras, to the port of Omoa, to claim security for the persons and property of the English and other foreign residents, a mission which was most satisfactorily accomplished. This officer had been sent some months previous to this occurrence, to the same place, to demand satisfaction from the Governor for an outrage committed against a British vessel, and succeeded in obtaining the release of the Captain, who was confined in the Fort, an indemnity of 100*l.* for his imprisonment, and a written apology for the insult offered to the British flag.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—Stephen Austen, tried for stealing the mess plate, and also for desertion and making away with his Military necessaries, is sentenced to be transported for seven years. Private Patrick Brine, with two or three aliases, for repeated desertions, also to be transported for seven years. Both to be branded with the letter D. Capt. Freer's comp., 6th batt., under orders for Ireland to replace Major Lock's comp., 8th batt., at Dublin, is to march for London on Monday afternoon, to be billeted there that night, and proceed for Liverpool the following morning by railroad; and Major Lock's comp. will be removed to Cork for embarkation for Halifax, on the arrival of Capt. Freer's.

ROYAL ENGINEERS—The Master-General has ordered Capt. Forbes to do duty in Ireland.

MILITIA.—Government-house, Guernsey, 21st March, 1839.—His Excel. the Lieut.-Governor, has been pleased to approve of the following promotion taking place in the 1st Regt. of Rl. Guernsey Militia:—Lieut. Charles Mauger Guerin to be Capt., v. Sheppard, who has left the island; commission dated 4th Dec., 1838. By command of his Excel. Major-Gen. Sir James Douglas, E. MARTIN, Deputy Inspector.

Particulars of some experiments on firing gunpowder under water by the voltaic battery, tried on Saturday last at Chatham:—1. A rough fir vessel, 5 feet long, 3½ feet wide, and 2½ feet deep, was previously sunk opposite the Gun-wharf, to represent the wreck of a ship, having a ring and lines attached to it, which are supposed to be placed by a diver after the vessel has been sunk. 2. A charge of 40lb. of powder was let down from a boat, and hauled into close contact with the supposed wreck, by means of the lines and ring beforementioned. The coil containing the conducting wires, one-fifth of an inch in diameter, by which this charge was fired, was veered out to its whole length of 500 feet, from the same boat. 3. On the signal being given from the boat by a bugle to denote that all was ready, the signal to fire was made also by the bugle. The explosion succeeded admirably. A column of water was thrown up by it, and the fragments of the vessel came up to the surface. 4. Three charges, each of 5lb. of powder, were sunk at the distance of about 30 or 40 feet from each other, opposite to the Gun-wharf, having a pair of connecting wires 150 feet long attached to each. The ends of these wires were soldered together by threes, and brought to the two poles of the voltaic battery, which had previously been removed from the boat after the first operation, and placed on the wharf, by which the charges were fired simultaneously, after two bugle sounds as before. Two of the three charges were exploded simultaneously, and the third was prevented from doing so by a fracture in one of the conducting wires. The battery used was of Professor Daniell's improved construction. The wires in the last experiment were common copper bell-wires, about a sixteenth of an inch in diameter, which were only used from not having any more of the former description. The experiments succeeded perfectly, and to the great delight of thousands of spectators. They were preparatory to blowing to pieces the wreck of the Royal George, at Spithead, in 1782, and which has a number of very valuable brass guns, of large calibre, on board of her, all of which will be recovered after the demolition of the wreck.—Maidstone Journal.

The barracks at Chatham are now so crowded with recruits for India, that very great difficulty has been found in accommodating the 15th Hussars.

We regret to hear that Lieut. Harnett, the Garrison Adjutant at Chatham, is seriously indisposed. At this moment his zealous and able services are much missed by Col. Waire, C.B.

The following circular, relative to the inspection of the Yeomanry Cavalry, has been addressed to the Lords Lieutenant of counties. This circular appears to be merely the usual official intimation which has been annually issued since Lord John Russell's accession to office in 1835:—

"Whitehall, March 14th, 1839.

"My Lord,—I have the honour to inform your Lordship, that an inspection of the Yeomanry Cavalry by field officers of Her Majesty's regular forces, will take place in the present year, and that all corps which shall assemble on permanent duty, or for training and exercise, are to be inspected during their respective periods of assembly. As soon as the precise time and place at which the corps in the county under your charge would wish to be inspected shall be fixed, I request that you will notify the same to me, in order that the necessary directions may be given for the attendance of the officer who shall be selected for the duty of inspecting them. It will be necessary that the Commandants shall be exact in specifying the duty for which their respective corps wish to assemble; whether upon permanent duty, or for training and exercise, under the 40th and subsequent sections of the Volunteer Act; and, further, that the time and place which are once fixed for the inspection of a corps should, if possible, be adhered to.—I have, &c. "J. RUSSELL.

"Her Majesty's Lieutenant of the ——."

A Court of Inquiry has assembled at Enniskillen, for the purpose of investigating charges preferred by the 38th regt. against the barrack department at that station

The depots of the 28th, 50th, 54th, and 80th Regts., have been ordered to proceed next week to Canterbury, under the command of Major Clark, 54th Regt. The 15th Hussars, for certain reasons, cannot be sent to Canterbury.

QUEEN'S GENERAL OFFICERS IN INDIA.

We have every reason to rely upon information communicated to us, that Sir Lionel Smith had been offered the command of the Bengal Army, whom we can cordially congratulate on such an appointment. Sir Lionel, when at Bombay, was a most popular officer, and in his examination before the House of Commons, on the inquiry into the state of the Indian Army, objected most strongly to the half-batta measure. Military allowances, even before that, he asserted, were at a minimum, and no further reduction could be made without great injustice. With such an officer at their head, the interests of the Army will receive that degree of attention which they have never received since the Marquess of Hastings' time.—Madras U. S. G., Dec. 28.

Lieut.-General Sir Jasper Nicolls.—The Commander-in-Chief's first Levee, held on Friday last, was numerously attended by the members of the Military, Medical, and Civil Services, as well as many other gentlemen resident at the Presidency, all anxious to be presented to His Excellency, who subsequently received the native officers stationed at Madras—a mark of attention which we are told was highly gratifying to them; but Sir J. Nicolls is not new to the feelings of the native Army, so large a portion of which has already had the honour of serving under His Excellency, and who still remember the acts of considerate attention to their interests which marked his divisional command, with a degree of grateful feeling—the expression whereof, though it may never reach the Com.-in-Chief, would, we are very sure, be most pleasing to him should it chance to do so.—Ib., Jan. 1.

Lieut.-General Sir Peregrine Maitland.—This officer embarked on board the Colombo, under the usual salutes yesterday evening. His Excellency's departure was attended by all possible honours. The King's Own Regt. of Foot, with two corps of N.I., and the body guard, formed a street from the Wallajah to the Sea Gate of the Fort, through which our late highly-respected Com.-in-Chief passed, accompanied by Lord Elphinstone, Sir Jasper Nicolls, Mr. Sullivan, Mr. Lushington, Sir E. Gambier, the principal Civil and Military authorities, and other gentlemen resident at the Presidency, all anxious to testify their respect for the public and private character of Sir P. Maitland.—Ib., Jan. 4.

Major-General Thackwell arrived at Ferozepore on 9th Dec., and immediately assumed command of the division of Cavalry proceeding beyond the Indus. The General had not much time to look about him, considering that the division was to march with the Commander of the Forces and Staff on the following morning. But an old soldier is "toujours prêt," and requires but little time to spring from the palanqueen to the saddle.

Command of the Bengal Army.—The Hon. General Ramsay will exercise the command of the Bengal Army until the arrival of a successor to Sir H. Fane.

Sir Henry Fane, accompanied by his A.D.C., Capt. Hay and Dr. Wood, were, says the Delhi Gazette, to embark at Ferozepore on 15th Dec., and drop down the Indus, en route to England, via Bombay. [This we have contradicted in our leading remarks. —Ed. N. and M. Gazette.]

The late Sir Patrick Lindesay was not present at the Burmese War, as has been reported, but he commanded the Army that invaded the Coorg country, and captured the Rajah. The country was attacked by five columns, commanded by Colonels Foulis, Stewart, Jackson, Waugh, and Sir Patrick in Chief. Jackson was baffled by the difficulties of his route, but without a shadow of impeachment of his skill or conduct. Waugh was beaten, and Col. Mills, of the 55th, was killed. Lindesay heard of Waugh's defeat; it was midnight: he kept the sad information to himself, roused his troops from their bivouac, advanced in forced march on the Coorg capital, and received the Rajah as prisoner but half an hour earlier than the arrival of a despatch to inform the Rajah that his Coorg men had beaten the English. The Rajah declared, that had his messenger arrived before Lindesay, he would have defended his capital to the last. Had he so done, all India would have been in revolt. Lindesay's conduct was of the school of Wellington. An ordinary-minded General would have delayed—a very scientific one would have adjusted the checked column before he resumed his own advance. Lindesay, a stately-minded man, rushed forward and saved the Indian Government, blood and treasure to an immense amount; and, on his returning to England, the Board of Directors paid him his prize-money most liberally, viz., in the most depreciated currency of the rupee, robbing this good and gallant soldier of about three-halfpence in each rupee or 2*s.* The rupee is that coin which the Government issues at 2*s.* 8*d.*, and will only receive at 1*s.* 10*d.*—or did until very lately so. Sir Patrick was personally known to the Duke of Wellington, and was a visitor at Apsley House, in itself for an officer a certificate of soldiership.

Tonnage has been tendered for, to take out 1200 men to India during April. We shall give the names of the vessels next week. The Essex, Childe Harold, and Bombay, are already taken up for troops.

There are six Adjutancies vacant in the English Militia.

By the latest accounts, Col. Doherty, Governor at Sierra Leone, enjoys good health in that colony.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

At a General Court-Martial, assembled at Neemuch, on 17th Dec., 1838, Lieut. James Oatley, 39th N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—For having absented himself from his regiment without leave, from 16th Sept., 1837, to 30th July, 1838.

The Court found the prisoner guilty of the charge preferred against him, and sentenced him to be suspended from rank, and pay, and allowances, for the period of six calendar months.

(Confirmed) John Ramsay, Major-Gen.

At a General Court-Martial, assembled at Deesa, 10th Dec. 1838, Ens. Charles Podmore, 6th N.I., was tried on the following charge:—For scandalous conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and gentleman, in having struck with his fist Lieut. Henry Valiant, H.M.'s 40th reg. on or about the night of 17th Oct., 1838, near to the mess house of H.M.'s 40th reg.

Additional Charge.—For scandalous conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having gone to the quarters of Capt Wilson, Major of Brigade, Deesa Field Force, on or about the 20th Oct., 1838, and there falsely stated that he had the permission of Major Farrell to wait on Capt. Wilson, for the purpose of recalling his letter, tendering his resignation of the Hon. Company's service, under date 19th Oct., 1838.

The Court found the prisoner, with respect to the first charge, guilty of an offence like conduct only, in having struck the blow.

That he is, with respect to the additional charge, most fully and honourably acquitted.

The Court having found the prisoner guilty to the extent above specified, sentenced him to be severely reprimanded.

Confirmed (but not approved), J. F. Fitzgerald, Major-Gen.

Remarks by Major-Gen. Sir J. F. Fitzgerald, Commanding Officer of the Forces.—The impracticability of re-assembling the Court, in consequence of the march of H.M.'s 40th regiment from Deesa, has alone prevented the Major-General commanding the Forces from directing a revision, both of the finding and sentence, as he cannot concur in the correctness of the former, and considers the latter to be in every respect inadequate. For the high tone of feeling which ought at all times to actuate and govern the behaviour of one officer towards another, independent of what is due to society at large, most distinctly points out that the infliction of a blow should never be viewed but as an act "unbecoming the character of a gentleman," by which an officer fully and justly incurs the loss of his commission, and no extenuating circumstance in favour of Ens. Podmore (if such could ever exist in cases of this nature) appears on the proceedings.

The Major-General, therefore, in confirming the above most incommensurate sentence, and giving effect to the award of the Court, has to express his most marked and severest censure on the conduct of Ens. Podmore; and hopes that the escape which that officer has now experienced, will have a beneficial effect on his future conduct, and that he will henceforth regulate his temper and demeanour by the strictest rules of propriety.

Ensign Podmore is to be released from arrest, and ordered to return to his duty.

The combined armies of Austria, Prussia, and the Germanic confederation, amount, according to the calculations of a Frankfort paper, to 1,400,000 men—700,000 furnished by Austria, 400,000 by Prussia, and 300,000 by the other States of the Confederation.

THE NEW ARMAMENT FOR SHIPS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—With feelings of great pleasure and interest I have perused your excellent table of the New Armament for the Navy. That the improvement is immense must strike every one; still there are some few objections which, I think, upon consideration, the Admiralty will see and alter; the greatest error is the allowing that wretched, weak, small old-class 42's, viz., Belvidera, Brilliant, Owen Glendower, and Havannah, of only 940 tons, without one good quality, to go to sea again as frigates, when it is notorious to every Naval man that they are only fit for troop ships or razeeing. With their old armament, 18-pounders only, they were incapable of sailing or standing up under canvass, and with two 68's and twenty-eight 32's they will not certainly be improved in those qualities, and their increase of armament will be of little service. I know that Captain Stopford, who lately commanded Belvidera, reported against her in the strongest terms, as wanting in every good quality requisite for a man-of-war. She was very crank, inwardly, slow, and cramped up; he recommended her also either to be razeed or made a trooper; and the Admiralty, upon his report, went so far as to order her to be made a coal depot of, and she was begun upon for this purpose; shortly after came down orders to repair her for active service again! Now can anything be so foolish? We are wanting sadly in the two arms above mentioned, heavy corvettes, of which we have but four, and troop ships, and if the late news from Canada be true, we shall soon want plenty of the latter. Anything is better than sending these worthless craft to sea again as frigates, and I should hope the Admiralty would see this. The armaments of all the new-class ships built by the present Surveyor are decidedly good, with few exceptions. You have doubtless read Captain Napier's letter, and so seen his proposed plan to increase Pique's class to 40 guns and Vestal's to 30, for which number they are pierced, and certainly should carry. The idea is applauded by all Naval men, and the size and tonnage of these ships entitle them to such; if they give Blonde and her class of only 1106 tons 42 guns, surely Pique of 1622 tons, and such superior qualities, can carry 40. Again, if such a miserable class as Belvidera can bear 38 guns, surely Vestal class of 918 tons can carry 30! This is but reason. Certainly Pique's class, 160 feet long, could have 12 ports besides the bridle on main-deck, instead of only 11, and 16 on upper deck, instead of 14 only! Madagascar, but 154 feet long, has 14 ports, besides the bridle on main-deck! The increase of Calypso class from 18 to 20, is upon the principle of Captain Napier's suggestion, and is an improvement. Rover and Modeste's armament is also now as it should be; but I certainly think the armament given to the new large-class brigs, as Pilot, Grecian, &c., 105 feet long, and 33 feet six inches beam, is not sufficient; they are five feet longer than the other brigs, and have three inches more beam than Modeste, (carrying 18 medium long 32's) in proportion their powers ought to be greater, and could very well carry the medium guns all through. To say that they are only equal to carry two more long 32's than the old 16's is preposterously absurd, if not, what avails their increase in size and tonnage? Why the Snake and Racer class ought to carry two more long 32's than the old 16's! I now come to the last objection, viz., the 10-gun brigs; the armament given is but eight 18-pounder carronades, and two long 18's. Now all the old 10's average 530 tons, and are pierced with eight ports aside; why not then let them have 12 guns? Waterwitch and Pantaloon are 100 tons larger, viz, 831, are pierced with seven ports a side, and could well carry ten 24-pounder carronades, and two long 18's, or at least eight 24's and two long 18's. All the American schooners and brigantines carry twelve 24-pounder carronades, as do the French, and so ought all our new 10-gun brigs. Waterwitch is going to South America, where she will fall in with the aforesaid American schooners, &c., and in case of a brush, by no means unlikely, how would her 18-pounder carronades answer? I fear her wand or witch-craft would be useless!

TRUE BRITON.

P.S. I forgot to say that I think Vernon and Warspite are fully equal to carry two or four more 68's than the other razees, the former being upwards of 300 tons larger, and the latter near 200.

STEAM FLOTILLA.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Our friend Tristram seems disposed to be a little combative with Messrs. the "Flag Officer" and Co., for exposing what I know was "the state of the Navy;" and it is singular that Tristram and self, who have, I believe, no party bias in discussions relative to the service, should differ on this important point; but I have been a resident in one of our principal Naval ports for very many consecutive years, and constant in my perambulations through the Dock-yard, &c, and do say, that, however unpalatable, still it is the duty of officers to rouse the spirit of proper precaution, as regards the defence of the country, when lethargic torpor hovers over its bulwarks. Tristram cannot be more blind than others to the threatening aspect of the political horizon. Sir John Barrow has not ably answered the "Flag Officer;" and as regards Sir John's enumeration of our steam flotilla, every one conversant with the Royal Navy knows that Great Britain had but five war steamers (one or two have, I believe, been recently added), or seven at most—all the rest being packets—and not a few of them totally incapable of being armed. But what are our war steamers compared with the following list, now before me, of Russian steamers? viz.:—one carrying a mortar cannon of 120 pdrs., two other guns of 64 pdrs, and four smaller guns of 24 pdrs.; one steamer carrying twenty guns; eleven armed with from four to six guns each; making thirteen large armed steamers, besides a steam yacht. Now, in Tristram's system of combating the Russian Navy, he takes no notice whatever of the steam flotilla; and I am very sure that he does not suppose they are to look idly on (for doubtless they would accompany an invading fleet of liners) whilst our steamers "take or destroy every one of their liners." Tristram, I fear, is prone to give in to the common practice of underrating the advance of our northern neighbours; we seldom see them; are loth to take the opinion of those who have scrutinised them; ridicule the crews of their vessels as soldiers (who, by the by, with their practice, are peculiarly calculated for steam warfare); and discard the possibility of their progressing in science and skill—their courage was never, I believe, doubted,—yet Tristram says, "With half the number [he proposes thirty steamers in divisions of ten each, as the whole force for England] ready to act, we shall probably never have occasion to try their powers;" and to evince his contempt of their prowess, he subsequently erases the word "probably." With deference, however, to Tristram, I will assert, that "soldiers," as their Naval crews may be, they are far superior to our ordinaries—not to mention landsmen, which compose so prominent a portion of British crews. The "Flag Officer" and other writers on Naval affairs are biased by the same motives which actuate both Tristram and myself; and though some of their statements may be erroneous in detail, from the impossibility of procuring minute information,—officers being prohibited now-a-days from entering the store-lofts, even though with a demand for stores in their hand, and a uniform coat on their backs,—yet, in the essential points, I know them to be correct. Our partiality for friends must not render us blind to their failings; and if our rulers are found napping, it is our duty to awaken them—gently, I grant, but every man does not command a gentleness of manner, and we must excuse him accordingly.

AN OLD SAILOR.

DISTINCTIONS FOR SERVICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I perceive that the Subalterns of the wars of Wellington, whether on full-pay, half-pay, shelved, or dished, have still a vain expectation that that humbug eclept a "grateful country," is about to bestow a medal or decoration upon the most distinguished of the survivors, to hang at the button-holes of their threadbare surtouts! I beg to say, Mr. Editor, that unless the constituted authorities for the time being make haste, there will not be a soul of them alive to hang this national boon upon. I therefore have to suggest, in case of such an accident, that the decoration, or whatever it may be, should be fashioned in such a manner that it may be conveniently affixed to a coffin-lid—there is no occasion to have them larger than a waterman's badge, but just of a sufficient size to maintain John Bull's reputation of a want of taste. Moreover, to suit the economy of the age, they might be cast in lead or iron, which would be also a handsome and appropriate compliment to those poor devils, who, through a series of years of privations and dangers, expected nothing less than to make their exit through the honourable and humane intervention of those two precious metals.

VETERAN.

Stanmore, 24th March.

THE BRITISH MILITARY SYSTEM.—(THE DRILL.)

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Having detailed a few of the temptations to which the recruit is exposed on his enlistment, we will now follow him to his regiment or depot, where, having received his clothing and kit, the next step in his career is Drill. "Ominous word!" how much of a soldier's happiness and future conduct depend upon this his second step (I say second, though a glance at the "Fiddle Ward" would not be out of place, especially if reference was made to a celebrated "establishment for the cure of cutaneous disorders" not a hundred miles from Chatham). Many persons, being merely spectators, may imagine—such is the general approbation of gymnastic exercises—that club-drill, extension motions, balance-step, slow and double time, are all very amusing; and so they are, provided the recruit is under the tuition of a Serjeant or Corporal who, blending instruction with exercise, studies the feelings of the recruit equally with the good of the service. But how seldom is this the case? Accompany me to the "drill ground," or "lines," and mark the quivering lip and flushed countenance of many a fine lad, though a simple recruit, who is anxious to acquit himself with credit, but becomes stupid and consequently awkward, under the vituperation or delicate epithets of some bullying Non-Commissioned, whose presence, every time he attends drill, is an injury, rather than benefit, to the service. Would to God that Commanding Officers of regiments, depots, or detachments, from the Colonel to the Adjutant, were more sensible of the disgust engendered in a man's mind, when, instead of the patient course of instruction best adapted to bringing on the tyro in Military drill, coarse abuse, threatening gestures, or taunting expressions are resorted to, accompanied, not unfrequently, by a ridiculous mimicry of the recruits' first attempts, more becoming a mountebank than a Drill-Serjeant! These exhibitions would be crushed, Sir, by the mere occasional presence of an officer known to discourage violent language, never making use of it himself, nor allowing it in others. I need not, I trust, assure you, Sir, that I am well aware of the manner in which the temper of the drill non-commissioned officer is frequently tried, but this only proves the necessity of the instructor having his feelings under control: violent language, or passionate demeanour, not only discourages the pupil and irritates his passions, making him sulky and careless, but recoils on the person using it, and lowers him in the estimation of the squad generally. In following out these or any future remarks, personalities, or allusion to any particular corps will be strictly avoided, but I am bound to observe that the evil complained of in this letter is of more frequent occurrence in "crack corps" than others: the mild and patient system, as followed by many regiments, is worthy of imitation, as the effect is seen by the erect bearing and contented countenances of their recruits. The variety of characters entering the Army is, I freely admit, an excuse for the errors a man may commit while drilling a squad: intelligence, stupidity, activity, indolence, pliability, obstinacy, willingness, and a desire to learn, carelessness or indifference, soberness and drunkenness, may stand side by side in a squad of 15 or 20 men, and offer very trying difficulties to the teacher; but his end will be fully answered, and his temper unruffled, by a determined but mild course of instruction: the stubborn must be checked, the careless roused—but not by violence. The fiery colt is not trained to the manage by blows on the head, towelling his sides or flank, and lacerating his tongue: but a firm seat, playful feel of his head, occasional remonstrances with whip or spur; frequently leading him, until the object be passed, or the desired movement performed, and his ride completed.

Let then our young soldier find his Drill what it really is, if properly conducted, pleasing to the mind, and invigorating to the body, that, when he is removed from the squad to the battalion, he may enter into the spirit and comprehend the nature of every movement; and though an automaton, as regards his place in the column, he may be a living and indomitable spirit in the execution of its purposes.

OBSERVER.

CHANGES IN NAVAL APPOINTMENTS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I am highly delighted to find the subject of "Change in the Civil Situations of our Naval and Victualling Yards" so ably introduced into your columns by Captain Argo, particularly as it has already been decided upon by the Admiralty that some of them should have but a periodic endurance—to wit, the Superintendent, the Director of Police, &c. Such, however, is not yet the case with all, for the Master Attendant, the Surgeon, &c. &c., still continue permanently in their appointments, as if, indeed, they were patents. It must not, it cannot, be denied that this is a grievance pressing extremely hard upon equally old and meritorious servants of the Crown, and requires speedy rectification. The days are now long gone by when good things of this description are to be monopolised. The Schoolmaster is abroad; at all events, common sense is afloat in the world, and common sense will soon decide that individuals shall not continue uninterruptedly to enjoy the otium cum dignitate while their naval brethren in command of ships, or squadrons, [redacted] their appoint[redacted] the gre[redacted]e, risk, and responsibility they [redacted]ounter. I recollect the time when once a Naval officer, whether by interest or merit—too frequently the former—got one of the Dock-yards, there he sate himself down for life!! Aye, for life! For the only change that he ever knew afterwards was that of removing from one Dock-yard to another, to prevent that ennui originating in a too protracted residence in one neighbourhood, or for a further increase of salary, as all the Naval arsenals were not then on the same rate of income, though each handsome in the extreme (the lowest to the line of Surgeon was 400*l.*, with a handsome house to live in, free of rent and taxes, with other perquisites); and all this time their brethren labouring midst the dangers of "the battle and the breeze," and sighing for some lone little "cot" on shore "that o'erlooks the wide sea!" but sighing in vain—not in vain, because their services are not equally meritorious—not in vain, because their interest is less commanding—but because those situations are held permanently, and there are so few of them in the gift of the Admiralty to be distributed amongst the numerous aspirants. Look at the list of Surgeons, for instance, and consider how few, how very few, can ever hope to possess a Dock-yard or other civil situation, if the system of rotation be not strictly enforced; and that it must, and that shortly too, there exists but little doubt. Facts such as these, frequently repeated, cannot fail to produce the desired effect—"a consummation devoutly to be wished." Of the importance I have written, I respectfully beg your insertion. I am, &c. &c.,

Cause and Effect.—The Morning Herald of Monday called vigorously upon "the whole conservative body" to go down to the House of Commons to support Mr. Attwood's motion on Naval affairs. Mr. Attwood brought forward his motion, but—could not find a seconder.

To Readers and Correspondents.

In reply to an Old Officer, we beg to state that no service in the world could produce cases of greater individual hardship than the Line. We will mention a few:—

Colonel Elrington, 47th Foot, who entered the service 4th Dec., 1790, and has been Lieut.-Colonel of his corps 26 years; viz., since 4th June, 1813. Col. E. is now in his 49th year of full-pay service, and has been in his present corps 36 years.

Major and Bt. Lt.-Colonel Grierson, 15th Foot, entered the service 31st May, 1795; he purchased his Majority after 30 years service, viz., 15th Dec., 1825—has never been on half-pay, and has nearly completed 44 years full-pay service. He has been in his present corps 35 years, viz., since 27th Aug., 1804.

Captain and Brevet Lt.-Colonel Sall, Newfoundland Veteran Comps., entered the service 30th Oct., 1794, and out of 45 years has served 38 on full-pay, exclusive of service on the Staff.

Captain and Bt. Major Harpour, 67th Regt., entered the service 20th April, 1796, was reduced to half-pay in 1798, brought to full-pay in 1807, promoted to a Lieutenancy in the 67th in 1808, from which period to the present time he has served in that corps.

Upon a most favourable calculation of chances, the Junior Captain of Rl. Marines, who has already been 28 years in the service, viz., since 21st May, 1811, will not obtain a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, under the present system, during the next twenty years, and this will apply, in like ratio, to numerous officers of that corps. The first 26 Lieutenants, R.M., nearly average a service of 27 years!!

"A Retired Commander," whose strange epistle appears in the "West of England Conservative," (a paper we now seldom see) ought to know that we do not trouble ourselves with communications addressed to contemporaries. In Lieut. Somerville's list of the surviving officers who served on board H.M.S. Victory, in the battle of Trafalgar, 21st Oct., 1805, published in the "N. and M. Gazette" of 16th inst., the name of Lieut. H. Cary, (Seniority, 13th July, 1807), is omitted. That officer was a Midshipman belonging to and served as such on board the Victory on that memorable day.

We cannot answer the inquiry of "A. R." further than by expressing our belief that the Military Commission have not refused to entertain the claims of Pursers. The sacrifices Pursers have made to increase the half-pay of those of their class unemployed, certainly should have a liberal consideration.

The letter of "An Orphan" shall have attention next week.—We will look into the matter referred to by Lieut. Mitchell.—The letters of "A Member of the Hon. Artillery Company" and "Round Hat" shall be noticed.

"Steamer" must be in error, as the paragraph to which he refers did not appear in our paper.

The debate on the Army Estimates, which took place on Friday week, was one of the most interesting and important which has occurred for many years, and we deem it our duty to enter fully into the questions discussed between Lord Howick and Sir Henry Hardinge, relating to the general state of our defence, and the military situation of the empire, as regards our colonies. These topics, combined with the views taken of our policy and preparations for war in India, demand more than ordinary notice in our columns.

The debate commenced with a very able statement in detail from Lord Howick, showing the difference between the estimates of the past and the coming year. The recruiting of the Army during the last fifteen months has been considerable; for we observe, by his Lordship's admission, that the actual force kept up, two years ago, was 8,036 below the numbers voted. Last year, however, the Army was completed to a fuller establishment,—five men per troop and eight men per company having been added in each regiment. The real increase of last year was 2,263, and only credit taken for the full establishments. In December last all the infantry corps were ordered to be completed, and 5,648 were added to the line. Besides this augmentation, anticipations of vacancies for 1,500 men were filled up by recruiting supernumeraries. The total increase (as compared with the numbers two years ago) is, therefore, 9,411 men, exclusive of the force in India, composed of Her Majesty's troops, which is to be augmented by rank and file only. This augmentation is to be made in the establishment of the regiments already in that country. Sir Henry Hardinge, most convincingly, as we think, proved that the present infantry force is utterly inadequate to meet the pressure on it. Sir Henry pointed out that, after all the late apparent augmentations, the Army is merely restored to what it was under the administration of Lord Grey, while the pressure on it is vastly increased. The service of late years and now, performed by the infantry of the line, is severe without a parallel. There are 103 battalions of the line—each about 740 men—amounting to 76,120; and these, with Foot Guards and Cavalry, amount to 96,000 rank and file. How is this mere handful of infantry employed?—82 battalions, out of the 103, serve abroad, and 21 at home. Making, then, the average deductions for casualties and recruits, we have only between 16 and 17 thousand trained soldiers at home. Of the 21 regiments at home, there is only one—the 96th—which has been at home since 1835, and that is under orders for foreign service. Of the others, those longest in the United Kingdom, returned from abroad in 1836 only!—and these two are again ordered abroad!! Thus several regiments, which served 20 years in India, are, after two or three years at home, sent first to Gibraltar or the Mediterranean Islands and then to the West Indies.

This is the severe service which Sir Henry most urgently pressed on the notice of the House and the Secretary-at-War. Now any increase to the Army in India, if made by regiments, and taken from the present number, must make this pressure more severe on the rest; and allowing that the expense fell on the East India Company, Sir Henry took the fair view of the subject, by stating that this increase to the Indian Army would be at the expense of the whole of the infantry, and that the regiments must be retained longer in India. It could be no satisfaction to these banished corps to learn that the East India Company would defray the charge of keeping them there!!!

This view of the subject seems to have been admitted as correct on all sides, by Lord Howick and by Sir J. Hobhouse, and both acquiesced in the excessive severity of service of late years exacted from the infantry of the line. Indeed, Sir John Hobhouse candidly stated the utter impossibility of obtaining complete regiments as an increase for the Indian forces, and that he could only obtain, though he wished for an augmentation of a more effective description, an increase of rank and file for each corps already in India. This is a sad exposition of our total want of military means. Suppose even that the order had issued to raise the regiments in India to 1,000 rank and file each. Let us ask, how long will it take to raise them?—how long to train them?—how long before they can reach the head-quarters of their several corps in that remote country?—A year at the least. Is this as it should be? Is it fair that regiments, which have (like the 16th and 54th) been abroad since 1819, shall be now, in 1839, retained in India a year or two more, augmented to 1,000 men each, and again and again filled up, till not one man remains who embarked with the regiment from this country?

The Army must gratefully acknowledge that Sir Henry Hardinge has at last laid the truth before Parliament and the public, and made a statement which was replied to, but not answered. We thank the Times for its able advocacy of the soldier, and extract the following passage from its leading article of Monday last, showing the severity of the service performed by the line, of 20 years in India, 10 years elsewhere abroad, and only 3 years at home.

"We put it," exclaims the Times, "to any Englishman of common humanity, whether this is a fate to be permanently inflicted on any subjects of a free state, entailed on them, not as a punishment for crimes, but as an honourable service forsooth!"

We have long urged all this and more on the notice of the public, and we rejoice to see the day when our sentiments have found their way into a speech from Sir Henry Hardinge, and into the commanding columns of the most influential journal in the world. The Army has read, no doubt, the debate on which we offer these remarks; and while it has seen with regret Lord Howick's statement, that an increase was not estimated for, the Army must have dwelt with very great satisfaction on other points in the speech. We believe that Lord Howick is a true friend to the Army—that his most ardent desire is to improve the condition of every rank—and that he has instituted inquiries into every branch of the service, with a view to its efficiency and improvement. We have been gratified to see men of all parties join his Lordship in the plans of garrison libraries, and military instead of civil imprisonment. We warmly commend these measures; but while we believe that libraries will afford recreation and instruction to a few soldiers (for only a few soldiers can read well enough to find reading a pleasure), we would have been pleased to learn that the institution of manly games and amusements for the many soldiers who cannot read had been included in the Estimate. We hope yet to see this effected. It is rare to find public attention excited to the state of the Army, and it certainly augurs a state of affairs calculated to make reflecting men think that war is not a very distant evil. When we cast a look around us, the atmosphere appears to indicate a coming storm—and from what quarter is doubtful. In America, the aspect is gloomy—in our Eastern possessions, from the N. E. to the N. W. frontier, the storm is fast gathering—and in Europe itself, we see few spots clear from clouds. The state, therefore, of our Army is much more a subject for alarm and deep anxiety than our Navy. For the Navy, we have no reasonable fear; we have ships in abundance, and a merchant service to man them on an emergency. But for the Army, and its adequacy to meet the danger, we have well-founded fears. We have but a few regiments, weak and widely scattered over half the globe; we have no Militia ready trained on which to depend; we have, in fact, no Army! We have a few regiments in numerous and widely-separated garrisons; but we have not an available—a disposable force. We cannot send regiments to America without leaving the United Kingdom in jeopardy. If we send regiments to America, we cannot also send them to India. How, then, is America to be kept from boarding us?, How, then, is Russian influence to be counteracted in India? We reply—by Armies on the spot. The Cadmean process will not avail for the production of Armies in these days. We must resort to the Recruiting Serjeants. Our Army needs 10,000 recruits, and 10,000 recruits we can have in two months, if the Horse Guards put its excellent machinery in motion. In 1838, and these three months of 1839, 15,000 recruits were easily raised, and of that number, in December and January last, 4000 men enlisted.—We cannot make soldiers in a day, and we therefore trust that, before another week elapses, we may have the gratification of announcing a large increase to the Army of new regiments, and largely augmented numbers of rank and file in those already established.

THE debate on the affairs of the Navy in the House of Commons on Monday evening, was one of much interest to the Service, and we have therefore devoted to it considerable space. Sir Edward Codrington's persevering exertions, in behalf of his brother officers, deserve the warmest eulogium, and it is but fair to admit that Mr. C. Wood, who though he might (as Colonel Sibthorpe facetiously remarked) "be sea-sick in a punt at Westminster Bridge," evinced a ready disposition to receive information, and to investigate grievances.

We rejoice most heartily that the pension has been restored to the gallant Napier. This act of simple justice we have strenuously urged on more occasions than one.

We also hope to see the emoluments of the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Royal Naval Hospital, Greenwich, made equal to those of the Royal Military Hospital, Chelsea. There can be no reason for the existence of an invidious distinction; both appointments are held by officers whose gallantry before the enemy, and personal characters, have won them the esteem of the country.

The withholding pensions from the widows of Warrant Officers is a niggardly economy, of which any Administration, professing liberal principles, must be ashamed.

Midshipmen and Mates, the subaltern officers of the Royal Navy, being without the fair and reasonable indulgence of half-pay, is another real grievance of the Service that we hope soon to see redressed.

No Government could have a more favourable opportunity than the present for doing justice to the Navy and Army. Thanks to the press, the country is excited in favour of the United Service, and we earnestly implore the authorities to avail themselves of the popular feeling.

WE have at different times received communications, severely animadverting on the existing qualification to entitle a Captain to his flag, which rule was established in the year 1827; and we have on several occasions expressed our opinion on this most objectionable regulation, which, as we have before observed, punishes a gallant officer as though he had committed an offence, whilst his disgrace in being thrown aside is caused alone by his misfortune in not having had interest to obtain for him the command of a ship.

We are rejoiced, however, to learn that there is every hope that "THE COMMISSION" will, in their report, recommend an immediate amendment in this system, and we are sanguine that the present Board of Admiralty will readily and gladly correct this, together with every other measure that can, by alteration, be likely to benefit the service under their control.

Of the absurdity of the present qualification we have many cases that we could cite, but in giving one or two only, we are satisfied that we shall make sufficiently manifest the necessity for an alteration in it at the earliest possible period, if we would desire to have our fleets and squadrons henceforward commanded by officers who have gained their experience in command of ships actually at SEA.

To show how the present rule might be made to act if it be continued in force, we will take the case of a worthy officer, whose name we are well acquainted with, who, though he never commanded either a sloop of war or a post ship UNDER CANVASS in his life, would be entitled to hoist his FLAG when it came to his turn to be promoted, from having commanded a HARBOUR ship full six years as a Post-Captain! whilst there is at this hour in the very same [illegible] another gallant officer commanding a [illegible] he has commanded every class of ship, and in active service too at sea, in every clime, and amongst these five or six different ships of the line, and who commenced his career as a Midshipman in the ship that captured the Ville de Paris in the glorious victory of 1782, and was in several other actions in the same year, and was eight years a Lieutenant and twelve a Commander—yet if his ship be paid off to-morrow, by the Admiral whose flag is now flying on board of her retiring from his command (and who, by the by, was a junior Lieutenant to the Captain in question), would, unless he could muster interest to obtain another appointment, be thrown on the shelf for ever, becoming, if he lived long enough, at length a YELLOW ADMIRAL, because he required ten or fifteen days, or thereabouts, only, of the stipulated period to qualify him for his flag! So monstrous an anomaly must show the absurdity and injustice of the present system, and must and will, we sincerely trust, cause its immediate correction.

AGREEABLY to the independent principles with which the Naval and Military Gazette is conducted, we have never refused insertion to any correspondence, from whatever quarter it may have emanated, where a real or imagined grievance has been set forth; and as we earnestly wish—without fear or favour—to advocate to the best of our abilities every department of the United Service with equal fairness, without leaning to, or drawing invidious comparisons from any, we usually insert under the head of "Correspondence" all letters of this tendency, abstaining from all remark ourselves, and leaving argument on both sides of the question open to our Correspondents. Had we pursued this course, however, with reference to the letter from Veritas, inserted in our Number of the 2d instant, we should have been guilty of a dereliction of duty, insomuch that every part of his argument was grounded upon incorrect data, and which we most clearly pointed out. We must also be allowed to differ with Veritas in his remark, that "the promotion in the Line is in a most degraded state of comparison with the other branches of the service."—The following short Table will establish our position:—

—	Captains.	Field Officers.	Field Officers in the ratio of four to ten Captains.	Required Increase.	Required Decrease.
Regiment of the Line	10	4	4	—	—
Royal Artillery	170	62	68	6	—
Royal Engineers	80	36	32	—	3
Royal Marines	94	22	37 3-5ths	15 3-5ths	—

The above Table, however, does not convey a perfectly correct picture of the particular advantages or disadvantages which one department may be conceived to possess over the other; because in the Ordnance Corps the proportion of Subalterns to Captains is very considerably less than in the Line, whilst in the Royal Marines the establishment is precisely similar; consequently, it being a well-established fact, and which a reference to an Army List of the East India Company will prove, that promotion in large bodies of officers is slower than in small ones,—the prospect of promotion in the corps of Royal Marines is more unfavourable than in the Line, even if the fifteen Captains at the head of the List were promoted to-morrow, as they ought to be, to the rank of Regimental Major.

There is also another point in which we differ with Veritas, viz., in reviewing the claims of officers of one corps, as compared with those of another, he commences with the rank of Captain; we, on the other hand, always "begin at the beginning," by establishing our basis on the first commission, which, according to our judgment, is the only correct line of attack or defence, and on this principle Veritas will perceive, if he refer to Lieutenant Hart's "New Army List," or the Tables in our last week's Number, which we compiled from that useful work, that we were not in error when we said that the Royal Marines as a body were immeasurably in the worst condition with reference to promotion.

Now we are anxious that our friends of the Line—and amongst them Veritas—should not suppose for an instant that we are not their true friends; and we are sure they will perceive, that were we to advocate their cause by drawing comparisons, from this or that department of the service, when every section of the whole Army is in so cruelly a depressed state, we could do them no good, and might occasion extensive injury to the service at large.

There is one thing, however, imperatively called for in the Line, viz., a certain defined period when a Lieutenant-Colonel should attain the Brevet rank of Colonel, and not to have to wait, as at present, for slow [illegible] This is, indeed, a great and crying evil, and as such we earnestly press it on the notice of the Military authorities. In conclusion, we reiterate our remark of last week, that nothing short of a well-digested and unlimited full-pay retirement will meet the wants of the service, or properly reward the greatest claimants on the nation's gratitude—the Navy and the Army.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—It was not my intention to have again troubled you, but as you have mistaken the intention of my former letter, I am induced to intrude a few further observations.

In the first place, you point out an error, that a Captain of Engineers, whom I stated to be a Capt. of 1812, was a Captain of 1811. Granting this error, how does it alter the fact? Have not all Captains of 1812 got the full step of Lieut.-Colonel several years past, whilst Captains of the line, of 1809-10-11-12, are still Captains, having only the Brevet rank of Majors!

In the Marines, all the Captains of 1823 are full Lieut.-Colonels, having jumped over the heads of all the Majors in the Army, many of whom have been thirteen years Majors, and had been fifteen years Captains.

It is therefore preposterous to say, that the promotion of the line does not stand in a most degraded scale of comparison with the other branches of the service. The regulation which has taken place, doing away with Majors, and placing an officer in these corps at once from Captain to Lieut.-Colonel, has been obtained in consequence of having friends who brought forward their claims and advocated their cause, and every old soldier rejoices in their good fortune; but we sadly lack a friend to state the facts and advocate the cause of a similar class of officers in the line. Such men plod on, either on half or full pay, with withered hopes and blighted hearts, whilst gay striplings play at leap-frog over their heads until their shoulders crack. This is a game which has never been admitted into the Artillery, Engineers, or Marines, but long practised in the Line and Navy, as pleasant and useful to our young nobility. It was with the hope that a pen more able than mine might have raised a friend in the cause of old and neglected officers, that I hoped for an advocate in the impartial columns of the Naval and Military Gazette.

And now, Sir, trusting that you will believe that a wish for justice where it is much wanting by no means implies a desire to find fault with where it has been obtained, I remain your obedient servant,

VERITAS.

THE position of [illegible] in the E. West Indies is far from being satisfactory. If we review the principal events since the manifesto issued by Lord Auckland, we perceive but little advancement towards the great objects for which the Army was assembled. At the end of last year the force from the Bengal Presidency was on the march, and after a great display of Military parade, before old Runjeet Sing, at Lahore and Ferozepore, the troops moved onwards—slowly enough—towards Bhawawulpoor (Bawalpore), where, it appears by the last mail, they arrived on 4th of January. But, previously, one division of this Army had halted, as a reserve, at Ferozepore, in consequence of the then pacific assurances from our allies; and Sir Henry Fane then finding that he was to command a negotiating instead of a fighting force, and also learning that Persia had drawn off her Army from Herat, relinquished the command on 16th of December, and prepared to descend the Indus, on his way to Europe, via Bombay and the Red Sea By this arrangement Sir Henry Fane proposed to meet Sir John Keane and the Bombay Army, and make such dispositions for the campaign as might be required, either at Hyderabad or Shikarpoor. By the letters which reached us on Monday last from Bombay, dated 24th January, we find it was generally believed there, that very important and adverse changes in our political relations with the chiefs of Cabul, Herat, and Scinde, had taken place, owing to the sinister agency of Persia and Russia, and that Sir Henry Fane would probably resume the command of the united Army from Bengal and Bombay. Kam Ram, of Herat, and Dost Mahomed, of Cabul, have most unexpectedly entered into a treaty of mutual defence; and the former has ungratefully expelled his gallant and scientific defender, Lieutenant Pottinger, with the political agent, Captain Stoddard, from the capital The Umeers of Scinde, notorious throughout the East for Punic faith, have, in conjunction with their neighbours of Beloochistan—a hardy and daring race of mountaineers—assembled a large force, said to be 20,000 fighting men, and have occupied all the passes from Tatta to Hyderabad, and have collected a considerable body of troops, chiefly Cavalry, in the upper country. This force is commanded by an officer of ability, named Campbell, formerly in the Bengal Army, but cashiered by a Court-Martial some years ago. Besides these preparations to oppose our progress by force of arms, the Scindians have rigidly deprived us of all supplies of camels, cattle, &c. &c., and consequently the movement of the Bombay force from Tatta has been delayed. We understand, however, that Sir John Keane has determined on a forward movement, very judiciously estimating its moral influence on the cause, but by no means blind to the difficulties and dangers to be encountered. The necessity of a reserve was, under these circumstances, obvious, and, accordingly, a large brigade, under Lieutenant-Colonel Valiant, H. M.'s 40th, from Deesa, was on its route through Cutch for Mandaree, and thence to Kurrachee, near the mouth of the Indus. The Army under Sir John Keane, after leaving detachments at Vickkur and Tatta, will not amount to quite 4000 men, and yet with this small force Sir John has boldly determined to advance from Tatta, where the main body was encamped on the 9th of January. Such was the precarious position of the Army of Scinde when our letters left Bom- [redacted] feel in the skill [redacted] Sir John Keane, we cannot forget that he has scarcely 1000 British soldiers under his command, deducting sick and detachments.—If the native troops of Hindostan be ever opposed against the natives of Beloochistan and Affghanistan, we shall only say, we hope they may never be opposed but in masses, where their discipline may compensate for their individual inferiority in energy of character and physical strength.

Since the above was in type, we have heard from good authority that General Sir Henry Fane does not now return to Europe, despatches having reached him from the Government at home which have induced him to resume the chief command of the Army. [redacted]

AMIDST other suggestions which it is expected that the Naval and Military Commission will propose in their Report, is, that some change be made in the regulations regarding the table money now allowed to Flag Officers on full pay, whereby it may be made ample, if the present sum of three pounds per day be not sufficient, to enable the Admirals employed to entertain at their tables regularly some of the officers, of each and every grade belonging to the squadron under their commands; whereas we have seen it truly stated, that the Lieutenants and other subordinate officers belonging to other ships but that in which the Admiral's flag is flying, are seldom, if ever, invited to his table, whereas in the sister profession we find the Subalterns of all the regiments in the garrison are constantly the guests at the General's table, as well as their superior officers. We sincerely hope, then, soon to see an amendment in the present custom, whereby the two services may be assimilated in this essential point, and the respectability of the Navy thus largely increased.

[It affords us much satisfaction to present to our readers an authentic account of the Storming of Aden, furnished by an intelligent and gallant officer engaged in the operations.]

An expedition for the occupation of Aden, on the coast of Arabia, sailed from the harbour of Bombay in two transports, under the convoy of H.M. frigate Volage, Captain Smith, on the 30th December, 1838. The Military force in the transports and frigates was as follows:—Artillery—Capt. Willoughby, Commanding; 2 Subalterns, 40 Europeans and 60 Golandauze, with a battering train of 10 guns, two 8-inch mortars, two 12 pounder howitzers, and two 9-pounder field guns, 2 Europeans of the Engineers, and 39 pioneers. The head quarters of the European regiment commanded by Major Osburne, with 3 Captains, 11 Subalterns, 2 Medical Officers, and 317 rank and file. The head quarters of the 24th regiment Bombay Native Infantry commanded by Capt. Morris, with 6 Subalterns, 1 Medical Officer, and 350 rank and file; 1 Staff and 1 Commissariat Officer under the command of Major Baillie. The expedition was detained three days, having to proceed down the coast to assist in quelling some disturbances in the Sawunt Warree country, but fortunately had no occasion to land troops, the insurrection having been suppressed. It was here joined, viz, off Vingorla by H.M. brig Cruiser, 18 guns, Commander King; and the expedition made sail the same evening, the 2d January, 1839, for its destination, and anchored in Western or Busk Bay, Aden, on the 16th January. The Honourable Company's sloop of war Coote, 18 guns, Commander Denton, the armed schooner Mahi, and a large transpott with coals, were at anchor in the Bay. Every attempt at negotiation with the Sultan, made by the Political Agent, Commander Haines, Indian Navy, having failed, the Naval and Military Authorities were directed to use such measures as they might deem necessary for the capture of the place. It was immediately decided that an attempt should be made to land the troops in the Eastern or front Bay. Early on the morning of the 18th, the squadron sailed for Eastern Bay, and anchored there the same evening. The dispositions for landing the troops in the boats having been made by Captain Smith, R.N., commanding the squadron, the following order was issued:—"Maj. Osburne, with 276 muskets of the Bombay European regiment, will form the right, or Captain King's division, and push off for the shore as soon as the signal is made, and, on landing, will form up immediately, advance and seize on the Sultan's palace. Captain Morris, with 30 muskets of the European regiment, and 233 muskets of the 24th regiment, will form the left or Captain Denton's division, and push off for the shore when the signal is made, land, form up, and advance, and communicate with the right division. Captain Willoughby will proceed on board the Terror bomb, with such part of his detachment as may be considered necessary for the purpose of working [redacted] 8-inch mortar and 12-pounder carronade. Lieut. [redacted] of the Engineers having joined, will accompany [redacted] and point out the position best adapted for assisting in the bombardment of the enemy's lower battery and fort on the Island of Seera. A reserve, consisting of 35 Europeans, 50 Golandauze, and 127 men of the 24th regiment, will proceed, early to-morrow morning, on board the Honourable Company's sloop of war Coote, and wait for the return boats of the left division to land in." Early on the morning of the 19th, the signal having been made from the frigate that the landing would be attempted, the boats containing the right and left divisions pushed off for their respective positions under the lee of the men-of-war. At 9 A.M. the frigate Volage and brig Cruiser took up their positions on the northern side of the fortified island, within 300 yards of the lower battery on the fortified island of Seera, the Terror bomb a little more in shore to the right of the Cruiser, and opened a most tremendous fire. Shortly afterwards the Coote and Mahe took up their positions on the southern side of the fortified island, and opened their fire on the town. The enemy's guns in the fort on the fortified island, in the lower battery, and in the town, were very soon silenced. At half-past eleven the signal was made for the landing, and both divisions pushed off to the storm with three cheers from the ships of war, the right division pulling round the northern side of the island, the left division with which Major Baillie landed round the southern side of the island, and both effected a landing with the loss of two men wounded in the right division, and one killed and two wounded in the left division; they immediately formed and advanced, the enemy retiring before them. The right division seized on the Sultan's palace, and planted the British flag on the top of it; the left division seized on the southern gate, and advanced through the town, on debouching from which they were stopped by a flag of truce with the Mahomedan high priest, who had the charge of all the unarmed inhabitants, both male and female, at his mosque, about a quarter of a mile up the western valley. At one o'clock the reserve had landed and occupied the Jumma Musseed. Captain Willoughby had also landed with 22 European Artillery, and took up his position between the head-quarters of the European and 24th regiments. By two o'clock the northern pass or gateway leading to the interior, called by the Arabs Babel Yemen, was in our possession. Thus was Aden stormed and taken; and, had it not been for an unfortunate affray which took place in disarming 130 Arab prisoners, sent from the fortified island by Lieutenant Dobree, of the Volage, our success would have been without alloy, our loss having been, comparatively speaking, trifling. It had been explained to the Arabs that they must give up their arms, when they would be escorted to the northern gate, and permitted to go wherever they pleased. After a little demur they agreed to do so, and their matchlocks were taken from them. In taking their jumbias or dirks, they became alarmed, jumped up, creeced the Serjeant-Major of the Artillery in five places, gave the Arab interpreter a fearful wound, killed a gunner of the Artillery and a corporal of the European regiment, and wounded two private European regiment—also a Serjeant of Artillery, since dead; they then broke away with the loss of twelve killed and mortally wounded, killing a water-carrier they met in their flight. Thirty-five guns were captured, of which twenty-five were in battery; amongst them are three beautiful Turkish brass guns, 19, 17, and 16 feet long, 89, 85, and 68-pounders, which are to be sent, if possible, in the frigate to Bombay, Captain Smith, R.N., having kindly consented to take them. It is to be hoped they will be presented to her most gracious Majesty the Queen, Aden being the first fortified place taken in the present reign.

Seera is about 500 yards from the town; it is an island at high water only; it is quite inaccessible except at the northern extremity, where there is a winding path leading up to the round tower, through a small square tower about half way up, through which you pass by a wicket; the round tower is about 360 feet above the level of the sea; the southern end about 430. A low neck of land protrudes from the northern end about 70 yards long, forming a kind of breakwater for boats. On this was the lower battery, mounting 5 guns, and inside of this the little schooner Mahe, commanded by Lieut. Daniels, took up her second position, and drove the remainder of the Arabs out of the lower battery. Her conduct was the admiration of both Navy and Army.

The valley of Aden is surrounded by high and impassable hills, varying from 1,700 to 1,000 and 600 feet high. The northern pass through the hills to the interior, lies about a mile north-west of the town. The hills on the right of the road leading to the pass are practicable in only two places, and there with great difficulty.

On the isthmus connecting the promontory of Aden with the main land, about a mile from the pass, are the remains of an old Turkish wall now in ruins, which originally commanded the only communication between the town and main land. This wall is about 2000 yards long, and might with a little trouble be put into a state of defence; inside the Turkish wall are the remains of a reservoir for water, which was supplied by an aqueduct from the interior supposed to be nine miles long.

Aden appears to have been in former days a very populous town, to judge from the number and extent of ruins; none of the buildings, however, shew any remains of cement, the water tanks or reservoirs even are roughly pointed; a few Turkish arches at the Jumma Musjeed are built of brick and mortar. At present the population of the town is about 600, and their houses, except the Jewish quarter, are scattered indiscriminately amongst the old ruins.

ADEN FORCE.—ORDERS BY MAJOR BAILIE.

Head-Quarters, Aden, 22nd January, 1839.

1. The Major, commanding the expedition to Aden, begs to congratulate the troops on the possession of the fortified island and town of Aden. It is not to be expected, that much resistance could be offered, after the tremendous fire kept up by the squadron, but, from the regular manner in which the two divisions landed and formed on the beach, under the fire kept up by the matchlock men, which is always galling to troops cooped up in boats, Major Bailie is certain they would have stormed and taken the place had it been more ably defended.

2. The Major has deferred addressing the troops earlier, that he might detect any irregularity committed, but he is extremely happy to say, that in no one instance has a single complaint been made, and it will be his pleasing task to bring their conduct to the notice of the Commander of the Forces.

3. To Major Osborne, commanding the right division, consisting of 200 men of the European Regiment, Major Bailie begs to return his best thanks for the manner in which he advanced and took possession of the Sultan's palace.

4. To Capt. Morris, commanding the left division, consisting of 30 muskets of the European Regiment, and 280 men of the 24th Regiment, with which the Major landed, he also begs to express his acknowledgments for the promptness with which he landed, and advanced with the 24th Regiment, and took possession of the southern gate, as well as the left of the town

5. To Capt Willoughby, commanding the Artillery, and Lieut. Western, of the Engineers, Major Bailie's best thanks are due for the position they took up with the bomb-vessel, and the fire they kept up from the mortar.

6. Major Bailie begs that Capt. Cumming, commanding the flank companies of the European Regiment, who took possession of the pass, will accept his best thanks for his exertions. The advance of the skirmishers, under Capt. Stiles and Lieut. Rose, was extremely creditable to them, and the Major requests they will accept his best thanks for the manner in which they secured the heights to the right of the pass, and the position in which Capt Stiles placed part of his men under Lieut Rose.

7. Major Bailie begs also to return his thanks to Capt. St. John, the staff officer, and Lieut. Hogg, of the Commissariat, for the assistance they so promptly afforded him during the whole of the operations.

8. To the Medical Officers, the Commanding Officer returns his thanks for their attention to the wounded he begs also to particularise Assistant-Surgeon Malcolmson, 24th Regiment, for his humanity to the wounded Arabs at Hydroos. By Order, (Signed) ROBT. ST. JOHN, Capt. and Staff Officer.

Lord Ward.—The reports at the clubs, and in this county, are that Lord Ward had lost the enormous sum of 200,000*l.* to a noble Earl (well known in the sporting world, and whose losses in his extreme youth are said to have given him wisdom) and to a gentleman, also of sporting celebrity. The story goes that this very young nobleman had, from certain suspicions of the play, refused to settle, and that the Earl and gentleman had threatened Lord Ward with challenges if he further demurred.—Worcester Chronicle.

Vindication of Lady Flora Hastings.—"SIR,—Many false and contradictory reports of the deplorable insult which has been lately offered to my niece, Lady Flora Hastings, at Buckingham Palace, having appeared in the public papers, I, as her ladyship's nearest connexion, feel it my duty to request of you to publish the following account of the transaction, for the correctness of which I vouch. An imperfect knowledge of the details of this odious affair has produced various false conclusions. In well-informed circles, where Lady Flora is known, the idea of her guilt was never entertained for a moment; but in other quarters, where, in the absence of positive information, a judgment is formed by what oozes out in the public papers, I find an injurious idea exists that she has been spared, or let off easy. The facts are briefly these—Lady Flora arrived some weeks since from Scotland, very unwell. She immediately consulted Sir James Clark, the physician to both Her Majesty and the Duchess of Kent. One symptom of her complaint was a swelling of the stomach. By dint of exercise and medical treatment she was getting better, the swelling had considerably subsided, and she had every hope of a speedy recovery, when, on or about the 1st of March, Sir J. Clark went to her room and announced to her the conviction of the ladies of the Palace that she was pregnant. In answer to all his exhortations to confession, 'as the only means of saving her character,' Lady Flora returned an indignant but steady denial that there was anything to confess. Upon which Sir J. Clark told her 'that nothing but her submitting to a medical examination would ever satisfy them, or remove the stigma from her name.' Lady Flora found that the subject had been brought before the Queen's notice, and that all this had been discussed, arranged, and denounced to her without one word having been said on the subject to her own mistress, the Duchess of Kent, who had no suspicion of what was going on, and whose sanction was not sought for the humiliating proposition which had been made to Lady Flora. On leaving Lady Flora's room, Sir J. Clark went to the Duchess of Kent, and announced his conviction that Lady Flora was with child, and was followed by Lady Portman, who conveyed a message from Her Majesty to her mother to say, that the Queen would not permit Lady Flora to appear till the examination had taken place. Lady Portman (who with Lady Tavistock are those whose names are mentioned as most active against Lady Flora) expressed to the Duchess of Kent her conviction of Lady Flora's guilt 'Her beloved mistress' never for a moment doubted Lady Flora's innocence. She said that she knew her, her principles, and her family too well to listen to such a charge. However, the edict was given, and the next day, Lady Flora having obtained the Duchess of Kent's very reluctant consent—'for H.R.H. could not bear the idea of her being exposed to such a humiliation'—but Lady Flora 'feeling it her duty to H.R.H., to her family, and to herself, that a point-blank refutation should be instantly given to the lie,' submitted herself to the most rigid examination, and now possesses a certificate, signed by Sir James Clark, and also by Sir Charles Clark, stating, as strongly as language can state it, that 'there are no grounds for believing that pregnancy does exist, or ever has existed.' Lord Hastings, though at the time very ill from influenza, went to London instantly, and demanded and obtained from Lord Melbourne a distinct disavowal of his participation in the affair, and demanded and obtained an audience of Her Majesty, in which, while he disclaimed all idea that the Queen had any wish to injure his sister, he plainly, though respectfully, stated his opinion of those who had counselled her, and his resolution to find out the originator of the slander, and bring him or her to punishment. Lady Flora is convinced that the Queen was surprised into the order which was given, and that Her Majesty did not understand what she was betrayed into—for ever since the horrid event Her Majesty has showed her regret by the most gracious kindness to Lady Flora, and expressed it warmly, with tears in her eyes. The Duchess of Kent's conduct was perfect; 'a mother could not have been kinder.' She immediately dismissed Sir James Clarke from her service, and refused to see Lady Portman;' and has crowned her goodness by a most beautiful letter she has written to the Dowager Lady Hastings, from whom the accounts were kept till all hope of avoiding publicity was impossible.

FRANCE.—The latest Paris accounts bring tidings of what the French call a gâchis. Soult refuses to take office with Thiers, and Thiers without Soult. Jacqueminot, whilst neither will grant him terms. Humann will have nothing to say to Barrot, nor Dupin to Guizot. Barrot says that Thiers leans too much to the right; Passy and Dufaure fear that he leans too much to the left. There is one personage who could with a word reconcile these jarring elements; but he refuses to speak that word, enjoying the dissension he himself has created with a feeling of triumph—the more delicious, because not unaccompanied with danger.

PORTUGAL.—The Finance Minister, Senhor Manoel Antonio de Carvalho, had tendered his resignation, which Her Majesty refused to accept, and he continues to hold office. A considerable number of merchants addressed the Queen, praying that she would not allow the Minister to withdraw from the service.

BELGIUM.—Brussels, March 23.—We mentioned the duel between the War Minister's brother and the son of M. Pirson, of the Chamber of Representatives. We have since heard of a fatal duel between two Captains of the Army, one of whom has fallen, and the other is dying. To-day another encounter has taken place between M. De Brouckere and Colonel Bire, the former of whom has received a sword-wound in his side.

CIRCASSIA.—The Abasian princes have deputed Plenipotentiary Ministers to Constantinople, to propose to the Sultan to recognise his authority, and offer to pay him a yearly tribute, to furnish a contingent of cavalry, and maintain a Turkish Governor in Abasia at their own expense, on condition of his defending them against the Russians. These Princes would not allow Mr. Bell to leave the country, as they consider him the representative of England. They lately declared to him that if Great Britain would assist them in an efficacious manner, and supply them with arms, warlike stores, and officers, they would not only oppose any attempt of Russia against British India, but would excite a revolt in Georgia and in the country of the Cossacks. This intelligence so exasperated the Emperor Nicholas, that he ordered General Golowine to wage exterminating war against the Circassians, and lay waste the entire country.

NORTH AMERICA.—No further collision had occurred between the trespassers from Maine and the troops under the orders of Sir J. Harvey, though the people and local government of Maine are much excited on the subject. An Envoy-Extraordinary is coming to England for the purpose of settling, if possible, the Boundary Question. Sir G. Arthur opened the Parliament of the Upper Province on 27th ult. This speech exposes the rise and progress of the Canadian insurrection.

MAURITIUS.—The journals up to Dec. 15, contain lamentable details of a fire which broke out at Port Louis during the preceding night. It originated through the carelessness of a young person, who suffered the flame of a candle to catch the curtains of her bed. The wind was high, and communicated the conflagration to the surrounding buildings. Major Wilson, with a detachment of the 35th Foot, assisted by Lieut. Story, made every exertion to stop the progress of the mischief; and Lieut. Kerby, with twenty men, and a number of creoles, did great service in pulling down buildings. The total loss had been estimated at 500,000 piastres. An infant was burnt in its bed. Three soldiers were seriously injured.

Captain Johnson, the Smuggler.—This individual, whose death has frequently been reported during the last ten years, actually expired at his house, No. 3, Vauxhall-bridge-road, Westminster, a short time since, aged 67. His character was most extraordinary. When the Walcheren expedition was in preparation under the Earl of Chatham, in 1809, Johnson was taken from the Prison, where he had been confined for smuggling, in order to pilot the English fleet into the harbour of Flushing. For his services on this occasion he received a grant of 100*l.* per annum from Government, upon a promise, as it is understood, that he should refrain from his smuggling propensities.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 25.—Capt. Boldero, in moving for a copy of the order directing the Marines to provide themselves with great-coats, made some observations on the injustice done to Marines, who were obliged to supply themselves with great-coats out of their pay, while the soldiers in the Army were supplied with great coats at the expense of the country.—Mr. C Wood said that there was no such order as that mentioned. The invariable practice, ever since the Marines were instituted, had been that the men should find their own great-coats. Lord Howick said the Marines were in a much superior position to the Infantry in many respects. He thought much danger to the country might be not unlikely to result from encouraging bodies of armed men to make this sort of demand upon the House of Commons.—Sir H. Hardinge thought that all the three services ought to look up to the Crown, and not to the House of Commons at all.—Mr. Wakley said that he daily heard just complaints from officers both in the Army and Navy, but in no instance had he heard of their grievances being redressed. Both "Ins" and "Outs" in the House made common cause in resisting inquiry into these complaints [hear, hear]. The noble Lord who was just going out, and the gallant General who was just coming in [a laugh] were quite agreed on this point at any rate.—Captain Boldero withdrew his motion.—Mr. T. Attwood moved an address to the Crown, praying that timely and efficient measures may be adopted for obtaining a due supply of able seamen for the Navy. In the course of a speech of considerable length he dilated upon the policy adopted within the last seven years in regard to Poland, to Circassia, and to every region which Russia has chosen to make the scene of her aggressions, and observed that the result of all this wretched abandonment of the true interests of England may now be witnessed in the confession of the Secretary to the Admiralty, that the coasts of England are, at this moment, defenceless against a Russian invasion—that Sheerness might be burned by the Russian fleet, and Portsmouth occupied by a Russian army, before effective means of resistance could be organised by the Government of England. London might within six months from the present moment, be occupied by 50,000 Russian troops, to oppose whom, it would be utterly impossible for England to muster 20,000.—[The motion fell to the ground, in consequence of no hon. member coming forward to second it.]

The House having gone into a Committee of Supply, the Navy Estimates were proceeded with.—Mr. Hume severely censured the Admiralty for putting the people to an unwarrantable expense in allowing a ship-of-war (the Hastings) to attend the Queen Dowager to Malta. He also objected to the appointment of Sir Edward Parry to the office of Inspector or Surveyor of the Engineering Department of the Navy.

Merchant Seamen.—Sir E. Codrington complained that the merchant seamen were not fairly dealt with in proportion to the services they rendered. It was known that they were not paid in full unless the voyage was successful. He also thought that the present regulation, with respect to pensions, prevented many very valuable men from entering the service. Formerly the period of service at which a man became entitled to a pension was 14 years, whereas now 21 years were required.

Naval College.—Mr. Attwood complained that 12 persons remained foremen of the dock-yards without any prospect of promotion, they having been induced to enter into the Naval College with the understanding that they would succeed to the vacancies as they fell in in the higher departments.—Mr. C. Wood assured the committee that the claims of these individuals had been attended to, and that great favour had been shown them. No terms had ever been made with these gentlemen that their claims were to supersede those of others which might be made.—Mr. Hume denied the allegation that these claims had been attended to.—Mr. C Wood referred to some documents to show that in several instances, these individuals had had a preference given them in respect to promotion over the claims of others who had served ten years longer. Sir G. Clerk held that the Government were bound to respect the claims of these parties, who, on entering the service, bound themselves under heavy penalties not to leave it for a very long period.—Mr. Hume, Mr. C. Wood, and Capt. Gordon, referred to the establishment for scientific education at the Rl. College of Portsmouth, in respect to the system of gunnery there pursued.—Sh E. Codrington said that the establishment combined the most practical with the most useful part of Naval science.

Shipwrights.—Sir G. Clerk reminded the House that ship wrights were a class of artificers who could not be created on an emergency, but must have carefully served their time to the business, and have completed their acquaintance with the art of constructing vessels of war through many years of laborious assiduity and scientific observation. They ought, therefore, to be encouraged by every maritime government, like that of England, even in a time of peace. The system of classification must be liable to continual objection, because the classification must be made through the medium of the officers in the yard, and would, therefore, be always open to influence and to favour. The shipwrights ought to be entitled to pensions for service after a certain period.—Mr. C. Wood said that the present rule insured a scale of comparative superiority in the art of ship building—it was intended out of each class to select the three best artificers, and the Government gave a proportionably higher rate of pay to such workmen. This was found to be the best way to extract the greatest possible quantity of work from good workmen. Yet it was the favourite opinion of some scientific men in the yard, that the system of payment of men by the quantity of days' labour was not the surest way to procure the best description of workmanship. He had long believed it would be better to resort to a system of superannuation in favour of good workmen after a certain period of service in Her Majesty's Dock-yards.—Colonel Sibthorpe thought that the higher officers were too well paid for the services they performed, for instance, there was his honourable friend (Mr. C. Wood), a very clever man, he had no doubt, but what did he know of Naval services? He (Col. Sibthorpe) had told him before, and he repeated it now, that he "would be sea-sick in a punt at Westminster-bridge," and with all his respect for the hon. gent., he must declare that he could know nothing about the matter [laughter].

Half-Pay.—Mr. Hume said, on an average, half-pay was given after four years' active service. That was a very objectionable system. Sir E. Codrington must say, when he came to look to the list of Naval officers—he spoke of those who had gone through active service—that they were shamefully treated. It was nonsense to say that justice was done them. There was no department under Government in which persons were not allowed double the remuneration given the Navy, after half the service necessary in this portion of the public service. He hoped the commission would remedy some of these evils. He thought it was wrong for the First Lord of the Admiralty to have the promotion in his own hands—they ought to be with the Board.—Captain Pechell complained that there was no half-pay for Midshipmen and Mates. They relied on the working of the Commission.—Mr. C. Wood believed the greatest possible attention was paid to the merits of officers. The proportion (for the last nine years) of promotions made of officers of ships to those selected by the First Lord of the Admiralty, on various accounts, was as follows.—In 1830, one-third; in 1831, one-half; in 1832, one fourth; in 1833, one-third; in 1834, one-half; in 1835, two-thirds; in 1836, one-half; in 1837, one-half, or rather more; and in 1838, two-thirds.—Sir E. Codrington—That proves the enormous patronage he has [hear].—Adm. Adam said, it was not possible for a man to take greater pains in the investigation of the cases of officers than were taken. He did not mean to deny that the noble Lord promoted his friends among others [hear].—Sir E. Codrington would mention that three officers, sons of Admirals, had been promoted, but those of Admiral Bathurst had been passed over until lately. The son of Adm. Brown, who died on actual service in Jamaica, was a Lieutenant of eleven years' standing.—Mr. Hume said that Lord Minto did not take office to serve his friends, but to serve his country.—Adm. Adam begged to state that he had not said that. He spoke of "promotions."—Mr. Hume said, what he meant by serving friends was, giving to them as such, and what they would not otherwise be entitled to. There were 4000 officers on half pay, and not one of them ought to be promoted except for good services. The system avowed by the gallant Admiral was fixing a heavy burden on the country. A public man who avowed that he served his friends, did not serve his country.—Adm. Adam observed that he did not use the expression "serve" his friends, but "promote" his friends. If his friends deserved it, the noble Lord had a right to promote them. He defied any one to show an instance where the promotion had not been deserved.—Sir E. Codrington wished to call attention to a certain number of Lieutenants. There was a regulation that the 300 Lieutenants at the top of the List should have 7s a day, but such was not the case, and he thought the fact should be investigated.—Mr. Wood said that the regulation was, that as many of the first 300 Lieutenants as choose to be called Commanders might be called Commanders, and no difference was to be made in the pay. It never was intended to give them the pay; it was expressly provided that they should not receive pay.

Naval Pensions.—Mr. Wood, in answer to an observation by Capt. Pechell, said, that finding a pension was vacant, the Board of Admiralty had met this morning, and conferred the pension on Captain Napier.—Sir E. Codrington called the attention of the House to the disparity between the emoluments of Sir J. Brenton, Governor of Greenwich Hospital, and of Sir Geo Walker, Lieut.-Governor of Chelsea Hospital. They were both of them very meritorious officers, and had both been severely wounded. When Sir G. Walker was appointed Governor of Chelsea Hospital, he was Lieut.-General and Colonel of the 52d reg., and it was believed that he was permitted to enjoy all those emoluments along with his appointment. Why was not the Lieut.-Governor of Greenwich Hospital allowed to have his half pay in addition to his appointment? The number of pensioners at Greenwich was 500, and at Chelsea 2710. He contended that the two Governors ought to be placed on the same footing in respect to emolument.

Mr. Wood said that the appointment of Sir J. Brenton had not taken place since the present Ministry were in office. He did not know what amount of salary he received. He would inquire into it.—Captain Gordon wished to know whether, in fact, the widows of warrant officers were actually entitled to pensions or not?—Mr. Wood believed the fact was there was a regulation which took away the right of pensions from the widows of warrant officers who had entered the service since 1830.—Mr. Hume complained of the amount of retiring pensions to civil servants, which were, in some cases, almost as great as pensions to Admirals.

Ships and Transports.—Mr. Alderman Thompson complained of the expense to which the country was put by ships of war being fitted up to convey troops instead of transports.—Mr. Wood said that there was another point to be considered besides the expense, and that was the health of the troops who were embarked. Even as a matter of economy, it was a great point to land a regt. in good health. Another circumstance which the hon. gent. did not seem to take into consideration, was the length of time occupied in a voyage, for if a man of war could make five voyages while a transport could make only four, that, of course, lessened the expense. There had been several cases of complaints of accommodation on board transports. He believed that the best plan for despatch and economy would be to introduce a larger number of troop-ships.—Captain Boldero knew nothing about troop-ships, but he knew transports were uncommonly bad.—Lord Howick said that wherever it was practicable it was most desirable that the troops should be conveyed in troop ships, and not in transports, however unpalatable such an arrangement might be to the constituents of the hon. member.—The several votes were agreed to without any division.

WEDNESDAY, March 27.—Mr. Hume inquired if any information had been received as to Col. Prince having ordered several prisoners taken by the Indians in U. Canada to be shot.—Mr. Labouchere said that an explanation on the subject had been given to Sir G. Arthur, which that officer considered unsatisfactory, and a court had in consequence been instituted to inquire into the matter.—Lord J. Russell postponed his motion on the subject of the Irish Government, from 11th to 18th April.

The Ordnance Estimates were introduced by Sir H. Vivian, who explained at some length the different items (as given in the last No. of the N. & M. G.) on which there is an increase, the result of which was that the gross excess over last year amounted to 153,040*l*. In the course of his speech he stated that he had allowed the establishment of small arms to be reduced as far as it was possible or proper. He believed that there were somewhere about 200,000 stand of arms. He had allowed them to go as low as possible, in order to give an opportunity of providing, instead of the old arms, those of a superior kind, which other nations were taking so much pains to give to their soldiers—he meant percussion arms. If this country were called upon to enter into a war, he was quite certain that the first duty of the person at the head of the Ordnance Department would be come down to the House, and take a large vote for the purpose of providing percussion arms. He had taken very considerable pains, since he had the honour of being at the head of that department, to effect improvements in the arms. He believed that very considerable improvements had been made, and he felt assured that every member would agree with him in opinion, that they ought to place in the hands of the soldier a description of arms in which he might have perfect confidence. A commission had decided upon the descriptions of arms which were best for all classes of Military, Cavalry, Rifles, and Infantry. The first consideration had been to provide the same bore for the arms of all. Formerly the pistol, the carbine, and the musket had each a different bore. Now they had similar bores, so that the same bullet would answer all. A supply of percussion rifles had been provided for the Rifle corps, and had been approved of by the Com.-in-Chief. The carbines which had been sent out to Canada had been spoken of in the highest possible terms in the report of the officer commanding there. They had been approved of also by the Commanding Officer of the 5th Dragoon Guards and the 7th Hussars. The muskets provided for the Infantry he (Sir H. Vivian) believed he might venture to say were of a very superior description. A trial had been made by the Marines of the new muskets with very extraordinary results. The report was, that out of 2800 rounds fired by the percussion muskets, only nine missed fire; whereas out of the same number fired by common flint muskets, 822 missed fire. The number of hits by percussion muskets was 777, while the hits with the common muskets were only 540. So that out of the whole number of rounds with the common muskets, nearly one-third missed fire; while the number of hits by the percussion muskets exceeded the others in the proportion of 777 to 540. It was quite impossible for any one not to see that justice to the soldier demanded that he should be supplied with percussion arms.—Mr. Hume complimented the hon. and gallant officer on the clearness of the Ordnance account. There was, however, a total disinclination to retrenchment with respect to both Military and Naval expenditure. He had less objection to the vote for artillery than any other. If the Estimate were double the amount proposed, it could not be more than proportionate to the Army they had voted. The Ordnance Department was better managed than others: our Engineer officers might vie with any in Europe, but there was not a sufficient proportion of them on the Staff.—Col. Thomas complained of the disgraceful state of the barracks throughout the country, which was such, that the hon. member for Kilkenny, who, though he had been bred to the medical service of the Army, and had subsequently found it better to attend to feeding the Sepoys in India as Commissary, always opposed every proposition for the benefit of the Army, would spurn at the quarters which, under the present barrack system, were allotted to old and tried officers of regiments of the line.—Mr. Hume had never attempted to oppose improvements in the Army, and therefore the statement as to his opposing these improvements in the barracks was utterly untrue. He denied the statement altogether, and stated that he (Col. Thomas) was uttering falsehoods in that House [order].—Col. Thomas said, when he alluded to the hon. gent. he had alluded to a circumstance which he believed was thoroughly well known, and which he (Col. T.) believed he (Mr. Hume) would not deny—that he was an Assistant-Surgeon to one of the regiments in India, and was subsequently appointed to the situation of Commissariat. Whether he (Mr. Hume) acted in the double capacity or not, he (Col. T.) did not know, but he (Col. T.) would give his authority—he had heard it in the country. As to the hon. gentleman's assertion about falsehood, it was too contemptible to notice; it was really below contempt [order].—Sir R. H. Vivian said, when he had first become Ordnance Master he had sent a circular to the Barrackmasters, ordering everything to be prepared for the comfort of the troops, and anything that was wanted to be stated, and, therefore, if there was any want, those who had command of the barracks were the persons to blame, and not the Ordnance Department. If complaints had been made in the proper quarter, they would have been attended to directly.—Col. Thomas had not reflected, either personally on Sir H. Vivian, or on his department. What he had stated was the fact—that the barracks were in a disgraceful state, and had not been painted for years. He (Col. T.) understood from the gallant officer of the district, that so far from not having made any complaints, he had written as many reports respecting the state of the barracks as would fill a room.—Sir H. Vivian said the barracks were ordered to be painted every nine years, and to be whitewashed whenever it was necessary.—Capt. Boldero thought that the Marines ought to be provided with great coats as well as the line.—Viscount Howick said the hon. member had assumed that the Marines were an ill-treated force, whereas they were highly favoured, as was proved by the greater disposition to enter that service on the part of the recruits than any other [hear]. The Marines on the Coast of Spain enjoyed an advantage, with respect to rations, over soldiers of two-pence a day. If the request of the hon. member were complied with, the next demand made would be on the part of the soldiers to be placed on the same footing as Marines with regard to rations. It was a most unwise course to bring on discussions of this nature, without due consideration of, or acquaintance with the facts.

The different items were gone through, and agreed to.

The House adjourned till Monday April 8th.

A Duel.—Two Belgian officers fought a few days since near Diest a desperate duel with the broad-sword. Both were taken off the ground severely wounded. The challenger had his cheek laid open, and received a mortal wound in the stomach; the challenged was cut across the breast, and had two fingers of his right hand chopped off.

Literary Notices.

The Popular Songs of Ireland. Collected and Edited, with Illustrations and Notes, by T. Crofton Croker, Esq. H. Colburn.

There is nothing more characteristic of a people than its popular songs; and of all songs, and all people, this is especially true of the Irish. Yet to this day we have remained without an authentic collection of these best and most available materials for forming a consecutive history of the Irish heart and Irish head—as they have existed from time immemorial, and as they will exist till time shall be no more. But all things are for the best; for if the task to which we have alluded had been performed before, it would not now have been done in so excellent a manner by Mr. Crofton Croker—the very individual, of all others, to whom it ought to have been assigned. After naming that gentleman as the editor and annotator of this work, we need scarcely add that it forms a volume of singular interest and even curiosity. But it is more than this—it is a publication of real value, as illustrative of the past and present condition, both mental and moral, of the most singular people in the world. At the same time it is, as a mere collection of lyrical compositions, full of the graces and beauties of which that class of poetry is so eminently susceptible. In either of these points of view Mr. Croker's work would have been highly acceptable; but, by the whole of it has claims to popularity that few, if any vol[illegible] of a similar nature can put forth.

A Letter to the Right Hon. the Secretary-at-War, on Sickness and Mortality in the West Indies. Being a Review of Capt. Tulloch's Statistical Report. By Sir Andrew Halliday, M.D., F.R.S.E., Dep. Inspector-General of Army Hospitals. W. Parker.

THIS is a very interesting pamphlet, and merits the attention of Lord Howick; for it contains many suggestions which are calculated to benefit the troops in tropical climates. In saying thus much in commendation, we cannot but observe on the extraordinary and extraneous matter introduced into the letter. It is rather curious to read the worthy Doctor's opinions respecting chaplains and churches, as remedies against sickness and mortality; but we must confess that, however ill-placed the recommendations, we quite agree with him in opinion that, out of the United Kingdom, the religion of the soldier is much neglected. Fifteen pages out of sixty-three are taken up in matter foreign from the review of Capt. Tulloch's report; and we fear that the Doctor is rather sore, because a Captain of Infantry has, by those stubborn arguments, facts and figures, disproved many of the medical opinions heretofore held. Sir Andrew stoutly denies the correctness of many of these facts and figures; but we doubt not that Capt. Tulloch is habitually too accurate a calculator, and too practical a statist and actuary, to commit the errors set down to his tables. We, of course, can no better decide between the Captain and the Knight than between two Doctors when they disagree. But this we must say, that, judging from the want of lucidus ordo in Sir Andrew's pamphlet, and looking to the masterly execution of Capt. Tulloch's incomparable reports, we are rather led to give credit for accuracy to the latter. One of the most interesting facts in Sir Andrew Halliday's review is, the mention of a discovery of a specific for the cure of fever, by Dr. Warburg, of Demerara, a medicine which seems to have had extraordinary success in the very worst cases. The pamphlet throughout evinces so strongly a party feeling that a medical officer instead of a military officer, however more able, should have been employed, that we feel compelled to take all that Sir Andrew Halliday adduces against the tables of Capt. Tulloch with some hesitation. We have no doubt Capt. Tulloch can, like a good soldier, fight his own battle without our assistance; and Sir Andrew Halliday may find in him an antagonist ready to break a lance with him.

A Narrative. By Sir Francis B. Head. John Murray.

THIS narrative exhibits a great deficiency in Sir Francis Head of the qualities requisite to form statesmen. His most unique mode of protecting a province has been termed Quixotic; to us his whole career in Canada supplies still more vivid reminiscences of Sancho in a somewhat similar predicament. It is due to him to premise that he had never given himself credit for statesmanlike abilities in general, nor for any peculiar knowledge of Canadian affairs, till, like the celebrated governor just alluded to, honours were at once pressed so earnestly upon him, that his attempts at declining them were overruled. The United Service may remark with pride that the only persons who figure to advantage throughout the pages of this work are members of their own body—Sir John Colborne, Sir Archibald Campbell, and the retired officers who gallantly stepped forward when danger was rife. The last are yet unrewarded; the two former were, at the instance of traitors, removed from their governments; and it was only after his talents and energy had saved colonies, that necessity compelled a tardy measure of justice towards Sir John Colborne. We take no notice of the objection of some that our colonies are not worth retaining; they should either be frankly relinquished, or firmly held. The whole affair augurs ill for the future prosperity of this kingdom. Dabblers in politics we have by the million, but of statesmen a lamentable dearth; and the few minds we could bring into action chiefly to be found amongst "the Military men," as Joey Hume (who doubtless for excellent reasons, deprecates their employment as governors,) calls them, cast in such a mould, are unappreciated and unemployed.

If our space would admit, there are passages in the book worth transcribing: we will, however, make room for an extract of a letter from Sir Francis to Lord Glenelg, giving what he terms a general description of the situation of the miserable men who were induced by former Secretaries-at-War to commute their pensions.

"The commuted pensioner in Upper Canada is an improvident veteran with whom the British Government has profitably made a hard bargain; having spent his best days in the service of his country, from severe service and hard drinking he has not remaining strength to gain in this climate sufficient subsistence, and consequently every winter he suffers most bitterly both from cold and hunger. The braver he is, the less he complains; but his sufferings have at last attracted such general commiseration, that last year the legislature felt it their duty to address His Majesty on the subject. If relief be withheld from these poor, worn-out, improvident men, another winter or two will be more than many of them can withstand. When all are gone, the transaction, so far as regards the pecuniary saving, will undoubtedly be at an end, but I respectfully assure your Lordship it is generally considered here that a little blot will remain upon the brilliant history of this province, which it will then be too late to efface."

The Fergusons; or Woman's Love and the World's Favour. 3 vols. H. Colburn.

THIS novel is one of a class of which we would willingly see more—no less on account of their own intrinsic merit and amusement, than by reason of the favourable impression they are calculated to convey of the improved studies and pursuits, of late years, of the younger branches of the English aristocracy.

There cannot be the smallest doubt that "The Fergusons" is written by a person of rank and education, as well as of talent, taste, and observation; and that it will, in this point of view, at once take its stand among those other works of its class which have given so favourable a publicity to the names of Normanby, Lister, Plumer Ward, &c. Its ostensible object, or moral, seems to be that of setting forth the comparative advantages and disadvantages attendant on the one hand on the pursuit of pleasure for itself alone; and on the other, on fulfilling the duties and claims of our station, and turning to a wise and just account the talent and intellectual gifts awarded to us by nature. This general design is worked out in the history of two brothers, "The Fergusons," who are both equally endowed with natural gifts and the favour[illegible] of fortune; but one of whom (in the early part of his career at least) applies these to the purposes of mere pleasure and popularity, while the other seeks his means of happiness in the more quiet and retiring scenes of domestic life. Such is something like the ostensible design of this novel; but its real object of course is, to afford a series of scenes and sketches, drawn from the actual life of high society, of which it illustrates the characteristic features, and displays the advantages, as well as the errors, with a skilful hand and a practised taste and judgment. Nothing, in fact, can be more easy and natural than the principal scenes of this novel; and there is a slight vein of satire runs through them, which gives a piquancy to the reading that can scarcely fail to render this work as popular as it is clever and amusing. As a promise, too, of what the writer may hereafter do in this line of writing, we have still more pleasure in commending this work to the reader's attention.

East India Intelligence.

On Monday last the bulk of the overland mail from India was received in town, furnishing us with the details of what only was partially known before, through that portion of the mail received via Marseilles. We have now received, amongst other papers, a complete file of the Bombay Times—a paper newly established, and of superior merit and more commanding talent than usually displayed in similar publications in our eastern territories. The importance of the subject warrants us in extracting the following summary, prepared expressly for the steamer which left Bombay the day of publication, viz., 19th January:—

"As this number of your Journal will reach England with the packet that leaves Bombay this day by the Hugh Lindsay steamer, we take the opportunity of expressing an earnest hope that the startling facts and still more ominous presages which have pressed with painful rapidity of succession on our attention during the last month—the contumacy of the Jhansee, and other chiefs under the very right hand of our power—the warlike attitude of Nepaul and Burmah—the rumoured appearance of a Russian of rank in Ava, successfully stimulating its monarch to hostile action—the ejection of Lieut Pottinger and Col. Stoddart from Herat, and the accession of that very principality, which we defended, to the Perso-Russian aggressive league against our frontiers—the resistance of Scinde to the march of our force—the desertions in the Native Infantry composing the army of the Indus—the announcement audaciously put forth of the rumoured intention of Runjeet Singh's chiefs to arrest the Governor-Gen. while a guest in their capital—and, perhaps, to these we may add the quiet and accidental dropping in (which has become rather frequent of late) of American men-of-war to reconnoitre our harbours; all these facts, we trust, will at length arouse the public of England to a sense of the present position of this her magnificent, but neglected Indian empire. We hope that the voice of that public will force upon the slow and unwilling perception of the Ministry a conviction of the stern reality and magnitude of the crisis which has arrived, and the necessity for meeting it with a promptitude and an energy commensurate with the occasion. It is no longer time to talk of peaceful professions and negotiations, when the cloven foot of the arch enemy is already seen impressed on the councils of every petty feudatory within, and every powerful neighbour around our frontier,—it is no longer time to dream away the moments, and whisper about sending a regiment, when an empire is at stake."

It has been whispered for some days that despatches of the greatest importance have reached the Bombay Government by the Semiramis steamer, which arrived here from the Scinde coast on 11th inst. That very copious despatches arrived is quite certain; and from the strict secrecy observed respecting their contents, we apprehend that the public conjecture as to their importance is not without some foundation. We are confirmed in this opinion by the general tone of our private communications from the Indus, by conversations with parties well informed upon the subject, and likewise by the perusal of letters addressed to the Moultanee merchants in this city.—Bombay Times, 6th Jan.

Punjaub.—We have just received the following intelligence from the Punjaub, which may be relied on:—

"Ever since the Governor-General entered the Sauk territory, he has met with every possible demonstration of respect. The lion of the Punjab, however he may have grumbled at our new policy touching Affghanistan, in the first instance, seems now reconciled, and earnestly disposed to make his alliance with the British Government more than a name. Lord Auckland had a remarkable proof of this disposition on Runjeet's side while at Amritsir. The Maharajah, to the surprise of all, throwing open the gates of the fortress of Govindgurh, conducted his Lordship and party over the whole of the Fort, and, among other objects of interest, pointed out the vaults containing the Singh's treasures. The Governor General is understood to be particularly gratified by this extraordinary indication of confidence and regard in the conduct of his ally."—Delhi Gazette, Jan. 2.

The Chief of Bawulpore.—We are happy to learn that on the arrival of the first brigade of the Army of the Indus, on the 17th Dec., the chief of Bawulpore sent into camp, for the use of the troops, 15 camels laden with grain, thereby indicating the state of his friendly feeling, and that he was not likely to give them any trouble. The brigade was encamped on the banks of the Sutledge, which is said to be a noble stream, equal to the Ganges itself.—Ibid.

The great difficulty experienced by the Army of the Indus in obtaining supplies, arises, not from a dearth of them, but from their inability to convert their coin or bullion into the currency of the Cabul territory, the [illegible] any other. Another [illegible] be in procuring the [illegible] camels; 10,000 have been already secured, but 25,000 more are necessary for the advance of the conjoined Bengal and Bombay force from Shikarpoor.

Aden.—We believe that much error exists as to the relation in which we are placed with the ruler of Aden, and the object with which Commander Haines, accompanied by a few soldiers, was despatched to the Arabian coast a few months since. A very brief summary of the affair will enable our readers to form their own conclusions. Some time in the year 1837 a buggalow under the British flag, with property belonging to some natives of Bombay, was wrecked and plundered by Arabs, under the government of the chief of Aden. On his refusing to punish the plunderers, or to restore any of the property, application was made to the Bombay Government for protection, and in Nov., 1837 Commander Haines was sent to demand restitution of the plundered property or its value. This he satisfactorily effected. During the mission to Aden, the Chief, dreading that Ibrahim Pacha, with the Egyptian troops, meditated some attack upon his territories, made over Aden to the British authorities, on the promise of British protection, and of a pension being settled on him for his life, and on his children after his death. These proposals Comm. Haines laid before this Government on his return in Feb., 1838, and they were accepted by the Government of India; and Comm. Haines was despatched in Sept., in the H.C.'s sloop-of-war Conte, with a detachment of the Bombay Eur. Reg. as was then supposed, merely to receive over and take charge of Aden, according to the proposal of the Chief, as agreed to by our Government. During Comm. Haines's absence, however, intrigue had been busy at work, and the Chief, on the Commander's return, had changed his mind, and declined to accede to the proposals he himself had formerly made, he refused also to give up possession. The detachment being too small to enforce obedience to the bargain, they have remained before Aden waiting the reinforcement, the result of which will be seen from the official document issued by the Admiralty.—Bombay Gazette, 9th Jan.

[We have in another column given an original and authentic account of the siege.—Ed. N. & M. G.]

A letter from Poonah mentions the arrival of the head-quarters of H.M.'s 4th Regt. at that station, on the 10th Jan. We are informed that Capt. Browne, 7th N.I., has attained the appointment of Brigade-Major at Mhow.—Bombay Times, Jan. 12.

Sir Henry Fane's camp occupies a front of 7,800 yards, a little to the N.W. of Ferozepore; the head-quarters, with Sale's and Arnold's brigades being slightly en potence, in consequence, we imagine, of the nature of the ground. On the extreme right is Sale's brigade, composed of H.M.'s 13th, and the 16th and 48th N.I. Next come the head-quarters on the road leading to the Ghaut upon the Sutledge, about four miles distant, and near which is the camp of the Governor-General. To the left of the head-quarters is Arnold's cavalry brigade, consisting of two troops of Horse Artillery, H.M.'s 16th Lancers, with 2d and 3d L.C. Beyond the Cavalry are the two divisions of Infantry, each comprised of one European and five Native corps, with the park in the centre, whilst to the right of all, and apart from the line, are the first Local Horse. Ferozepore is represented as surrounded by a mud breastwork, of some thickness, and in perfect order, which measures in extent 2257 yards, having in its centre a pucka brick citadel.

In the Naval and Military Gazette of the 15th inst., we published Major Campbell's Memorial to Sir Henry Fane, and to which the following are the official replies:

Assist. Adj.-Gen. Art. Office, Dum Dum, Jan. 2, 1839.

SIR,—I am directed by the Major-General Acting Commandant of Artillery, to forward for your information copy of a letter No. 2037, of the 15th December 1838, from the Adjutant-General of the Army. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant, (Signed) JOHN CARTWRIGHT, A.A.G.A.

To Major Campbell, Comm. 1st Bn. Art.

No. 2037.—From the Adjutant-General of the Army, to the Commandant of Artillery, dated 15th Dec., 1838.

SIR,—I have [illegible] to submit to the Commander-in-Chief a Memorial addressed to His Excellency from Major G. N. C. Campbell, of Artillery, praying that his claims to the honours of the Bath may be brought to notice; and in reply, I am directed to request you will inform that officer, that no reference has ever been made to the Commander-in-Chief, relative to the distribution of the distinction in question; but if Major Campbell had stated his case according to the usual form, for submission to the Hon. the Court of Directors, his Excellency would have forwarded it to Government for transmission to the Home Authorities

(True copy) (Signed) JOHN CARNEGIE, A.A.G.A.

A.A.G.A. Office, Dum Dum, Jan. 2, 1839.

Now the foregoing reply of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to the Memorial transmitted by Major Campbell, addressed to Sir Henry Fane, is dated on the very day that his Excellency vacated the Command of the Bengal Army, as at 4 o'clock P.M. his Excellency embarked at Ferozepore to proceed down the Sutledge for Bombay. It appears, however, that his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief was not referred to in the late nominations to the Order of the Bath; and it is stated, that if Major Campbell had memorialized the Court of Directors, his Excellency would have forwarded the memorial to the Home Authorities: however, as Major Campbell's public services have already been detailed in a memorial transmitted through the Indian Government to the Court of Directors in the month of July, 1835, and as the Court of Directors seem to reserve their recommendations for their own immediate private friends and connexions, Major Campbell prefers to have his claim altogether overlooked, than to obtrude them on public notice, and is satisfied to have submitted his case to the notice of the Commander-in-Chief, his Excellency Sir Henry Fane.

Perceiving by the above laws regularity, encumspection, and conduct, accountable to proper authorities, a jealous attention would be devoted to every branch of the trading marine, and an anxious desire would be soon manifest on the part of its officers, to avoid reproach, censure, and the ill consequences arising from any abuse of power. It now becomes requisite to make provision for guarding against a recurrence of those oppressions and cruelties which hitherto have taken place, and continue in that service against its manner (and have been noticed superficially in this treatise), with a view also to strengthen the accountability of each party, on proof of either oppression or insubordination. It will be prudent to review many sections of the laws formed for the government of the "merchant seamen," in which we cannot help perceiving an unlimited appeal given to shipowner and Master to law. The testimony of either, or coupled with that of the Mate, can not only deprive the mariner of the pay he agrees to serve for, but also to condemn him to a "prison of correction and hard labour," 5 & 6 W. IV, s. 6. Not even qualified is this law, by admitting the evidence of his brother seamen, nor is it limited to punishment, but also awarding fine and double forfeiture of wages.

Thus should a seaman, from any unavoidable cause, remain on shore (with which his intercourse is almost suspended when he joins a trading ship), the master has power to bring forward ex-parte evidence, and cause the above severe punishment to be (through the authority of one magistrate, who perhaps may be as ignorant of the nature of the mariner's peculiar vocation and mutual bearings of all matters relating to the sea service), as he is unaware of the designing and latent causes from which many of these complaints emanate; thus, from the union of two important circumstances, the adjudication cannot be considered equitable, and not being founded on experience. Should this appeal to magisterial interference be caused by apparent or real desertion, neither the reason of the mariner's dislike to join his ship, or the motives which induced him to abandon it, are inquired into; and if even so, there is no prescribed law for the removal of such causes, should any exist, however repugnant or compulsary they may be. There is no alternative left for the mariner between serving and servitude in this case; he is permitted to have no witness on his behalf, no extenuation is entertained; the master becomes at one and the same time complainant, witness, and jury, on whose evidence, substantiated by that of the mate, the magistrate passes judgment. Reflection on even this portion of the law, and its partial administration, will at once enable us to discover the glaring injustice and insufficiency,—to discern the conspicuous evil with which it abounds, and to observe the stimulus it affords to cruelty, giving opportunity for the before-mentioned practices so opposed to the interest of our trading marine. For example, on the arrival of a ship in a foreign port, the master may find it requisite to remain there for some months in order to await a cargo, or from any other cause; finding this unanticipated delay, he contemplates a reduction of the vessel's expenses, to accomplish which he resolves on illegally curtailing the number of his crew. This process commences by putting in practice every possible species of petty oppression, vexatious annoyances, and unnecessary labour, combined with a denial of any indulgence either on board or on shore. The seaman, goaded by this practical system of absolute control, which the master may institute with perfect impunity (frequently at the previous instigation of shipowners), flies from the scene of oppression, and the authors of his persecution. Where is his appeal to redress this grievance, except by desertion? To what tribunal call for justice, with perhaps no definite breach of the peace as a complaint? That type of tyranny most intolerant is frequently that which the law cannot be cognisant of, therefore cannot be current. Urged by these wicked acts of infamy, he quits his ship; the master has followed the dictates of the owner; the work is accomplished; the mariner's pay is sacrificed to his employer, as also his effects. The only expedient left open for the seaman's acceptance is entering into the Royal* Navy, provided it be not considered a perfect act of desertion, which also unjustly hinges on the attestation of the master and mate, which in this case they will, if possible, fail not to prove. Should it otherwise occur, according to the wise provision of sec. xlvi. 5 & 6 Wm. IV., he becomes justly entitled to that he otherwise would have forfeited. If he judiciously seeks refuge in the service of his country, he is rewarded for the voluntary act, in the solicitude shown to promote his welfare, by emancipating him from these difficulties under which he laboured. A thousand occurrences of these iniquitous measures, in varied forms, are every day practised, particularly abroad, which it becomes more fatal, alike to our national renown, our Navy, and the trading marine. To remedy these serious evils and their pernicious effects through the only means apparently practicable, (which is by instituting a nautical tribunal of mutual appeal,) is a matter of deep importance, inasmuch that it would eradicate from the "trading marine" those obnoxious practices resorted to, and hold duly responsible each contracting party of that service. The master and mate, at the cost of their before-mentioned warrants of qualification, for ever or a certain number of years, in proportion to the nature and degree of the offence, and the mariner to suffer a mere exemplary trying and salutary punishment, by the forfeiture of certain advantageous privileges, to be hereafter enumerated, for any acts of insubordination or neglect of duty on his part. To this end, and for the honour of our national equity, and in order to carry into operation the previously mentioned measures, it would be expedient to form a judiciary mixed court, composed of nautical officers of the Royal Navy and trading marine, with a magisterial council or justice of the peace to preside over this court, according to circumstances, for the trial of all offences not capital committed on board of any trading ship.—(To be continued.)

* In the West and East Indies this system is carried on to a very great extent. In the former place the author, while stationed at Nassau, in His Majesty's schooner Pincher, as senior Midshipman of that vessel, in 1827, frequently had occasion to receive trading mariners on board who related the most wanton oppression, from which they were obliged to leave their vessels; they invariably declared that they had no idea of the kindness which they afterwards received in the R.N.

A PLAN BY PHILO-PALINURUS

for improving the condition of the Commissioned Officers of the Navy, as respecting their pay and promotion (the principle being applicable to all other classes of Officers in the Naval Service), and for regulating the introduction of Midshipmen into the service.

In the first instance, the present lists of Captains, Commanders, and Lieutenants should be divided into retired and effective.

The retired list to contain all who by age (say 60) or infirmity, or by holding permanent civil offices, are incapable of serving afloat, they to have retired pay:—Captains, 14*s.* per day; the widow, 100*l.* per annum. The Commander, 12*s.* per day; widow, 90*l.* per annum. The Lieutenant, 8*s.* per day; widow, 80*l.* per annum.

Midshipmen should be introduced into the service as follows

A book to be kept at the Admiralty, wherein the names of all youths (whose parents or guardians intend shall be bred to the commissioned officers' branch of the Naval service) shall be entered as candidates, to be therein inserted from 10 to 10 years old, their mental and physical capacities being perfectly sound, and their elementary education sufficiently adequate for their intended profession. The parent or guardian guaranteeing a proper outfit, and sufficient annual allowance whilst the Midshipman is serving his time.

All British youths to be eligible as candidates, and none else.

From the head of this list the demand for Midshipmen to be supplied.

Time of servitude—in war, six years; in peace, seven years.

Number on board the ship—in peace, one third less than in war.

Present passing regulations to be revised, and to be more enlarged, definite, and explicit.

Midshipmen's pay to be 3*d.* a month in all rates.

After passing, to become Mates, pay then 5*l.* a month, and name then to be taken off the Midshipman's class in the general Navy List, and transferred to the Mates' class, from the head of which list the vacancies in the Lieutenants' list should be supplied.

But, for the due encouragement and reward of very extraordinary, gallant, and meritorious service in battle, or otherwise, one-third or one fourth of the Lieutenants' vacancies should be reserved for any Mate, who may have been for such extraordinary conduct especially noted in any Commander in Chief's despatches, or have obtained his Captain's certificate, setting forth such special conduct; such fact having been investigated and approved, and the said certificate countersigned by the Commander-in-Chief of the station where it occurred; then such Mate to have one of the reserved Lieutenants' vacancies; and if there were not sufficient extraordinary cases of merit, than the Lieutenants' vacancies to be filled up from the head of the ordinary list of Mates.

Quarterly promotions should alone take place.

The Lieutenants' active service pay should be, for the senior one on board, 8*s.* 6*d.* per day; the others, 7*s.* 6*d.* per day, and 6*d.* a-day more on board flag-ships.

The Lieutenants' half-pay should be for the senior third on the list, 7*s.* per day; the next third, 6*s.* per day; and the junior third part, 5*s* per day.

Widows' pension 70*l.* per annum, if husband be slain in fight; 60*l.* if otherwise killed on service; others, 50*l.*

The Commanders' (if the list be retained, as heretofore, the country has been deprived of some of the first seamen and officers in the Navy, viz. the First Lieutenants of ships, who by the chance of action got there, but never afterwards had interest to get employed as Commanders,) vacancies should be supplied from the head of the Lieutenants' list, making an adequate reserve for the like purposes, and so verified, as shown in the cases of extraordinary merit in Mates.

Commanders' active pay should be 12*s.* per day in all rates.

Their half-pay, the senior moiety 12*s.*, the rest 10*s.* per day.

Widows' pensions 80*l.*, 70*l.*, 60*l.* per annum, for like cases as shown for Lieutenants.

Captains' vacancies should be supplied in like manner from the head of the Commanders' list, with adequate reserve for extraordinary merit in Commanders.

Captains' active pay to be from 1*l.* to 2*l.* 15*s.* per day, agreeable to the rate of the ship serving in.

The half pay, senior third 18*s.*, second third 17*s.*, and junior third 16*s.* per day.

Widows, 100*l.*, 90*l.*, and 80*l.* per annum, as in like cases of Lieutenants.

Flag-Officers to be taken from the head of the Captains' list, without any reserve being made. As officers, medals, and pensions, rewarding equal captures, and very special merit in Captains?

Flag-Officers' active pay from 1,800*l.* to 2,000*l.* per annum, agreeably to class and station of command.

Half pay, Rear-Admirals, 30*s.*, Vice-Admirals, 40*s.*, Admirals, 50*s.*, Admirals of the Fleet, 60*s.* per day.

Widows' pensions, Rear, 150*l.*, Vice, 170*l.*, Full, 200*l.*, Admiral of the Fleet, 230*l.*; if killed in action or in service, 50*l.* addition.

Rewards for successful actions and for special meritorious service: nobility; first class, orders, medals, and pensions.

Members of the Royal Family to be exempt from these regulations, their promotions to be by Order in Council.

All officers to serve when called on; peremptory refusal, dismissal, infirmity cases, &c., to a retired list.

Quarterly promotions should not exceed demand for officers; and no discontent could justly arise, as each grade officer would see there could be no injustice, and that his station in British society was liberally attended to by his country.

TO CABINET-MAKERS, UPHOLSTERERS, and BROKERS.—The Trade can be supplied cheaper than they can manufacture at THURNELL'S extensive Manufactory, 71, Leadenhall-street, where, for the accommodation of the trade in general, every article in the CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, and BEDDING is kept ready. Goods made to order with the utmost punctuality. As W. T. has but one system of doing business, putting five per cent. on the cost price, the country traders will find this establishment surpass all in London, and will be astonished at the lowness of the prices for ready money only.—71, Leadenhall-street.

J. DELCROIX AND CO., Perfumers to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, &c. &c.

No. 188, New Bond Street (opposite Stevens's Hotel).

The great superiority of J. Delcroix and Co.'s Perfumery been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz

BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared expressly for her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY GEORGE IV.'S PERFUME, BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.

DELCROIX'S VEGETABLE EXTRACT, for cleansing Hair, &c.

POMMADE REGENERATRICE, for the growth and preservation of the Hair.

VEGETABLE CREME des SULTANES, for preserving, beautifying, and whitening the skin.

DELCROIX'S celebrated POUDRE UNIQUE, for dyeing the hair, &c.

PATE D'AMANDE A LA REINE, so justly esteemed for its healing and softening quality.

The TRUE OPIATE of the Circassian Ladies, for the preservation and embellishment of the Teeth.

To Ladies.—POUDRE SUBTILE, for removing superfluous Hairs.

DELCROIX'S ANTI-SCORBUTIC ELIXIR and ANTI-SCORBUTIC TOOTH POWDER, for preserving the Teeth and Gums from decay, and curing the Toothache.

To Gentlemen.—For the comfort of easy shaving, they can, with every satisfaction, recommend their Vegetable Polish Soap Paste, and Pasta del Castagna.

ALMOND OIL SOAP, for Rough or Chapped Hands, and for softening and improving the Skin.

Also, Farina's Genuine Eau de Cologne—Eau Aromatique—Real Swiss Arquebusade, and all other articles of Perfumery of the very best description.

* J. Delcroix and Co. respectfully request that attention be particularly paid to the address upon their labels, No. 188, New Bond-street. No others can be warranted genuine.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA, FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfumer superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

* The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Distrielsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3*s.* 6*d.*, 7*s.*, and 15*s.* each.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.—FAMILIES in WANT of really good SERVANTS, of every description, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, 328, Oxford-street, corner of Regent-circus, (removed from 156, Oxford-street—established in 1580), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as domestics are waiting to be hired from Ten to Five o'clock. Convenient rooms are appropriated to engagements, which prevents unnecessary trouble at home through promiscuous applications. Many persons are prejudiced against an establishment for hiring servants; but if the servants possess good characters, it must certainly be obviously absurd to suppose that they can be injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure situations. Fee for obtaining a servant, 2*s.* 6*d.*; as many as may be required in a family per annum, 14*s.*

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1828, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Borgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading or any other Sauce.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, OR PEARL DENTIFRICE.

A Vegetable White Powder, prepared from Oriental Herbs of the most Delicious Odour and Sweetness, and free from any mineral or pernicious ingredient; it eradicates the Tartar from the Teeth, removes decayed Spots, preserves the Enamel, and fixes the Teeth firmly in their sockets, rendering them beautifully white. Being an anti-Scorbutic, it eradicates the Scurvy from the Gums, strengthens, braces, and renders them of a healthy red; it removes unpleasant tastes from the mouth, which often remain after fevers, taking medicine, &c.; and imparts a delightful fragrance to the breath.

Price 2*s.* 9*d.* per box, duty included.

ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT immediately relieves the most violent Toothache, Gum Boils, Swelled Face, &c.; it is also an excellent Stomachic, in cases of Flatulency, Spasmodic Affections, &c., and gives instantaneous relief. Price 2*s.* 9*d.*, 4*s.* 6*d.*, and 10*s.* 6*d.* per bottle.

* Notice.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, London, is engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on each; also printed in red on the Wrapper in which the article is enclosed.

†‡† Be sure to ask for "ROWLAND'S."

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

WITHIN a period of Two Months upwards of Three Hundred Patients were successfully treated at the Metropolitan Hospitals with FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

By Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London:—

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

(Signed) "Joseph Henry Green.

"46, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

This invaluable Medicine is confidently recommended in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Urethral Discharges, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland; its purifying effects upon the general health render it particularly applicable in all cases of relaxed fibre and nervous debility.

Prepared only by George Franks, Surgeon, 96, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2*s.* 9*d.*, 4*s.* 6*d.*, and 11*s.* each.

Mr. Franks may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

Caution.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:— "Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"Dear Sir,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. Lofthouse."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous. It is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 85, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1*s.* 1½*d.*, 2*s.* 9*d.*, and 4*s.* 6*d.* each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Venders.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

INFANTRY.

3d—That gallant corps, Her Majesty's 3d Buffs, was by the latest accounts from camp, still complaining of the hardship and injustice inflicted upon it, by the proceeding which had given to the 13th Light Infantry the opportunity of proceeding to Cabool, while the former regiment is left to waste its energies at the new head-quarters of the Sirhind division, Ferozepore. We think the case of the Buffs an exceedingly hard one, and very naturally grating to the feelings of true soldiers. By the rules of the service, the senior regiments are to have a preference in the selection of all detachment and out-post duties. The principle is laid down very distinctly in the very first page of the King's Regulations published in June, 1837, and particularly commended, "By Order," to the attention of Commanders-in-Chief, &c. &c. Nowhere is the practice of determining claims by a lottery either declared or recognised, excepting in the instance of promotion to the rank of Lieut.-Colonel, wherein money and good luck are the prime agents. The boasted discipline of the British Army,—its pride, regularity, and efficiency,—would soon beat an end if every thing were reduced to a system of chances, and the dice-box appointed the sole arbiter of conflicting pretensions. We hope most sincerely that the officers of the Queen's Army will cogitate upon this, and not suffer the very dangerous example set by Sir Henry Fane to be drawn into a precedent. We know they are averse to make a fuss about their individual grievances, so long as the approach to the authorities by memorial is the recognised and legitimate form of address; but the present grievance is of so general a nature, and involves considerations of such deep importance, that they owe it to themselves to depart from their usual reserve, and cause their voice to be heard at the Horse Guards,—their fountain head of honour. In making these remarks, in justice to a highly distinguished regiment, and to the Army at large, we think it right to protect ourselves from any misconceptions touching the luck of Her Majesty's Light Infantry. It is impossible to deny the claims of that excellent corps to the highest possible distinction for its good services and present efficiency: it is impossible, we firmly believe, to shew that it is not in all respects the equal of the 43d Buffs: but the question which we would moot, is not as to the comparative merit of two regiments, but as to the safety of introducing a novel process of selection, which substitutes a spirit of gambling for a principle of order and regularity.—Englishman, 24th Dec.

10th—One comp., 40 r. and f., from Limerick to Newcastle, 30th and 31st March. Private Donnellan, who was sentenced by court-martial to be discharged with disgrace, was last week drummed out of the barracks. He had been 10 years in the service. Private J. M'Killigot is sentenced to 14 years' transportation, for desertion, and making away with arms, clothing, and necessaries.

11th—A detachment are under orders to be in readiness to join the service companies in Canada.

12th—The comp. from Newcastle to Tralee, 31st March to 2d Apr. Two comp. from Tralee to Cork, 1st to 5th Apr.

13th—See 94th, and East India Intelligence.

14th—The Quadruple hired army vessel, conveying Lt. Cardew and the light company 74th to Trinidad, is to proceed from the latter place to St. Kitt's, and take a company of the 14th regiment to Dominica. Captain Douglas and the Grenadier comp. with Surgeon Dowse, landed at Barbadoes on 26th February.

21st—Lieut. Holland is gone on sick leave until 24th May.

24th Depot—An order has been been received by Major Smyth, commanding, to hold in readiness a draft, consisting of 1 Capt., 1 Ens., 2 Serjs., and 50 r. and f., to embark to join the service companies.

25th—An inspection took place on Monday, in the Barrack-sq., Cork, before Major-Gen. L'Estrange, who, after manœuvring the corps in several evolutions, expressed the highest approbation of their discipline and appearance.

26th—See East India Intelligence.

30th—Two comps. from Kinsale to Tralee, 1st to 5th April.

37th—are, it is reported, under orders for Canada. In Spanish-Town, one of the most unhealthy stations, during the last six months, which are considered as the most fatal in the year, the 37th Regt. has but lost a single man, which happy circumstance is mainly attributable, as we learn, to the care and attention shown to the sick by Doctor Wahab, whose unremitting exertions cannot be sufficiently praised. He attended his patients by night and day, with his own hand administered their medicines, and his efforts have been crowned with a success truly gratifying, and to which, we trust, the attention of Government will be drawn. If similar attention was bestowed on all the troops, and were they prevented from excesses, we are confident sickness would be far less prevalent, and the mortality one third smaller than has been shown by Capt Tulloch's Report.—Jamaica Dispatch.

38th—Lieut.-Col. Piper, on the 13th ult., at the celebration of the 138th anniversary of the embodying of this corps, presented it with new colours. After the ceremony, a large party of visiters were invited to a sumptuous lunch at the regiment mess-room, and in the evening a numerous party were entertained by Col. Piper and officers, at dinner. On the next day, the non-commissioned officers gave a ball and supper in the Town-hall, to which the Serjeants on the recruiting staff, and a numerous party of inhabitants of Enniskillen were invited. The civilians returned the compliment by a similar entertainment to the Serjeants and families of the corps.

Bunbury has arrived at Barbadoes from Demerara.

The transport, when 30 miles N.W. of Cape Sable, was fallen in with by the David Luckie, in distress and leaky, having struck on a reef. The David Luckie took all the women and children out of the Elizabeth, and about 150 soldiers, and landed them at Shelburne, leaving 36 soldiers on board, to assist at the pumps, who arrived at Shelburne on 2d March, in the Elizabeth.

Q., Head quarters, 53d Feb., 1839.—The whole of the 74th in garrison, with the exception of the invalids, to proceed to the regimental depot, will embark on Wednesday, the 27th inst., on board the Sovereign transport, for Trinidad, the baggage, women, and children, will be at the Royal Wharf at six A.M., and the troops for embarkation at two P.M. On the disembarkation of the 74th, at Trinidad, the Sovereign will receive the remainder of the 89th regiment, and convey them to St. Kitt's, Nevis, and Antigua, landing at Antigua as many officers and men as are required to complete the right wing of that corps there, and the remainder at St. Kitt's and Nevis; she will remove the company of the 14th at St. Kitt's and Nevis to Dominica, returning to Barbadoes with such invalids and men as are authorised to join the regimental depot. The 14th will occupy St. Lucia, Dominica, and Barbadoes, two companies at each station. The 74th will be stationed at Trinidad and Tobago, and the 89th right wing Antigua, left wing St. Kitt's and dependencies.

75th—Maj.-Gen. L'Estrange on Monday inspected the draft under orders for the Cape.

76th—On the 12th Feb. the following draft landed from the Barossa.—Brevet-Major Fitzgerald, Captain Bruce, Lieuts. The Barossa sailed for Jamaica on the evening of the 13th, calling at St. Lucia to land the draft for the 14th regt. Lieut. Evans has obtained six months' leave of absence, and sailed on the 12th in the Barbadian for London. A General Court-Martial assembled on the 14th Feb. at St. Ann's, Barbadoes, Lieut.-Col. English, M.E., President, for the trial of Ensign H. W. Dickenson, on charges arising from some misunderstanding which took place between him and another officer while on board the Barossa.

85th—A correct Memoir of the late Colonel of this corps, Lieut.-General Sir Herbert Taylor, will be found in our columns. It is reported that Sir W. Thornton will get the regt.; he has at present the 96th. Sir William reformed the 85th, and for many years commanded it.

89th—Lieut.-Col. Basden, Capt. Hewson, Ensigns Thornton, Crawford, and Tydd, have sailed for Antigua—and see 74th. "The 89th has been very popular here, and its departure will be much regretted."—Trinidad Standard.

90th—A detachment are under orders to join the service companies in Ceylon.

94th Depot—were on Monday inspected by Maj.-General L'Estrange.

RIFLE BRIGADE, 1ST BATT.—On Saturday the Lieutenant-Col. and Officers of the battalion quartered at Weedon gave a sumptuous entertainment to Viscount Jocelyn, their late respected Adjutant, previous to his proceeding to the seat of war in the East, on the banks of the Indus. His Lordship at the same time presented the mess of the battalion with an elegant chased piece of plate, as a memento of his regard.

1ST WEST INDIA REGT.—On the 9th Feb. the Anna hired transport arrived at Barbadoes, after a rapid passage, from Sierra Leone. A draft of 122 recruits, under the command of Lieut. Snow, R.A. corps, was on board; 60 landed on the 12th, to complete the three companies at Barbadoes to 100 r. and f., and the remainder sailed on the 12th for St. Lucia. The men are young, stout, and tall Africans, of different nations, chiefly Mandingoes, Eboas, Kangas, and one Krooman—the first instance of one of this tribe enlisting or leaving Africa. The Kroomen are generally employed in working in the ships when at Sierra Leone, loading and unloading cargoes; and, having made a sum of money, they return to their country, and remain there until the profits of their labour are spent. The 1st West India Regiment being now upwards of 1,200 strong, two additional companies are to be formed. Recruits can be procured in numbers at Sierra Leone; and by the great attention and indefatigable exertions of the recruiting officer, Captain James Douglas, 500 have been sent by him to his regiment within twelve months. In former days, and under other circumstances, such important service would have insured promotion at once to a Majority.

RL. ARTILLERY.—An exchange of companies has been sanctioned between Lieut. Price, of the 6th batt., and Lieut. Blackwood, of the 1st batt. Lieut. Blackwood proceeded for Dublin with Capt. Freer's comp., which marched on Tuesday morning for the Birmingham Railway Station, for conveyance to Liverpool: the company was billeted in Birmingham on Tuesday night, and proceeded the following morning for Liverpool. —Capt. Evans' comp. will relieve Capt. Chalmers' comp., occupying the outposts from Dublin. The latter comp. is to be assembled at Charlemont, to replace Capt. Palmer's, which will proceed to Island Bridge.

The Sovereign transport, having on board Lieut.-Col. Grant, R.A., Capt. Elgee's comp. for Jamaica, and detachments, with Brev.-Major Stuart's, and detachments for Barbadoes, arrived at Carlisle Bay on the 15th Feb., and landed on the following day. Lieut.-Col. Grant, R.A., relieves Col. Story in the command of the R.A. Capt. Elgee's comp., bound to Jamaica, were transhipped on the 19th Feb. on board the Barossa transport, and sailed the same evening. The Barossa takes on to Jamaica drafts for the several corps in that island. Lieut.-Col. Freeth, 64th reg., commands. Capt. Cookson, R.A., who had in the first instance applied for Demerara, where Brev.-Major Haultain's comp. is stationed, proceeds to Trinidad. Lieut. Rodwell to Tobago. Both stations have been without an Artillery officer for some considerable period, and the Artillery in charge of the Line. It is supposed that Brev.-Major Stuart will be Assist. Firemaster; but at present Lieut. Fitzmayer is doing the duty of the department as well as that of Acting Firemaster. Col. Grant took over the command on the 27th Feb. He will likewise be Commandant, being Senior Officer in garrison. Col. Story embarks immediately for England, Lieut. Hamilton, the Acting Adjutant, has also obtained leave, and will return to Europe shortly. Col. Story is very generally and deservedly respected by all parties. Warm and impartial in his friendships for his corps, and ever ready to serve them, his attentions to the officers recently arrived were those of a friend, and such as might have been expected from such a worthy man. May his footsteps be followed!

G.O., March 30, 1839.—The Master-General has been pleased to approve of First Lieut. Buchanan being posted to the 4th batt., and First Lieut. Oldfield to the 9th battalion.

A. DICKSON, D.A.G.

MILITIA.—Lord Carrington, as Lord Lieutenant of the county, has ordered the head-quarters of the Bucks Militia Staff to be removed from Buckingham to High Wycombe.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Thomas M'Mahon, Bart., K.C.B., relinquished the command of the South-West District on Monday, when it was assumed by Major-Gen. Sir Hercules Pakenham, K.C.B.

The following depots and officers arrived at Canterbury on the 3d from Chatham, under the command of Captain Fothergill, viz., 28th, 50th, 54th, and 80th depots. Capt. Sawbridge and Ensign Aplin, 28th; Lieut. Murray, 50th; Capt. Clark and Ensign Skerray, 54th; Capt. Steuart and Ensign Riley, 80th. Ensign Wakefield, 50th regiment, arrived a day before the troops, to receive their quarters from the barrack department; this gentleman having been selected as an intelligent and experienced officer for that duty. On the arrival of the above officers, they were invited and dined with Lieut.-Colonel the Earl of Cardigan, and the officers of the 11th Light Dragoons.

It is rumoured that Ensign Wakefield will be appointed Adjutant of the above depots, having acted in that capacity in Ireland, and received great praise from the General Officer for his "zeal, intelligence, and assiduity."

Lieut.-Col. Taylor, Dep. Quartermaster-Gen., will take the place of Col. Rowley, at British Guiana.

Claims to the amount of 11,000*l.* have already been proved against Messrs. Ashley, of Regent-street, London, Army Agents, bankrupts. Major Maclean, late 27th, is appointed one of the assignees.

Major-General Sir Charles Napier, K.C.B., has this week assumed the command of the Northern district—head-qrs. Nottingham.

According to the Annuaire Militaire on Jan. 1, there were 320 general officers in the French Army, viz.:—

VICE-REGAL STAFF.—The following is a correct list of the officers who, with the sanction of the General Commanding-in-Chief, have been appointed to the Staff of his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland:—To be Private Secretary—Capt. F. Romilly, Scots' Fusilier Guards. To be Aides-de-Camp:—Capt. R. G. Williams, 24th reg.; Lieut. Lord Cosmo G. Russell, 93d; Esq. Hon. J. W. Fortescue, 29th. To be Extra Aides-de-Camp—Capt. T. J. Burke, 1st Dragoons; Capt. W. D. Stewart, 2d do.; Capt. Ralph Bernal, 7th Fusiliers; Lieut. Hon. R. H. Browne, 6th Hussars; Lieut. Hon. St. George Foley, 53d reg.; Cornet Hon. C. A. Dillon, 7th Dragoon Guards; Cornet Hon. George O'Callaghan, 17th Lancers.

Commanders-in-Chief in India.—The army of India has been accustomed of late years to regard the advent and departure of their Commanders-in-Chief with utter indifference, for since Lord Hastings left India, there has been but little reciprocity of feeling between the Indian Army and their Commanders. Since 1823, no less than five Commanders-in-Chief have come out from England, besides the temporary infliction of Lord William Bentinck, and the nominal appointment of the respectable but weak-minded Watson. Thus, on an average for the last fifteen years, an Indian Commander-in-Chief's period of service has been about twenty-six months, and no less than seven Commanders have been exercising control over the Company's Army; of these Sir Edward Barnes was pre-eminently the best, and but for his indiscreet difference with Sir Charles Metcalf, we are not aware of the slightest military fault ever committed by this gallant officer, and we know instances where he conferred his patronage in a most disinterested manner, and contrary to the wishes of the then Adjutant-General of the Army, whose object was to forward the views of his own personal friends. Next to Sir Edward we should place Lord Combermere, who excelled his predecessor, Sir Edward Paget, in tact, and contrived to avoid committing himself with the Government at a time when every attempt was made by Lord William Bentinck to render his Lordship responsible for the great excitement which was created by the never-to-be forgotten robbery of the half-batta measure. Lord Combermere was courteous in his manners, and united considerable quickness of apprehension to a great command of temper. As a Military Commander, he evinced the utmost discretion and indefatigable personal exertion in conducting the Military operation at the siege of Bhurtpore. On several occasions where his Lordship had sent orders by his Aides-de-Camp to the Engineer department, and to the officers commanding batteries, of a nature that were not advisable to be carried into effect, his Lordship calmly listened to the verbal representations of the officers of both departments, and on more than one occasion approved of his orders not having been carried into immediate effect. Lord Combermere's greatest fault was the extreme parsimony that regulated his personal expenditure, and which was quite unworthy of the high situation and amply endowed income which he held. Next to his Lordship we shall class Sir Edward Paget, a man of unexceptionable private character, indomitable spirit, chivalrous gallantry, and unostentatious liberality, but who had acquired, though unfortunate circumstances, the most erroneous opinions in reference to the general characteristics of the Company's Army. Next comes the late Lord Dalhousie, one of the most respectable noblemen in Scotland. Shortly after his arrival in India, his Lordship was afflicted with a paralytic stroke, which in some measure incapacitated his Lordship from fulfilling the duties of his high office, however, this defect was more than compensated by the nomination of an Adjutant-General (Col. C. Pagan), who united to a thorough knowledge of official detail, a great aptitude for business, a high and soldier-like feeling, a kind and generous disposition, a richly-cultivated mind, and the manners and demeanour of a well-educated gentleman. Under these circumstances, Lord Dalhousie had an advantage which none of his predecessors or successors have had the good fortune to obtain, and had Lord Dalhousie's health not suffered so severely, and rendered his Lordship occasionally somewhat querulous, we have no doubt that this nobleman would have been as much endeared to the Army of India, as he was to his tenants in the neighbourhood of Dalhousie Castle. As to Lord William Bentinck and Major-General Watson, neither deserve mention as Commanders-in-Chief; the former was only notorious as the tool as a Governor-General for carrying into effect the half batta order; the latter drew his salary, and allowed his Adjutant-General, Col. Lindley, to act as he pleased.—Englishman.

When injustice has once been committed, it is curious to observe the callous ingenuity with which it is followed up and driven home to the bosom of its victim. Thus, it is not enough that the slighted Subalterns of the Peninsula should be doggedly denied the badge which every officer—every civilian—of right feeling and common sense admits to be his due—it does not suffice that he has witnessed for twenty-four years the honour which he covets, and shed his best blood to win, worn by comrades whose claims, compared with his own, count as days to years,—that his prime is passing into the sere and yellow leaf without any distinguishing guerdon of military—nay, of human—ambition to cheer that stage of existence when the veteran is prone to "Shoulder his crutch and show how fields were won"

No—as if the measure of his mortification were not full—he is daily compelled to see military decorations showered by Royal authority upon the hirelings of a foreign power—the mass of whom never bore a British commission, nor faced a foe in the service of their country. Can those who have the power of redressing this wrong continue indifferent to its aggravated operation, adhering rather to the dictates of a cold-blooded formalism than yielding to the just and generous impulses of a profession, the guiding principle of which is—HONOUR?—United Service Journal.

PRUSSIAN ARMY.—Since the retirement of the Cavalry General, Count Zieten, who obtained on the occasion the rank of Field-Marshal, and the death of the Infantry General, the Prince and reigning Landgrave of Hesse-Homberg, the Prussian army has but ten officers of so high a rank in active service. They are Prince William (the King's brother); Prince Augustus, Baron Von der Knesebeck, Baron de Borstell; Count de Luttum, Minister of State; M. de Rauch, Minister of War; M. de Muffling, Governor of Berlin; the Prince Royal; and Count de Brandenburg, who has succeeded to Count Zieten. The superior Generals not in active service are, the Elector of Hesse, MM. de Jagow, de Schöler I., de Wolzogen, de Schöler II., and the King of Hanover.

The Senior Officer in Demerara is allowed 400*l.* sterling per annum from the colony.

Military Establishments.—The warning voice that has so long and so loudly depl ed the condition of our warlike establishments, which has called attention to the state of the east, the west, and the provinces, as pregnant with danger and alarm; the voice that pronounced our Navy to be inadequately prepared for impending emergencies, that proved our Military forces to be actually engaged in a contest to which their strength was unequal; the voice that proclaimed the approach of war, though disbelieved like Cassandra, even like Cassandra was prophetic of truth. We are at war, as the Duke of Wellington justly said, in two parts of the world, in Asia and in America—in India and in Canada; and to what was thus described as a war in two parts of the world, is superadded an extreme probability of our being soon engaged in active hostilities with the United States. Yet all our establishments are peace establishments, essentially peace establishments; and while it is admitted on all hands, that, notwithstanding the exertions of the Admiralty during the last year, it would be extremely difficult for us to send such a reinforcement to our Naval stations abroad, and equip such an armament for our protection at home, as a declaration of war against any first-rate power would render necessary, our land forces are only to be increased by the miserable amount of 5000 men. We have been defeated in India, or at least our operations in that quarter have been baffled, we can scarcely maintain Canada against smouldering treason and the assault of sympathisers whom their Government as yet pretends to discountenance, the whole power of the United States is to be brought to bear against us on the territory in dispute between New Brunswick and Maine. 50,000 Militia are to be called out, and 3000 regular troops are to be added to the Army; Congress has empowered the President to assist Maine in its present enterprise and its truly American mode of settling the boundary question—and all the preparations about to be made to meet these difficulties amount to the raising of 5000 men. An inadequate force is worse than none at all, it is a useless expense—it damps the courage of the men, and it dispels that prestige attached to the national name which is the surest herald of victory. The Americans have set about the seizure of the disputed territory with all the sturdy energy, and much of the political bad faith proper to republicans, from the days of Rome and Carthage downwards. The whole union is animated with the spirit of one man, and that man a hero, a reckless one, but still a hero—active, resolute, and enamoured of positions, retreat from which borrow fabled. The English Government has done nothing—nay, it has done worse than nothing;—it has ordered the representative of the sovereign to resist, but it has left him without the means of resistance, so that if he obey his orders, not only will the disputed territory be lost, but New Brunswick to boot, and then what shall save Her Majesty's dominions south of the St. Lawrence? The English Government has done worse than nothing, for its Minister for Foreign Affairs has avowed his fear of strengthening the Governor of New Brunswick, lest, forsooth, the jealousies of the Americans should be excited; the English Government has done worse than nothing, for while its Army is avowedly unequal to its duties in every part of the world, its Minister of War proposes an addition to the troops, not adequate to supply the deficiency of any one corps that is actively engaged; the English Government has done worse than nothing, for to American armaments it opposes the chance of negotiations. Negotiations! America must have the disputed territory, or must be beaten. Give her the disputed territory, and next year she will require more; give her the disputed territory, and every State of the Union will be confirmed in the belief that she may wage war on her own account, secure of the assistance of the Federal Government, and secure that England fears to cope with the Federal Government, give her the disputed territory, and see how long Canada will be retained, with what demeanour France will bear questioning of her encroachments on the coast of the Pacific, and with how deferential an ear Russia will listen to remonstrance against her advances in Asia. America has thrown down the gauntlet—she has brought the question to an issue, and she defies us.—It to defiance we retort defiance, if we take up the gauntlet, if we accept the challenge, war ensues; but better far war than ignominious truckling, which will not only bring disgrace on the national honour, but (for immaculate honour is a tower of strength) ruin on the national interests.—Monthly Law Magazine.

HINTS TO OFFICERS EMBARKING FOR CANADA.

Requisites (referring only to winter).—1. A large, not dandily-tight, P jacket, lined with woollen. 2. Fine blue pilot-cloth regimental frock coat, double-breasted, regimental buttons, sleeves lined with flannel, black Astracan collar—not cuffs of the same, for it is difficult to draw the P over them. 3. Pantaloons of fine pilot-cloth—regimental colour, if to be got, if not, blue. 4. The regimental forage cap, with band and ear-covers of fur, is the best and cheapest winter head-piece. The adjuncts are to be had in any Canadian town. 5. Blue Indian-rubber cloak, with sleeves. 6. Do. do. haversack. 7. Waterproof Wellington boots—ditto goloshes, well up to instep. N.B.—Winter boots and shoes to be large, so as to wear the thickest sort, or even two pair, of socks, Commerell's socks the best. 8. Two pair of best blankets, and a stock of flannel. 9. Canteen, holding breakfast things for two, and a few plates and dishes, all of commonest deal, and (if the individual be not of the Temperance Society) a flask or two, with tumblers and wine glasses. This article of regimental outfit, the canteen, usually quoted as useless by parents fitting out their sons, might not have been compatible with Peninsula old-soldiering, but "in these degenerate days" it is most requisite. 10. A small tool chest, containing merely some half-dozen implements of the roughest work. It is not to be bought in this country. 11. A small double pocket-pistol gives a feeling of security in "the lonely round" of the officer on duty, and may protect a despatch.

Luxuries.—1. A good thick carpet, say twelve by fifteen feet, with rug. 2. Strong moreen curtains for two windows. 3. A saddle, with D's fore and aft; small waterproof horse-valise for a change of clothes; small pair of holsters, one for your protection, the other for grog and grog. N.B.—I have seen a tin case holding a pint of liquor, a parcel of sandwiches, and half a dozen cigars, fitted into a holster. Apropos to the article saddle—a really good English saddle can never be bought cheap, and is never dear. 4. A couple of horse blankets. 5. Double and single bridle. 6. Set of gig, tandem, or other harness, with extra long tugs for sleighing. N.B.—The saddle is the only part of horse equipment which is not to be found tolerably good in the larger towns of British North America. Carriage-harness is well made and well suited to the country, and scarcely half the price of London harness. Sleighing is the only winter out-door amusement, except skating. Every one who likes to do as his neighbours do, will, whether his purse can or cannot afford it, drive his sleigh. Driving-whips, by-the-by, are bad in the colonies; but they are awkward articles to carry about. I wish some one would try the experiment of the fishing-rod splice for rendering tandem-whips portable. 7. A pair of thick drab cloth, or waterproof mud-boots, or overalls, for riding in cold or wet weather. 8. Skaits. 9. A large prepared sheep skin rug for sleigh, &c.

Shooting.—1. Good double gun; 2,000 copper caps; 6oz of wadding, or shee's, small case of Eley's patent cartridges, part of them loaded with buck-shot. These should be soldered in tin. 2. Rifle. From what I have seen and heard of eastern and western shooting, I would not take one at a gift. 3. Indian-rubber or painted canvass cover for gun. 4. The dog best calculated, in my mind, for these coverts and climate, is a small but strong, good-nosed, but not too finely bred, setter. An active, rough coated retriever, good at water, is a great aid. Both are very scarce in this country.

Fishing.—1. Fly-rods not too limber—joined by splice. 2. A few hanks of best gut. 3. Limerick hooks of sizes—but larger than those usually in fashion at home. 4. A few gaudy salmon-flies. No other ready-made English flies will avail.

Hunting.—The sports-man, who is inclined to follow my advice, will leave his "pink and skins" in merry England, or Green Erin, contenting himself whilst in this country, with recollections of that first of field sports, fox hunting. If, however, the red-hot Nimrod must perforce follow the Montreal hounds over a country whose surface alternately emulates brick and biddime, and over zig-zag fences from six to ten feet high, let him sport—vice tops—the long jack hook, a la Alvanley, which, hunting apart, is always useful for riding in the deep roads of Canada, and may be worn in uniform.—Correspondent U. S. Journal.

PORTSMOUTH, April 5.—(From our own Correspondent).—Admiral Sir P. Durham is not to strike his flag until the 15th inst., when the Britannia will be paid off, and re-commissioned the following day by Capt. Ellice. Boadicea transport sailed on Sunday for Bermuda, with convicts from the hulks at Woolwich and Portsmouth: these men, amounting to 150, are to be employed in finishing the government works at that island. Victor went into harbour on Monday morning, and shortly after was warped into the basin: at four o'clock the crew were paid wages, and left the Dock-yard. The business of removing the stores and unrigging has been performed by the officers and men of the Ordinary: a great saving must take place if this plan is generally adopted. The Victor brought 50,000*l.* in gold from the Cape, belonging to the Crown, which has been deposited in the Navy Pay Office. The orders for Cleopatra to hoist the flag of Vice-Adm. Sir T. Harvey have been changed, and she has gone to Plymouth to embark some detachments of troops from that garrison, to join the service companies in the West Indies, and was to sail with them to-morrow. Dasher steamer has had her defects made good, and returned to Weymouth. The Revenge is not to be put in commission at present, but orders have been sent for Benbow, Dublin, and Blonde to be fitted for commission forthwith. Benbow is in the basin; Dublin has been moved down to the Dock-yard; and Blonde is taken in dock. Waterwitch and Ætna are ready to go out of harbour, and will no doubt go to Spithead to-morrow. Curlew and Snipe are in the basin: the latter has been sails. Neither Clio or Childers have yet been commissioned: they are to be masted and ready for officers and men. Powerful is still at Spithead, upwards of 100 short of complement. Wind E., blowing strong. Indus has been taken out of dock, and moved up the harbour. The new Lieut.-Gov. of the garrison, Major-Gen. the Hon. Sir H. Pakenham, joined on Sunday. Ships in Port—Powerful at Spithead; Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Curlew, Waterwitch, Ætna, Snipe, and Messenger steamer, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, April 5.—(From our own Correspondent.)—March 30th—Sailed Swale, tender to Astrea, with stores for the packet service at Falmouth, and Lively, lighter, with stores for Pembroke Dock-yard. Arrived Braganza, peninsular steam-packet, from London, completed her coals, and sailed for Falmouth. 31st—Tyrian, packet, 6, Lieut.-Com. Henry Crocker, went out of harbour, and proceeded immediately for Falmouth. Arrived the Alonzo, transport, Lieut. Simpson, Agent, from Deptford, with stores for the Royal William Victualling-yard. April 1st—Stirling Castle, 74, was taken into dock to have some slight defects made good, and to be fitted for a convict hulk. Arrived the Liverpool, peninsular packet, from Falmouth, having landed the mails at that place, she sailed the same day for London. 2nd—Implacable, 74, Capt. E. Harvey, was paid wages; several seamen lately paid off from the Scylla at this port, have entered on board her. 3d—Arrived Stakesby, transport, from the island of Ascension; she has brought home some invalids, but not any news of consequence. 4th—Arrived Cleopatra, 26, Capt. Lushington, from Spithead, and came into Barnpool; a party of men were immediately sent from the Dock-yard to fit her for the reception of troops; as soon as she is ready, a detachment from the 36th depot in this garrison will be embarked on board her, and she will proceed with them to New Brunswick. Arrived Pantaloon, 10, from Bristol, on her way to Portsmouth, with volunteers for the Navy; was obliged to put into this port, it blowing strong from E. by S. 5th—Harpy, 10, Lieut.-Com. J. S. Ellman, will be paid off this day into Ordinary. Vice-Admiral Sir T. Harvey, K.C.B., is hourly expected here; he will hoist his flag on board Inconstant, 36, Captain D. Pring, and proceed in her to West Indies, as Commander-in-Chief on that and the Halifax stations. Belleisle, 74, and Druid, 46, have been brought alongside the jetties, and are expected to be commissioned in a few days; both of them are to be fitted with shell-rooms, and are to have the new armament. Calcutta, 84, is out of the dock-yard hands, and is ready to receive men; it is reported that she is shortly to be commissioned. Spartan, 26, is in frame, and she is to remain in that state for some time to season. A number of hands have this week been put on the Nile, 92, and Hindostan, 80; the former is to be launched some time this summer; and the artificers have commenced planking the latter. The ship-wright apprentices for this yard are ordered to be entered immediately, instead of waiting for vacancies occasioned by deaths among the men. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Inconstant, Alonzo (transport). In Barnpool—Cleopatra. In the Sound—Implacable, Pantaloon, Stakesby (transport.)

MILFORD HAVEN, 3d April.—(From our own Correspondent.)—On Thursday last, the Pigmy steamer, Mr. Williams, Master, proceeded hence to Holyhead with the crew of the Advice. On Saturday she returned again to the station. On Friday the Meteor, Lieut. Pritchard, arrived from Plymouth, with provisions for the seamen who navigated the Windsor Castle. Having taken on board a supply of coal at the pier, one of the most commodious places for the purpose in the kingdom, she left on Monday for Falmouth. On Tuesday, the Advice steamer returned from Holyhead, whither she had been for new boilers. On Sunday the Aid lighter arrived from Plymouth with Naval stores. The Chaplain of Pembroke Yard was refused permission by the Admiralty to hold the chaplaincy of the Pembroke Union, although the office in no way interfered with his public duty, their Lordships stating, that they will allow no officer under their command to hold any other than their official appointment. This is a circumstance they intend strictly enforcing. Neither for emolument or otherwise are dock-yard officers generally allowed to transact any private business. The Skylark left this on Monday for a cruise along the coast, for the protection of the revenue. The Adder steam-packet is under repair. An alteration is to take place this week in the arrival and starting of the London Mail, owing to its travelling over the new line of road between Pembroke Dock and Carmarthen.

FALMOUTH, April 3.—Arrived Her M.'s packet Hope, Lieut. Rees, from the West Indies; sailed from Cape Henri the day after the Pigeon. She brings nothing new from the colonies. The Express, Lieut. Croke, sailed to-day for the West Indies.

H.M.S. MALABAR.—When this vessel struck on some rocks off Prince Edward Island, in Oct. last, Mr. J. Wightman, merchant, of Three Rivers, ventured off to her assistance in a small open boat, at the risk of his life. As a token of the high opinion they entertain of his services, Captain E. Harvey and the officers have ordered a handsome tea and coffee service, together with a salver, inclosed in a neat case, which is to be presented to him. The principal article has the following inscription:—"Presented to Mr. Joseph Wightman, by Captain E. Harvey, and the Officers of H.M.S. Malabar, for the important service he rendered to that ship when in danger on the rocks, off Cape Bear, Prince Edward Island, 19th Oct., 1838."

The Larne sloop of war, which was sent, in June last, to look after the wrecked crew of a British ship among the Caroline Islands, was recently fallen in with, working back to Canton, from whence she was despatched.

Captain G. Smith's plan for fitting steam-vessels with lifeboats, has been completed on board the Caron now at Woolwich by order of the Lords of the Admiralty. The upper section of the paddle-box is cut off, and a boat replaces it bottom upwards, so that the wheel revolves inside of her, the midship thwarts being unshipped, and she lies on davits with hinges, which will enable her to be lowered into the water in a few minutes when required.

THE BRITISH NAVY.—Looking at things in general, we must confess that we are not of those who dream that our Navy is quite in a desperate state. Other countries may be building ships—so much the better:—British bluejackets must be very much altered if, in the event of a war, they are not building them for us.—Quarterly Review.

MALTA, March 13.—Minden, 74, arrived on 8th inst., from Tunis; and Tribune, frigate, on the following day from Lisbon. Harlequin sailed on the 9th for Gibraltar. The following ships were lying here:—Princess Charlotte, Ceylon, Rodney, Asia, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Hastings, Talavera, Minden, Castor, Talbot, Tribune, Scorpion, and Beacon sur.-ves., cutter Magpie, and steamer Confiance.

COAST GUARD.—A Correspondent proposes (from the general dislike which the men of this service have to the present uniform cap, particularly when "drest in their best") that a good C. D. B. leather hat should be substituted for it, with the crown on the front, and the words "Coast Guard" over it, done in a similar way to the hats of men-of-war's men, which have the ship's name, &c. That the trade should be called on to furnish patterns; and the one whose pattern is approved of should contract for the supply of the whole force in England, and like contracts be taken in Scotland and Ireland. That when completed, the number required for each district be sent in cases to the Collector of Customs within that district, who would supply by application from the Inspecting Commander the number required for each station, and stop the amount of cost from each man on pay-day, and transmit the same to the contractor. The men would then look and feel more like what they are termed "essentially Naval."

The Fairy, Boxer, and Mastiff surveying-vessels will resume their respective surveys from Woolwich this month.

A large steamer and a brigantine will be launched at Sheerness next month: the latter for the Packet service.

It is reported that Mr. Wilson, principal Draughtsman at the Admiralty, will succeed Mr. Stone, as Builder at Chatham Dock-yard.

The Victor (whose arrival we notified last week) has visited nearly all the places on the coasts and islands in India, and was nearly a year and a half on the Coasts of Australia, New Zealand, and many of the most interesting islands in the South Seas, and has gone over 85,000 miles of ground; she has been remarkably healthy, only losing four seamen and two petty officers, Messrs. Rowe and Orchard, the Captain's Clerk and the Carpenter, by fever caught at Batavia; at one time she had 54 officers and men ill from its effects, but owing to the skill and talents of Mr. Nutt, Surgeon, the only medical officer on board, they all recovered, with the exception of the two above-named officers.

RL. MARINES.—Assist.-Surg. W. Chartres, of the Royal Marine Hospital, is about leaving for Australia: he will be succeeded by Assist.-Surg. John Beard, at present serving on board the Atholl troop-ship.

The masts, rigging, &c., of the Royal Adelaide, at Plymouth, are ordered to be inspected, and prepared for her to lay in the Sound, and go to sea occasionally, the San Josef taking her situation in Hamoaze.

The Nile, 92, will be launched at Plymouth this summer, and a second-rate laid down in her room.

The Navarino and Cornwall are fitting at Deptford for convict-ships, as are the Hindostan and Hero; Asia, for Bermuda; Morning Star, for Cape of Good Hope; and Trincomalee and Blenheim in dry-dock for Australia. The contractors are busy fitting double dock-gates.

The following ships are ordered to be got ready for demonstration, so as to receive men promptly, if required:—Agincourt, 74, Belleisle, 74, and Druid, 46, at Plymouth; Blenheim, 74, Sheerness; Benbow, 74, and Blonde, 46, at Portsmouth.

TARTAR REVENUE CUTTER.—In our last we stated the exertions of the crew of this cutter. The following is an extract from a letter that appeared in the Plymouth Journal, 28th ult.:—

"Lieut. Davies, having heard that one of the owners had publicly stated 'that he would only give a pint of beer to the men who had accompanied the Commander of the Tartar,' stung with such ingratitude, Lieut. Davies placed the affair in the hands of a professional gentleman. The result was, the magistrates awarded 200*l.* to the crew, and the Humane Society have determined to grant medals to Lieut. Davies and his two adventurous companions. It was then found that the Captain of the French brig saved had been placed in her on his marriage by his father; that contrary winds from Bourdeaux, and length of passage, would swallow up all the benefits of the voyage; and that he would have to pay 50*l.* of the above award. Lieut. Davies and crew, struck with such misfortune, after consulting together, gave the poor Captain a receipt for his fourth of the 200*l.* awarded, which saved the new-married Captain from total ruin."

[In the war of 1803, Capt. Lord Cochrane and crew of the Pallas frigate performed an act of similar generosity, in returning property of most considerable amount, the private venture of an unfortunate individual, captured in war, and who would have been totally ruined but for such humane conduct.—Ed. N. and M. G.]

The report that the Powerful is fitted with paddle-wheels, to be worked by a tread-mill, is contradicted. The Admiralty refused to allow any such experiment.

FALMOUTH, March 29.—H.M.'s packet Peterel, Lieut. Crooke, arrived this afternoon from Mexico, having sailed from Vera Cruz on 4th Feb., Tampico on 15th and Havannah on 1st March, bringing despatches and the usual mails. Only 50,000 dollars on freight have reached by this arrival, the bulk of which is from the last-named place. Mr. Pakenham was still in the interior in the character of mediator, and was expected at Vera Cruz on the 24th ult., with the conditions of settlement on the part of the Mexican government for the approval or not of the French Admiral and that Anglo-Gallic consul Mr. Gifford, who now so conspicuously figures before the public in rather a suspicious light, as connected with the packet taken out of H.M.'s packet Express by the order of Admiral Baudin. This affair, which has already been made matter of so much discussion in Parliament, will now come forth with all its true bearings, as, no doubt, the despatches now arrived are complete in detail. The affair throughout has engaged much of the attention of the Naval officers on the station. The prevailing opinion was that our flag had been insulted. H.M.S. Madagascar and nine other English ships of were at Vera Cruz, and the French force, without alteration, still maintaining the blockade. The merchant vessels were at Sacrificios, in number about 40. H.M.S. Cornwallis and Edinburgh were at the Havannah. Several ships of our fleet, it is stated, were on the eve of sailing for N. America. Three days before the packet sailed from Vera Cruz a melancholy accident occurred. It appears that a cutter belonging to the Madagascar broke adrift, occasioned by a heavy swell, when a boat was despatched from the ship with 17 hands on board, and whilst alongside the cutter a tremendous swell swamped the boat, and unfortunately eleven of the crew were drowned. Six men, one being a gunner, succeeded by swimming in reaching a reef, and were providentially saved.

THE NAVY.—All injustice, by whomsoever it may be wrought, recoils upon the perpetrator in the shape of risk or weakness, to which otherwise he would not have been liable. The most vulnerable point of every Government is its injustice. The sore point of any and every department in the State is the injustice suffered by those who serve under it. The real deterioration of the British Navy is by no means physical,—not the scantiness of stores, nor the diminished number of ships, nor the reduction of material force of any kind: the true decline of our Navy is in its morale. It is in the treatment experienced by officers, petty officers, and seamen. It is in their sense of the wrongs inflicted on them—in their despair of justice—the discouragement of that high spirit by which they once were animated—the consequent prevalence throughout the profession of wounded pride, of brooding discontent, and of alienation from the service proportioned to their consciousness of ill-requited zeal, of knowledge depreciated, of merit overlooked, and ignorance and insignificance promoted. It is true that all classes of the British Navy have much cause to complain, and chiefly, so far as the officers are concerned, and so far as a single cause can operate, on account of the enormous multitude of members with which the service has been crowded. We have already, on more than one occasion, hinted at this inherent and predominant vice. Whole squads of boys, from 10 to 14 years of age, are swept away from school, or from their paternal firesides, into the Midshipmen's berths of our men-of-war, already overrun with similar occupants, and this for no reason but because it has been a custom of old standing (for "more honoured in the breach than the observance") to let sea-going Captains oblige their friends and relations at home by relieving them from some of those domestic supernumeraries, and transferring them to the public charge. When there are, as there always have been, thousands of unemployed Midshipmen, it does seem to us the most preposterous thing in the world to let the service be encumbered by incessant draughts from society of still accumulating shoals of useless "youngsters." At the end of six years afloat, by far the greater portion of those youths pass for Lieutenants; but of those who prove themselves on examination fitted for the rank, it is a small proportion who are permitted, while young men, to attain it, and they are notoriously selected on grounds very different from superior intelligence or merit. The youngest Midshipmen are usually first promoted, being for the most part those who have the most powerful friends. But, sooner or later, an overloaded list of Midshipmen leads of necessity to an excess in the number of Lieutenants, and by consequence of Lieutenants craving for, and disappointed in, the promotion fairly due to services so valuable as theirs. Of this class of officers—perhaps, all things considered, the most important to an effective Navy—the number at this moment on the list exceeds we understand three thousand, and their grievances are scarcely less numerous than they are themselves: of these, many of the most galling have been the creation of the last six or seven years, and their pressure has at length been such as to compel this meritorious and ill-used body of officers, after much and anxious consideration, to frame a memorial explanatory of their causes for dissatisfaction, which they have recently presented to the Commissioners now sitting "to inquire into the several modes of promotion and retirement now authorised and granted to the Officers of Her Majesty's Naval and Military Services, for ascertaining the comparative situation of the officers in each branch," and to report whether any beneficial changes can be made in the existing system.—Times.

blished in Oct. 1824; and though the recent arrangement has increased the crews of the ships by a few men, yet, considering the number of boys now allowed, the complements are still too weak for the increased armament and heavy masts and yards of our ships. The line-of-battle ships have too few men by 50, and to have all the ships down to a fifth-rate. Such a ship as Bulwark ought never to go to sea, and cannot be really an effective man of war, under 500 men. The sloops are also much under manned, particularly the first, second, and third classes, which ought to have from 15 to 20 men more each; for it should be borne in mind, ships are now called sloops of war that are nearly of as much tonnage, and as heavy yards and masts, as the old 28's, which had a complement of 195 men. Carnatic class 28's are 600 tons, the same as the old war class of 36's, which had a complement of 254. The arrangement of the complement of Midshipmen should still be altered, there are too few in the sloop class, and too many in the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth-rates. One example will suffice —Dido class is allowed four Mates, four Midshipmen, two Volunteers of the first class. Modeste, a ship with the same number of boats and decks to attend to, has only one Mate, two Midshipmen, one Volunteer—evidently too few. We have a competent opinion for saying, that the Captain of the afterguard and Captains of fore and main tops should be made first class Petty Officers: the first does the duty of Captain of the forecastle in the after part of the ship, and the latter are men of great responsibility. When these revisions take place, the Admiralty would do well to call to their assistance some officers who have been recently at the labouring oar as First Lieutenants, men of acknowledged character. An Admiral or an old Captain may be a very fit person to preside on a Commission for any internal improvement or arrangement, but even in this they should consult such as are now carrying on the work, or have been in harness more recently than themselves. The duties and responsibilities of a Captain are so varied, that after he has been on the List 30 years, or obtained his flag, he cannot be so au fait at the detail of a ship as when he was a Lieutenant, and the active instrument in carrying on all the duties connected with the daily arrangements of one. We should also much like to see the number of Marines reduced on ship-board, during the time of peace, and their place occupied by seamen. This would enable us, in the event of a rupture with any Power, to make two ships' companies out of one, by embarking additional Marines, which, in the mean time, would do valuable shore duty in our present weakly-garrisoned sea-port towns. The new scale has only half remedied the evil complained of, for on referring to the war complement, as settled by the Naval Instruction of Jan. 1806, we find Caledonia had 847 men, including 12 boys; Boyne (and she was not larger than Rodney) had 738 men, including 29 boys; Canopus (equal to Asia) had 738 men; Hercules had then 640 men, including 26 boys; Edinburgh, or her class, 590 men, including 24 boys; Resistance had then 294 men. Of the smaller vessels we can make no comparison, their sizes and armaments, in relation to what they are now called, being so different—frigates, such as Amphion, Cargfort, and Emerald, carrying 12, 9, and 6 pounders, long guns.—Hants Telegraph.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

NATIONAL CORPS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—If I have not before this closed the controversy with Sir Charles Napier, and James, his gallant auxiliary, it has been solely from aversion to intrude upon columns crowded like yours with more important matter. To the request that I would enumerate those Scotch regiments which refuse admission to Irish Roman Catholics, I beg to name the Greys, the 26th, 42d, 72d, 78th, 92d, and 93d. Prior to their departure for Ceylon, the 90th, under Colonel Arbuthnot, did the same, and wisely. Whether the 25th, 79th, and 91st follow the example of their country corps I am not positive; if in error as to any of the first-named regiments, I am open to correction, and shall be prompt to repair my mistake. As to the mixed regiments which flinched at Waterloo, Sir Charles may obtain a clue by inquiring of that most gallant officer, his friend, Sir J. M. Tylden, to what corps, in his opinion, we owe the defeat of New Orleans. It is remarkable that the first battalion in America, and the second in Flanders, should have behaved at the same time in precisely the same way. As to the other Waterloo corps which wavered, I choose to be silent, because I conscientiously believe that the fault of its failure lay chiefly with him who caused it to fire before the column of D'Erlon was well within range; but it is certain that the gallantry of its officers alone saved the regimental colours from foreign grasp. I have always understood that the Ensign who bore them slew an assailant with his sword—an incident which could hardly have taken place unless the regiment had wholly given way. In Wales many believe Picton to have been picked off by an Irish fugitive, who wished to avenge the wrongs of his race.

My assailant attacks me for saying that I only wish the 23d to be made equally national with the 42d—a corps which he asserts not to be national at all, since only three-fourths of its officers are of Gaelic blood. Now, I presume that a gentleman may be deemed proprietor of an estate, although, to supply present necessities, he has mortgaged it to one-fourth its value. That one-fourth may be paid off by economy; but when the Jew's share comes to three-fourths of the whole, it is evident that the preponderance no longer rests with the rightful master, but with the shark. If a stranger were introduced to three such men as Sir Charles Napier, in company with one named Joseph Hume, he would feel himself in the society of high-minded, generous, and lofty-souled individuals, for Mr. Joseph would probably conceal his own selfishness; but I much fear that three Joseph Humes, on the other hand, would paralyse even the proud spirit of a knightly Napier, and render him useless to society as iced gunpowder. Kept separate, each might be useful. The Humes would manage the Commissariat better than men of Sir Charles' high and haughty disposition; whilst the Napiers would be not the less effective at a storming party, for that they were not encumbered with a Joseph Hume. Every society takes its moral character from the majority of its members. I have never contended that regiments, on an emergency, if unable to complete from amongst their own countrymen, should refuse admission to officers or privates of a friendly race, but I do complain that the Welch, whose loyalty, obedience, and devotion to monarchy are proverbial, should be excluded from the same attention which the peasant of Connaught and turbulent sons of Tipperary are allowed to receive, and that they are ordered to take Irish Papists whilst Protestant Cymraeg might readily be procured. Let Sir Charles James Napier show that any mischief arose, or that good did not arise from the strict nationality of the Ancient Britons in 1798, and I will quit the field, and own that nationality should be confined to the 18th, 87th, and 88th alone.

I am glad, however, that this controversy has drawn from Sir Charles James Napier an admission that he is not averse to the adoption of a bayonet exercise, although even on this point he misinterprets my argument; I never dreamed of recommending pikes for regulars, although in storming parties and night attacks I certainly do think that the cutlass might with advantage be substituted for the bayonet. What I contend for is, that in a rush where the fronts are equal, and the military cannot meet their foe in flank, undisciplined men armed with pikes may bear down the bravest who rely only on fire. If the bullet always told, the result would be otherwise; but at night especially you cannot hope, by a single or even a second discharge, to knock over one-twentieth of your adversaries, and if half-a-dozen scythes persevere, they may cut down a hundred fusiliers before they can reload—for the bayonet at present is a purely offensive weapon, and affords no defence at all. On the other hand, it is admitted that the bayonet exercise, properly employed, renders a musket, even unloaded, a match for the pike. Surely the soldier will not be less confident from knowing, that even should his fire fail, his bayonet will keep him scathless, and prevent any foe approaching nearer than eight feet! Were the bayonet exercise adopted, the hopes of the Chartists would be checked at once, for they cannot afford to buy firelocks, and their sole reliance is on the inability of soldiers to defend themselves if rushed upon recklessly, as by Courtenay's followers at Rosenden Wood. Colonel Peyronnet Thompson, to do him justice, knows well the utility of a bayonet exercise, and feels that had it been introduced prior to the Rasel Khyma fight, he would have been now certainly a K.H., and probably a C.B. Poor old Dundas stood him in but little stead there; he had, it is true, served in the Peninsula without ever seeing bayonet cross bayonet, but in his first fight out of the Peninsula he was doomed to see the bayonet crossed by the sword. Let it be recollected that this exercise is not intended so much for single combat as to give a line confidence, and to enable both ranks of that whole line to thrust and parry simultaneously if closed upon with longer weapons.

My friend James's account of the miscreant "Priest Murphy" is slightly inaccurate. That wretch made his first appearance at Oulard, where, with 250 pikes, he charged and speared four companies of long-embodied militia who advanced up hill, maintaining a regular fire by companies. At New Ross he was not present, having 104 prisoners to roast alive in the barn of Scullabogue: but the pikes of Priest Roche stormed the town, destroyed a squadron of the late 5th, and smashed Lord Mountjoy's infantry in style. Three times was the town won and lost in spite of the firing from windows, whence many yeomen discharged each one hundred and twenty shots in succession. At length victorious, the assailants got drunk, fell into confusion, were charged by the rallied Midlothian Fencibles and Yeomanry Cavalry, and put to the sword. It was at Arklow that the incident alluded to by James occurred; but the attack led by Murphy was one of Fusiliers with the bayonet, and he was knocked over not with musketry but with case-shot, from a gun which he had almost reached and attempted to seize. The pikemen that day were not engaged, except one column, which, making a detour to turn the Protestant line of defence, was taken in flank suddenly by Sir W. W. Wynn with the Ancient British Horse, who took fierce revenge for the slaughter of Scullabogue. It has been said by some rebel libellers that the Welch greased their boots with Priest Murphy's fat; but this I believe, on my honour, to be untrue, and that the body, on being recognised, was flung into the flames.

Permit me, in conclusion, to observe, that if, as James admits, an unloaded musket is as much inferior to a pike as a pike to a loaded musket, Sir Charles Napier acted very improperly in forbidding his men to load in the attack of Elvina; and so did George Napier in the assault of Ciudad Rodrigo, and Picton at Badajos: for the bullet would, of course, tell just as lethally on an unloaded bayoneteer as on a spearman occupying the same space at the same time. The dilemma is his, not mine; I believe, as before stated, that in a rush of equal fronts of resolved men, steel will bear down fire; and I suppose there is no man who thinks that the bayonet, as at present wielded, can be of any other use against the sword of the pike than to render the piece top-heavy, and prevent its fire taking effect. Were we to war only with Frenchmen, and in masses covered by cannon, the bayonet exercise would be needless; but I trust that every officer will bestir himself for its introduction, at a period when, without a moment's preparation, we may be called upon in small parties to encounter a most formidable Jacquerie hand to hand.

I am surprised that neither the Baron de Berenger, nor Chevron, nor the Young Ensign, have aided me in pointing out the cases where it might become most valuable. I trust for their aid, and not theirs only, but yours, Mr. Editor, and that of every other officer who loves his Queen.

ARTHUR.

THE NAVY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—The brilliant triumphs achieved by the Navy during the last war over despotism and oppression, while they have evinced the vast progress of civilisation in our own country, have not failed to light the torch of liberty in more sunny regions, and to extend the influence of noble and heroic deeds to all parts of the world. The spirits of regeneration and reform are abroad with the abused, the many who were sleeping are awake, the voices which are now emanating from and for the oppressed have found a ready echo in the Commons House of Parliament, where the master-mind of Sir R. Peel has at length been aroused by the injustice heaped upon men who, in time of need, were the saviours of their country.

In the midst of this heart-stirring excitement, it is a pleasing thing to see the children of those heroes looking back and surveying the bright deeds of their ancestors, deriving hopes of success from their future efforts, the more strong as the justice of their cause becomes known among a liberal and enlightened public. A sailor who dreams of the great deeds of his ancestors, will bravely battle on the coming morrow: the men who brood over the bright days of Nelson and Collingwood will hardly groan patiently beneath an unjust yoke, without an effort to sever the foul degradation to which they have been exposed, and which is doubly galling to the bosoms of the brave. The Navy hope the efforts of those valiant men, who are now, by the voice of the country, called upon to act as a jury on their trial, may find a verdict in their favour, and that such measures will be recommended, that Parliament, even without an effort from Mr. Hume to deter them, will grant us that justice we require at their hands.

The aspect and spirit of the times are greatly in our favour, but I fear our own weak forces in Parliament are too powerless to worst those against us, unless we are able to obtain volunteers to join their strength in our behalf, which can only be effected by the triumph of justice over the principles and unjust policy which has always been arrayed against us. With this spirit and policy we have had little time until of late years to grapple; but now we look back to the days of our youth, and those deeds of glory in which many of us have borne our share, and see around us our children born and educated in the school of adversity, see justice meted out with unsparing hand to all but those to whom our country once looked up to for protecting even their wives and families from the bold invader of all other countries, to find ourselves thus neglected, think ye this is not enough to bring our grey hairs with sorrow to the grave?

"Ye gentlemen of England, who live at home at ease, How little do you think of the sailor on the seas!"

Nor can you have any conception (without ocular demonstration) of the misery and deprivations we are doomed to suffer on the small pittance of half-pay with a large family, and compelled to reside, in numerous cases, in far worse dwellings than the labourer who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow. To a complication of diseases, there is usually a complication of remedies, and thus a variety of plans have been occasionally set forth in your widely-circulated paper. In the Military Commission we have men who have borne the brunt of many a battle, who have hearts to feel for their more unfortunate brethren in arms, and who yet "will protect the hardy tar and be mindful of his merits." In the exercise of their mission we have no weakness to apprehend, no passions to enslave. Justice will gain the day. The men who are now oppressed, will again in war "show their daring spirit." The welfare of the nation will be secured, our hearths remain unsullied, and our children taught to look up to and pray to the Giver of all blessings for additional protection to our grateful and happy country. I have drawn no fictitious picture; the hearts of nearly 7,000 of Her Majesty's most loyal and devoted servants beat in unison with mine. A LIEUT., R.N.

NAVAL OFFICERS' WIDOWS' PENSIONS—"AN UNCO MOURNFU' TALE," BY TRISTRAM.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

"Is there no pity—no imploring truth
Points to the sailor's widow and orphan child?
Then paints their ruin'd state, and their distraction wild!"

Sir,—For years I have repeated in your columns the Navy's wrongs. They are too painful to slumber in my breast; they awaken every faculty to renewed exertion for their redress; they imploringly call upon me to reiterate the cause of each wrong—the particulars of each wrong—the hardship of each wrong,—until the voice of the whole empire reverberates into one echo. "To the Navy, as to the Army, JUSTICE." The wrongs of our widows, our orphans, our mothers, our sisters, shall be exclusively my theme. First, as to the cause of those wrongs so mercilessly inflicted upon these relatives of the Navy Officers only. The sole cause of their misery and distress is the want of nominal Army rank to the Mate (the Naval subordinate) equal to the Military Subaltern's; also to the Second Master and Clerk a rank equal to the Naval and Military Assistant-Surgeon's. It is very judicious in the Legislature and commendable in the Admiralty to discourage improvident and premature marriages in the Navy; hence, very considerately, no pensions are granted to the widows or orphans of Mates, Second Masters, or Clerks, as those subordinates must be promoted to Lieutenants, Masters, or Pursers, if they continue to serve with credit to their profession. Not so the Subalterns of the Army or Assistant-Surgeons of both services, who may remain Subalterns all their lives; consequently their widows and orphans are entitled to provision for their maintenance, as well as those of their superiors.

It is the gracious pleasure of the Sovereign, the recommendation of Government, the intention of the Legislature, and the free will of the people, that the widows of Naval and Military Officers should be equally pensioned; yet the oversight of the Administration in 1830—God forgive it!—that Navy Officers do not obtain Military rank until promoted to a grade equal to that of a Captain or Surgeon in the Army, was the sole cause why the widows and orphans of the Navy are deprived of the benevolence and protection bestowed upon the widows and orphans of the Army, by the voice of the people, the grant of the Legislature, the consideration of Ministers, and the grace of the Crown—a cause vexatious and baneful to the feelings of the Navy Officers, afflicting and miserable to their widows and orphans. To remove this grievous cause, I solicit not unnecessary innovation in the rank of our Naval subordinate officers, but I implore the Sovereign's benevolence to bestow pensions to the widows and compassionate allowances to the orphans of sea officers, who have served in the rank of Captain, Commander, or Lieutenant, Master or Purser, ten years from the dates of their passing certificates for commissioned rank; thus checking early marriage in the Navy, as each of those classes of officers must serve at least sixteen years in the Navy, and be at least 29 years of age, before his widow or orphans can be pensioned. This just and indispensable regulation would give those superior officers in the Navy EQUAL RIGHTS to their widows and orphans as to those of their subordinates in their own service—the Subalterns of Marines and Assistant-Surgeons. Thus we have, brother sailors, in a brief exposition, the cause, the particulars, the hardship of each excruciating wrong, unconsciously imposed upon our widows and our orphans, with a simple palliative but instantaneous remedy for each dire infliction.

When the mortal remains of two Naval and Military Officers of equal rank pass in martial procession to the grave, each funeral is honoured with the same solemn march or dirge, the same number of guns or volleys. When the widow of each is equally pensioned, do not our countrymen suppose that the orphans of each are equally pensioned: the mother also, the sisters also, equally considered by the Treasury? Are not our countrymen to be undeceived; and, when so undeceived, will they not generously intercede with their representatives in the Senate, to protect equally the sailor's as the soldier's orphan—the sailor's as the soldier's mother—the sailor's as the soldier's sister?

Behold that grave to the right: it is the grave of a brave and faithful soldier—a Captain of Dragoons, who served his country TEN years on parade and guard, within Great Britain and Ireland. The mourners are his widow, his orphans, his mother, his sisters; each of these dear relatives of the soldier is pensioned, the whole receiving an adequate annuity if in need *; each protected by a generous and just Legislature. Behold that to the left! it is the grave of a sailor, the soldier's equal in rank and worth—a Lieutenant of the Navy, who faithfully served his country at sea in all climes, seasons, and weathers, nearly FORTY years as an officer, and 9 years and 364 days † of which he held a commission equal to a Captain of Artillery, Engineers, or Marines. The mourners are his widow, his orphans, his mother, his sisters. Good God! do our countrymen know that not one of these relatives of the sea officer is entitled to a pension, gratuity, or compassionate allowance,—the widow with her orphans bereft of their defender, the aged widowed mother deprived of her only prop and stay, the deaf, or dumb, or blind sister, of her only friend on earth? Do our countrymen know, I ask a second time, that each of these now helpless beings, though yesterday supported and befriended, must to-day pass from the honoured sailor-warrior's grave—the grave of the husband, the father, the only son, the only brother, in anguish and destitution to the parish workhouse for relief and shelter, when the mourners of the Captain of Dragoons depart homeward from his no less honoured grave to live consoled and resigned upon a liberal competency!

Hear this, ye Britons, who weekly pray at the altar of your God, and answer me—Has the Navy within your empire, like the Army, justice?

"That it may please THEE to defend and provide for the fatherless children, and widows, and all that are desolate and oppressed;

"We beseech Thee to hear us, good Lord."

Junior U. S. Club, Good Friday. TRISTRAM.

* Vide Wilkinson's letters on Widows' Pensions, No. 89 & 93.

† A Mate promoted at the Coronation, of at least 27 years' standing, has yet more than nine years to serve before his widow would be entitled to a pension; whilst the widow of a Sub of Marines, who entered at the Commission, will receive a pension if her husband die but one day after 18 years' service: the widow of the Sea Lieutenant will, if her husband die one day short of 37 years' service

PROJET FOR MANNING THE BRITISH NAVY, WITHOUT HAVING RECOURSE TO IMPRESSMENT, BY ESTABLISHING PERMANENT REGISTERED ROYAL NAVAL SEAMEN.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Understanding that the powers of the Navy and Army Commissioners now assembled do not extend to that of inquiring into the grievances of the long-neglected "British man-of-war seaman," may I request you will insert in your earliest publication the enclosed Projet for manning the Navy without impressment, which is now under the consideration of the Board of Admiralty, in hopes it will induce persons more competent and more influential to interest themselves in so important a subject.

March 22, 1839. JOHN MARTIN HANCHETT.

SIR,—The clear and intelligent statement of the force and state of the vessels-of-war which compose the British Navy, by Sir John Barrow, must dissipate all the idle fears which may have been created by persons who have had no access to official documents, or personal inspections of our Royal Dock-yards.

That Secretary's long intercourse with official documents, and well-known perseverance in research, leaves no doubt that the ships-of-war of Great Britain are in as good a state of preparation as any other nation. Their size and armament will improve as those worn out are replaced by models acquired from the most improved construction of other nations; the two chief objects of which should be—That of carrying their guns higher out of water, so that opponents should not fire down upon our decks, and that the shot and cartridges should be of the same diameter throughout the ship, the length of the gun being the only difference throughout the whole batteries, which should gradually become shorter, as they are proportionably higher from the water-line.

Many parents in the middle station of life use their utmost influence to place one of their sons in the minor departments of the State, such as Customs, Excise, Engineers, &c., looking to it as a provision for life, and a retirement in old age, provided his conduct meets the approbation of the Board he serves under; but for want of the same encouragement, most parents endeavour to prevent their sons entering, being impressed, or in any way following up the man-of-war service! Are not the services of the brave and faithful British seaman as valuable to the State as any of the afore-mentioned persons? If the seaman, as soon as he has acquired the thorough knowledge of his duties which is generally designated by his being rated A. B. (able seaman) on the books of the ship he is serving in—if such a man should from that age (say 30), and with that hard-earned experience, devote the remainder of his life to that perilous and trying profession, and be always ready at the command of the nation, why should not he have the same advantages?

Who suffer more privations than men-of-war seamen during an active war? Short allowance of water and provisions—obliged to serve in any climate his services may be required in, besides the dangers of the sea and the enemy, which cannot be better exemplified, than that no Naval officer's life in active service was insurable by the most speculative Assurance Offices last war! What then must be considered the risk of the seaman?

By the present system, as soon as his constitution is worn out, and he is unfit for active service, or he is no longer wanted, he is turned adrift to gain his livelihood how he can in the country he is almost a stranger to, and from which he has been torn before his manhood by the press-gang.

To have the greatest quantity of cheerful and willing exertion from such an invaluable person as the British man-of-war seaman, it becomes a great national object to keep up a supply of attached and contented seamen, consistent with due economy; and it is but just and necessary to secure to him a certain provision for his old age, and an occasional relaxation from his labours, by which his constitution is renovated, and his fidelity and readiness assured to the State from whose bounty he is to receive his ultimate reward; and thus a nucleus for manning twenty-five sail of the line, besides those necessarily in commission during peace, may be always within a few days' reach of our Naval arsenals.

A corps of A. B. seamen might be formed, and designated "THE ROYAL NAVAL REGISTERED SEAMEN," consisting of the whole Peace Establishment afloat, the Navy in ordinary, and the Coast Guard, which should be consolidated under the Board of Admiralty; so that by employing them alternately in these services, it would give relief and relaxation to the seamen, proportionate to their age, infirmities, and good conduct, and at the same time keep them contented and attached to the service, with a certainty of occasional relaxation from incessant fatigue, and of remuneration and comfort in their old age. *

The time of life in which seamen are most serviceable to the nation, is from 30 to 45 years of age. The first ten years his vigour and strength remain unimpaired; the last five years, his experience makes him as useful in the position of petty officer.

The number of able seamen required for manning the peace establishment afloat is 30,000 men (vide Parliamentary Returns). The Ordinary and the Coast Guard would require 15,000 men, exclusive of marines and ordinary seamen, making a total of 45,000 A. B. seamen, (this number would fluctuate changes spoken of hereafter,) of which 30,000 would be constantly afloat. If any additional force were required upon any part of the coast, from increase of smuggling, &c. &c., it would be drawn from these, instead of wasting so many annuities as is now done, by adding permanently to that useful force.

Twelve thousand for the Coast Guard and Ordinary, and 3,000 are temporarily of little use, from sickness, leave of absence, and removing from one station to another. By the advantages of steam navigation, 8,000 of these might be withdrawn, and arrive at different parts of equipment in ten days, which would give a solid foundation to twenty-five line-of-battle ships' companies.

No man should be rated A. B. until he is thirty years of age, and with certificates of sobriety, activity, and good health. Would it not be advisable that he should undergo a sort of examination before three Masters of the Navy, as a Bombardier does in the Artillery? Is it not as requisite that an A. B. should know the difficulties of his duty, as it is for a Bombardier to understand filling a shell, or fixing a tube?

The A. B. seaman, who at 30 enters the service as a profession, should commence with five years' service afloat, and then be removed to the Coast Guard for three years, which would renovate his constitution, and give him relaxation on shore; at the expiration of which, he should embark in active service afloat a second time for five years; after which he would be fit for the Ordinary for three years. He could then serve as a commissioned Custom-House * or Excise officer, in river and port duties, for four years, which would bring him to the age of fifty, when he should retire upon not less than 30*l.* per annum, or Greenwich Hospital, either of which should be ensured to him.

Thus he would begin to earn his retirement at	30 years
Five years afloat as A. B.	5
Three years in the Coast Guard	3
Five years afloat (2d series)	5
Three years in Ordinary	3
Four years as Custom or Excise Officer, in river and port duties	4
Years of age	50

Thus the nation would acquire the invaluable services of British seamen for the best twenty years of their lives, at the same annual expense that a gentleman's footman costs for board wages only, from the first day he puts on a livery, viz. twelve shillings a week (!)

It is a notorious fact, that marines are better men after the same period of service, than seamen, and that their constitutions are much stronger, because they have the occasional relaxation of being on shore at the barracks; and it is also admitted that very few marines deserted, in proportion to their numbers with seamen, during the late war. If I have been rightly informed, the desertions were one marine to fifty seamen. If it were possible to have the seamen and their officers three months in the marine barracks previous to embarkation, to learn the exercise of small arms, it would be very advantageous on active service.

Such were the exigencies of the State during the late war, that the British seaman saw no end to his being a floating prisoner; for whilst his constitution lasted, he was eternally drafted from one ship to another. Very many of them had been torn from their wives and families by the press-gang, and without any hopes of seeing them again, except by deserting, and many of them died or consumed away gradually, pining for the shore they saw no hopes of ever returning to. In the East Indies many seamen had from fifteen to seventeen years' pay due. In the West Indies some had eleven years' pay due, whilst the officers of the ships had been changed many times.

In the event of war, each parish should be called upon to furnish its quota of able bodied landsmen, not under 25 years of age, who would in their turn arrive at the advantages of becoming one of "The permanent registered Naval Force" of the nation.

By appropriating a portion of the services of the seamen to the Coast Guard service, a great advantage would be derived by their learning to launch and beech boats in all weathers, and handle them under sail, of which many of them are totally ignorant. Many valuable lives of troops and seamen were sacrificed last war, from the ignorance of seamen in handling the boats when landing troops, as none but the most trustworthy were put into the boats on general service, fearing desertion.

All Coast Guard boats should be commanded by Lieutenants, and removed every three years; and his Chief Officer, or second in command, should be a past Mate, who should be promoted at the expiration of his period of service, so that when he came to take the command of a man-of-war's boat on active service, he would be quite au fait at this part of his duty, having acquired it in the Coast Guard service. A classification of the different grades of Quartermaster, Boatswain, Mate, &c. &c., with similar rank in the Coast Guard and Ordinary, could easily be made, so that the personal pay throughout the three distinct but consolidated services would be alike, the extra pay for subsistence when on shore being the only difference.

Our ships in ordinary might be kept in a state of speedy equipment by having their anchors, chain and other cables, heavy yards and topmasts, kept on board, tricced up to the upper, or raised from the lower deck, by gallows or skids, to allow a free current of air. This would prevent any severe loss by fire, in case of the large storehouses being burnt.

February, 1839. JOHN MARTIN HANCHETT.

* When I went round the Coast, to survey it, previous to establishing the Coast Guard, there were many employed on these duties of 60 years of age.—Vide my Survey in the Treasury, 1817, 1818, and 1819.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1839.

An augmentation of the regiments of Her Majesty, now serving in India, has been ordered, and instructions have been issued to the recruiting parties and districts to continue recruiting. The proposed increase is to raise the establishment of each Infantry corps to 1,000 rank and file; but we regret to learn that, in reverting to the former Indian war establishment, the additional Captain and two Lieutenants will not be granted. We have, however, some hope that Lord Hill may yet obtain this necessary increase of officers, consequent on the increased number of men, and the state of war in India requiring the regiments to be fully officered. We have made inquiries, and we learn that many of the depots of the Infantry regiments in India have completed their seventy-four supernumeraries over the old establishment of 740 rank and file. Taking the regiments to be completed with seventy-four supernumeraries each, then, by augmenting the twenty regiments to 1,000 rank and file each, an increase in numbers to the amount of 3,720 would be made; for the present establishment, including supernumeraries, is 814 rank and file. It is, however, to be supposed that (in conformity to the new system of enlisting in anticipation of vacancies), on an establishment of 1,000 rank and file; one hundred supernumeraries would also be raised; in which case the numbers still to be enlisted, for the Infantry alone in India, would amount to 5,720 rank and file. Here is an additional reason that a Captain and two Lieutenants should be added to each regiment in India, for the 1,000 rank and file will require a Captain for each 100 men—and the depot with 100 supernumeraries can scarcely be effective unless the 11th, or Recruiting Company, be restored to each regiment. Lord Hill has, we believe, pressed this subject on the notice of the Court of Directors, but we fear without success.

We were much gratified on reading the late remarks of Mr. C. Wood in the House of Commons on the subject of transports and troop-ships, in answer to the complaint of Mr. Alderman Thompson, "that the country was put to great expense by the employment of ships-of-war in the conveyance of our soldiers, instead of their being sent, as heretofore, in hired merchant vessels." No man, we are fully assured, but one who had a personal interest, either directly or indirectly, through his own purse, or through that of his connexions or friends, could ever be found to advocate the employment of transports in preference to ships-of-war, expressly fitted as troop-ships for the conveyance of our gallant soldiers. Every day's experience confirms to us the vast superiority of the latter over the former mode; and every Military Officer will, we are fully convinced, unite with us in urging on the authorities the immediate adoption of a regular establishment of men-of-war troop-ships, and thus to put an end altogether to the old and universally condemned system of transports.

Most justly did Mr. Wood remark on the debate alluded to, that there was another point to be considered beside the expense, and this was, the health of the troops embarked, which, in ships-of-war, was preserved in a tenfold degree greater than in any hired merchant-vessel; and further that, as experience has shown, a man-of-war can convey three different regiments to three separate colonies —namely, to Gibraltar, the West Indies, and North America, within as many months, and winter months too; whereas it would have required three, if not four, transports, to have performed the same service, and which they would not have accomplished in five months, and perhaps not even in six. Thus, on the score of economy alone, setting aside all the advantages attendant on troops being conveyed in a ship-of-war, the preference must decidedly be given to the system of regular troop-ships, fitted expressly for those duties. If Alderman Thompson would desire to have some cases furnished him of the glaring evils of the transport system, we are prepared with numerous instances to adduce, in several of which, after the troops had actually embarked, the transports had to undergo a thorough repair before they could be deemed seaworthy! But as one which occurred within a short period will perhaps for the present suffice, we will suggest to the worthy Alderman to move for all the correspondence, and all the reports, connected with the case of the Arab transport-ship, which went to Cork in the month of September last, to embark drafts of the 36th and other regiments for Halifax, and which vessel, after the soldiers were embarked, was found to be unseaworthy, and was compelled to undergo an extensive repair, so that she did not sail till some time in November; and at length, after getting as far as the Bank of Newfoundland, was obliged to return to Plymouth in the end of December, with all the troops still on board, at which place they were disembarked, and where, we believe, they still remain. The Arab was sent round to Woolwich, and, as we have understood, discharged out of the service! This is but one example of the sad inefficiency of merchant vessels for the conveyance of troops; but we are prepared to state a variety of other instances, all equally bad, and calling loudly for an end to be put to the system, in toto, and which we sincerely hope it will be at an early period.

In reviewing last week Sir Francis Head's "Narrative," we noticed that the Retired Officers, who gallantly stepped forward when danger was rife, and tendered their services for Canada, remain without reward. The Official Gazette, which we insert this week, shows that Canadian service is not wholly forgotten. Four distinguished Officers, employed in the Colonies, have been honoured with the Companionship of the Bath; at the head of the list is the Commanding Officer of the 73rd, Colonel Love, an officer of 30 years full-pay service, and most deserving of such distinction. The recent services of Colonels Dundas, Eden, and Taylor, are in the recollection of our readers; and we hope that the claims of some of the other officers, to whom we referred in our last, will at no distant period be recompensed.

"Pure and undefiled religion,
In our God and Father's sight,
Is to pour on helpless orphans
Balm of healing and delight;
'Tis to visit cheerless widows
In their darkness and distress;
This is pure and true religion
In its power and blessedness."

The formation of a Benefit Fund for the Widows and Orphans of the Officers of the Army and Navy is of such an all-important nature, that we need not apologise for again calling attention to the admirable letter on this soul-touching subject, which was lately addressed to us by an esteemed correspondent, Humanitas,—a letter which deserves to be printed in letters of gold—a letter which alike reflects honour upon the head and heart of the writer—a letter breathing those tender sentiments of benevolence and pity, which should be engraven on the tablet of every man's heart—a letter which cannot fail to be warmly responded to by the Army and Navy at large. Let us, then, all be stirring while it is called to-day, without suffering an hour to be needlessly frittered away in bringing this most desirable, this most indispensable, this most benevolent object, to a successful consummation. Widowhood is a state which invariably calls forth the best sympathies from every generous breast, even when unattended with pecuniary embarrassment; what, then, must be the feelings of the generous and the brave, when they are told that abject distress is but too often the portion of the bereaved families of officers?—We have received the following appeal from an officer's orphan, and which we are assured will be perused with painful interest by those whose hearts can feel, whose eyes glisten with the tear of manly sensibility. It will not be out of place, however, to throw out a few loose hints relative to the "ways and means," for nothing can be done without money. First, then, a memorial should be presented to the Secretary-at-War, praying that the fees paid on all Military commissions might be granted to the fund. The Army never had a Secretary-at-War more devoted to its interests than Lord Howick, and we may, therefore, confidently calculate upon his warm support. Secondly, a circular letter should be written to every regiment in the service, and to every ship in commission, addressed to the officers generally, soliciting a subscription, however small, in aid of the fund; and all officers on half-pay should be appealed to through the medium of the press to come forward in its support; in short, no stone should be left unturned which would appear to hold out a prospect of advantage to the fund; and, above all, let the old adage be well remembered, so peculiarly applicable on the present occasion—need we repeat it?—"unity is strength."

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—As the reason for venturing to ask your insertion of this letter, in every way (excepting its object) unworthy a place in the columns of your Paper, I must state, my attention was attracted to its subject by hearing some Military Officers discussing upon the purport of the letter signed Humanitas in your Gazette of the 23d ult. Upon reading it myself, I only thought I ought (as one of the "orphans" for whom Humanitas would have pleaded) to add my humble endeavour to second his views, that others may be spared the bitter experience generally the lot of the portionless officer's daughter.

Mr. Editor, you have kindly espoused the cause—it is a merciful one: oh! then, leave it not until you have succeeded in gaining the attention of those with whom supplies rests. It is the attention, not the will, that is wanting; for it is not to men as men I would appeal, or to officers as officers, but in the revered names of husbands and fathers—to those whose dying thoughts in the field of battle, or on the more peaceful bed of death, would turn to the wife of their bosom, or whose last feeble cry would be—"My children!"

Mr. Editor, would not tears of sorrow surprise the furrowed cheeks of many a gallant veteran, could he foresee the depths of humiliation that await the objects of his tenderest care and solicitude? Would not the crimson dye of indignation flush his pallid countenance, and for a moment light up his expiring eyes, could he contemplate the mortifications his bereaved family would have to endure? It is not the change from luxuries to the mere necessaries of life that the officers' widow or orphan would or ought to complain, but it is the change from the silken cords of affection (which made every duty pleasant) to the iron fetters of a paid companion, or a servile dependent. Think for a moment on the wrench of feelings ere the beloved wife, or the fondly caressed child, can become reconciled either to one or the other; inheriting principles of honour from him for whom they mourn—sharing in his pride of character, as well as in his "pomp of circumstance"—living in his life,—can they at once understand the change to which they are reduced? Ah! no; their ignorance exposes them to trial; and whilst it is not riches they covet, it is just that which will enable them to exist independent of the world's caprice: without this, to what are they not subject? Unprepared for employment, they know not how to obtain it; accustomed to be advised, they know not how to act; anxiety fastens on the mind, and brings with it its attendant evils. But would that this were all—for the sake of human sympathy, would that it were; but, alas! they are lesser evils when compared with the heart's anguish to discover the friends of our warmest attachment were the friends of our wealth—to meet with the averted look from the objects of our unchanged regard—to have to resent the insolence of the unmanly and the malevolent; and, above all, to have the kindliest, the best feelings of our nature misinterpreted, and subjected to the suspicion of the narrow-minded and the dishonourable. Were benevolence the characteristic of the human mind, dependence would not be the bitter, bitter thing it is. Oh! how would the kind word—the encouraging smile, the proffered disposition to serve—soothe the crushed spirit of many a widow and orphan, and make the heart leap with joy at every opportunity to serve their benefactor. As I have said before, Mr. Editor, it is not the will, but the knowledge of the sufferings that is wanting, to induce officers to establish the Fund proposed. Oh, no! for it is the Christian soldier's heart to melt at sight of woman's sorrow: it is his arm that would protect her in the hour of danger, and it is his life he would give to save hers. Surely, then, with such a Commander-in-Chief—with such Commanders, and with such hearts as govern and compose a British Army, it is not influence that is required in so good a cause, it is only individual feeling: let this be appealed to, and the time will be forgotten when a Fund did not exist; the blessing will be reflected: each soldier will be storing protection for his own, whilst shielding from the blasts of adversity his lamented brother-soldier's orphan. In the hope that my personally experienced representation may prevail, I shall have additional cause (notwithstanding all I have suffered and may yet be called upon to suffer) to be proud of a title I would not change for all that wealth could purchase without it—a name endeared to the orphan by the cherished remembrance of a soldier-father's love, and a soldier-father's noble example.

Pardon this lengthened trespass from an obscure, an humble

ORPHAN.

We willingly comply with the request of a correspondent, and insert the following:—

PROPOSED FUND FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE WIDOWS AND ORPHANS OF ALL OFFICERS IN H.M.'S SERVICE.

A preliminary meeting will be held at the rooms of Messrs. Alexander and Kerr, Carlton Chambers, No. 8, Regent-street, at half-past one o'clock of the afternoon of Saint George's day (Tuesday, 23d instant), for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of addressing a Memorial to His Excellency the Commander of the Forces, on the subject of the above Proposition, and of discussing all such matters relating to it as shall be deemed necessary.

Officers who have signified their approval of the principle by subscribing their names in the book for that intention left in Carlton Chambers, as also officers of every grade, and in every arm of the service, whether Military or Naval, half pay or retired, and Militia Officers, in actual commission, are respectfully solicited to attend.

The subject to be considered is one involving such exciting interest to every husband, father, and humane officer, it is hoped that all who can conveniently will attend, to aid so sacred a cause—at least by their expression of approval.

Officers at a distance would oblige by offering any suggestions through the medium of their friends who are on the spot, or if they will address letters (post paid) to "The Retired Officer," he will be most happy to place them before the meeting.

Should the rooms (which are offered gratis) prove, as it is hoped they will, too small even for a preliminary meeting, one capable of containing hundreds (in the immediate vicinity) can be obtained for a trifling expense. Those officers who feel interested in the Proposition are requested to peruse the letters on the subject in the United Service Gazette of the 9th, 16th, 23d, and 30th March, and of this day; and in the Naval and Military Journal of 28th March, with the Editor's remarks.

(Signed) A RETIRED OFFICER.

8, Regent-street, April 6, 1839.

THE unfortunate case of Mr. Dillon, which has so frequently been noticed in our columns, is at length to have the advocacy of our contemporary the Times. We heartily rejoice at this circumstance, and to perceive a disposition, in this powerful organ of the press, to give its assistance to cases of deep injustice and hardship connected with the United Service. Politics with such matters, however, should not be mixed up; we look not to whether the grievances have originated under Whig or Tory rule; it is sufficient that they exist; that appeal has followed appeal to the authorities, and that redress is withheld upon the most frivolous grounds, or without any reasons being assigned. It is absurd to supplicate Her Majesty; it is mere form,—for it is well known that the Queen does not interfere with the proceedings of Her Ministers, and that, as a matter of course, all petitions and memorials, addressed to the Sovereign, are referred, by the Secretary or some Member of the Royal Suite, to the Department which has already decided against the complainant. In such cases, therefore, the Press and the Parliament are the last and only resources. We must, however, add, that it behoves the press, in order to maintain its influence, to take up such cases only as, on full investigation, are shown to be really grievous. We subjoin a résumé of the case of Mr. Dillon:—

"The case of Mr. John Dillon, late of the Royal Navy, and formerly commanding the Preventive Coast-Guard Station at Millcove, in the county of Cork, has been at various times noticed by us as one of great hardship in its effect upon that gentleman. The particulars of the transaction we had from an eye-witness—a gentleman connected with our establishment—who happened at the time of its occurrence to be on that part of the southern coast of Ireland, and within a short distance of Millcove station. Mr. Dillon, being out in his boat on duty, a short time after nightfall, observed a sail bearing down upon Millcove, and apparently making for the harbour of Glandore. There being, as our informant heard at the time, a suspicion that an American smuggler brig was off the coast with the intention of landing a cargo of tobacco, the Coast-Guard were on the alert, and Mr. Dillon thought it advisable to hail the vessel, which he had just reason to suspect, from her refusal to lie to, was the expected smuggler. The sea at the time was running high, and Mr. Dillon could not, consequently, attempt to board the brig, as he discovered her to be. She put about, and, crowding canvass, made for sea. He pursued, keeping up from both his boats a continued fire upon her. After she had rounded the old head of Kinsale he lost sight of her; and, presuming that she had cleared the head and got off to sea, and—as it was subsequently proved on the investigation instituted into the matter—alarmed lest his small boat with four men would be swamped by the heavy sea running off the head, he put back, satisfied that he had prevented a landing by beating the vessel off that part of the coast. The vessel, however, finding it impossible to get out of the bay, and the gale freshening from the sea, put into the harbour of Kinsale, where she was boarded by the Customs' Surveyor of the port (Mr. Masters), and by him seized. She was subsequently condemned as a lawful prize, and Mr. Masters received 11,780*l.* as his share as seizing officer, whilst Mr. Dillon, the bona-fide (if the matter be equitably considered) captor, got but 50*l.* We assert Mr. Dillon to have been the bona-fide captor, because, in point of fact, he not only prevented the vessel from making a landing, but he also chased her until within a short time of her capture, and in reality into a situation in which she could not avoid being captured, although he had lost sight of her for a brief period towards the conclusion of the chase. The vessel was the brig Peru, of New York, and had on board near 40,000*l.* of tobacco. This entire cargo, our informant states, would have been run but for Mr Dillon's falling in with, and beating off, the vessel. For this he not only did not receive his just share of the prize-money, but he also lost his situation.

"The Government has been repeatedly appealed to by him, and petitions to Parliament have been, every Session since the transaction occurred, presented from him on the subject. He demands, if he is chargeable with not having done his duty in not boarding the vessel, a Court-Martial. This it would be but fair to grant him. Sir E. Codrington, to whom the case was referred for inquiry, made a report to Lord Althorp (now Earl Spencer), exonerating Mr. Dillon from the charge of cowardice. He demands that this report should be confirmed, or if not, that he should be allowed to prove the facts before a committee of inquiry. This was, as we perceive, the prayer of a petition from him, presented on Wednesday night (Mar. 27) by Sir F. Burdett. It is, on the whole as gross a case of hardship as we have at any time known an officer to be oppressed by. We trust that it will shortly obtain the consideration of a new Administration, if the present have made up their minds not to entertain it, with a view to the redress of the injured gentleman's grievance."

A Government is materially weakened when it neglects to redress the real grievances of individuals for complaints spread through all classes, and which have effect over the minds of just and honourable men.

SOME surprise has been expressed in the Military circles at the late promotion of Major Tulloch, from an unattached company, half-pay, to which he succeeded only last year. Now, we cannot see any grounds for calling into question a brevet promotion in the present case. In times of peace, Officers of the Army cannot distinguish themselves by the sword—and we conceive that no officer has more distinguished himself by the use of his pen for the good of the Army than Major Tulloch, and that no officer has better merited this mark of his Sovereign's favour, for a military and national service jointly, than the able writer of the Reports on the sickness, mortality, and invaliding of the troops in the West Indies, Mediterranean, and Canada.

IT affords us real satisfaction to draw the attention of our readers to a Proposition for a Monument to Sir Pulteney Malcolm. No man could be more universally respected than the late gallant Admiral. His services (already recorded in our columns) were long and distinguished; whilst in private life his urbanity, social qualities, and warmth of heart, acquired him the personal regard of a very numerous acquaintance. On the present occasion his friends, together with those who only knew Sir Pulteney by reputation, will, we are satisfied, gladly assemble to pay a just tribute to his memory.

Many noblemen and gentlemen, including officers of all ranks and of all branches of Her Majesty's service, having expressed a wish that some public honour should be conferred on the memory of the late Admiral Sir Pulteney Malcolm, G.C.B., it was resolved, at a meeting of his friends on the 30th ultimo (Admiral White in the Chair), that a Monument should be erected to his memory, and that a public meeting should be held at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's Street, at one o'clock, on Tuesday the 23d instant, for the purpose of entering into subscriptions, and of appointing a Committee of Management to carry the above Resolution into effect; on which occasion, all the friends of the deceased who can make it convenient are requested to attend.

THE John Bull of last Saturday was, we think, rather unjust to Lord Howick, in the comments made so sweepingly on the debate in moving the Army Estimates. The speech of Lord Howick was not "pulled to pieces" by Sir Henry Hardinge, but fairly commented on by him; and, in our opinion, the John Bull would have better served the cause of the Army to have imitated Sir Henry Hardinge in giving full credit to Lord Howick for the new measures he proposed to render the soldier's condition better, instead of limiting its comments to the weak portion of the speech—the weak strength of the Army! We deeply regret that party so often blinds the ablest and best-intentioned writers to the real merits of their opponents in politics. We spared not free comment on Lord Howick's estimate for the numbers of the Army, but justice called on us also to notice with equal candour the introduction of several items calculated to benefit the service generally, and to ameliorate the condition of the "hardest-worked Army in the world."

WE return this week to the examination of Major Tulloch's Report, and find increasing interest in every page.

The Foot Guards.—Although the Medical Reports of this class of the home troops are imperfect, Major Tulloch has, by taking the mean strength for seven years and a quarter, viz., from 1830 to 31st March, 1837 (34,538, and the deaths 745), deduced that the ratio of deaths per 1000 mean strength is 21·6-10ths, which is nearly one-half higher than in the Dragoon Guards and Dragoons, and this greater mortality is proved by a Table of Diseases to be caused by diseases of the lungs. That the climate of London is not the cause has, we think, been demonstrated by the facts, that the Horse and Life Guards, chiefly stationed in London, do not proportionably suffer, and that the Returns of the Police Force show no similar mortality. Major Tulloch adheres rigidly to facts and figures; but we may here be permitted to give the general opinion, that the very crowded state of the sleeping-rooms of the Infantry is the "vera causa" of the prevalence of pulmonary cases in the Infantry. We believe that Cavalry have nearly one-third more space granted to them in barracks than the Infantry. That night-duty is not the cause is quite clear; for among the troops of the Line serving at home, and equally, if not more, exposed to guard-duty, the mortality by diseases of the lungs is much lower,—and yet the Guards are usually at home—the Line almost always abroad, and consequently containing men with deteriorated constitutions from tropical service. It is worthy of remark, that fever is nearly twice as fatal among the depots of the regiments in the West Indies as in other bodies of men; and this may be attributed to the number of men in these depots who have previously suffered from fever abroad, and are more susceptible to the disease than sound constitutions. The proportion, however, of deaths from fever in the Dragoons, Foot Guards, Household Cavalry, and in civil life, approximates very nearly—the average being per 1000 1·6-10ths annually. Fevers in this country among the troops are more prevalent in the summer than in the winter in the proportion of five to four; the exceptions to which are the years 1832 and 1834, out of a very extensive series. This is true in civil life: but fevers, though more prevalent in summer, have been found to be more fatal in Winter. Vaccination, which is rigidly enforced in the Army, has diminished in a vast degree the cases of eruptive fevers; for we observe, that, out of 10,000 men, only two die annually from this class of diseases; and that only one out of each 2000 is attacked by small-pox annually in the United Kingdom. While diseases of the lungs are the chief sources of mortality among the troops at home, those of the liver and bowels are by no means productive of great mortality. Deaths by diseases of the lungs are about eight per 1000 annually—by liver complaints, three in 10,000 - by diseases of stomach and bowels, five in 10,000! This proportion is lower in the two latter diseases among the troops than among the most select of the population. On the aggregate strength of seven years,—as if it had occurred annually, - Major Tulloch gives us an interesting calculation regarding cholera. This disease cut off 2·8-10ths per 1000 of the troops in the kingdom; and it is remarkable, that, though scattered over the whole country, the proportion of deaths is within a mere fraction the same among all. Of diseases of the brain, only eight in 10,000 of the troops at home die annually, which is about half of the mortality by these diseases in civil life. Of dropsies, about four in 10,000 of the Army in the United Kingdom die annually.

The foregoing investigation has been entered into by Major Tulloch to obtain a standard for estimating the influence of diseases on troops in the colonies, compared with those in the United Kingdom. He next proceeds to examine into the extent of invaliding at home.

It appears that the invaliding, like the mortality, of the Foot Guards is nearly one-half higher than among the Cavalry, and falls, like that mortality, heaviest on those under fourteen years' service; while among the Household Cavalry, serving in London, the invaliding is not one-third as high after the same period of service. The number discharged from the Foot Guards for disabilities is nearly double that from the Line, whether at home or abroad—in healthy or unhealthy stations. We are inclined to think that men are discharged from the Foot Guards with too great facility. The Guardsmen do not undergo the same medical treatment and examination, prior to discharge, as the soldiers of the Line. The Guards are discharged on the certificates of their own medical officers and the Staff Surgeon. There seems to have been an unaccountable number of men discharged since 1832. Major Tulloch regrets his inability to account for the cause. We think we could help him to it, if we would.

The third section examines into the number constantly sick among the home troops, which appears to be about 40 per 1000 men; and that each attack of sickness averages sixteen days. This is a proportion nearly thrice as high as in civil life, but is accounted for easily by the fact, that all ailments in the Army are hospital cases, however slight.

The fourth section treats of the influence of age on the mortality of the troops in the United Kingdom, and we give the results in the following Tables:—

Owing to the interchange of men between service and depot companies, and the very short time (about three years) Infantry regiments are stationed at home, deductions from them would be manifestly erroneous, as the same body of men should be for a series of years under observation.

The fifth section inquires into the mortality among officers at home. It appears, that from 1826 to 1836, inclusive, there died of the Cavalry officers 67, out of an average of 700, making the annual ratio, during the eleven years, nine and a half per 1000. During the same period, on the average of twenty-seven regiments of the Line at home, there died 110 officers out of 900, being eleven per 1000. In this calculation Paymasters, Quartermasters, and Medical Staff, have been excluded, as being above the average age; but the average age of the other officers may be held to correspond nearly with that of the privates. In comparing the results, then, the mortality among the officers of the Household Troops and Line, on home service, appears one-half less than among the privates. But we should here observe that officers in bad health generally leave the service by retirement, or by sale.

The sixth section treats of the influence of the seasons in producing sickness and mortality among the troops in the United Kingdom, which it is essential to ascertain if possible, to obviate our viewing the unhealthy character of some months in other climates, as depending on local causes, while a more extended investigation might show the same law to exist in our own country. Major Tulloch's Tables prove that, notwithstanding the vulgar error, called by old women general opinion, the sickness among the troops is least in the fogs and gloom of November, and throughout the winter, though soldiers are much exposed to the inclemency of the weather, while it is greatest in July, August, and September, when we enjoy a mild and serene atmosphere. Spring, however, seems peculiarly fatal to cases of consumption. These results are similar to those arrived at by the French in a recent investigation made into the relative mortality in each month in their Army, and lead to the general conclusion, that the autumnal season is the most unhealthy to troops. The reverse is the case in civil life, as proved satisfactorily by M. Quetelet in his Statistical Tables; and when we see the unhealthy character of autumn still more strongly marked among our troops in the colonies, we cannot justly "view it as a peculiarity of climate; but as, in some measure, resulting from the operation of a general cause, affecting the health of all soldiers in all latitudes north of the line." What that cause may be, neither we nor the able writer of the Report can positively determine.

In our next we shall review the Report on the Mediterranean stations.

THAT sick and convalescent seamen have every attention shown them on board Her Majesty's ships is generally understood; but we doubt much whether our shoregoing friends are aware of the extent to which this attention is carried; and since it forms a pleasing trait of the feeling which subsists between officers and men, in direct contrast with those effusions which too often disgrace the columns of the Dispatch, and similar publications, we shall offer a slight sketch of the uniform custom, though in this instance drawn from an individual ship. We may, however, with propriety say, "ex uno disce omnes," as the practice varies only in regard to the extent of the private fortunes of the various officers.

The frigate we now allude to was on the African Coast, and whilst in the Bight of Benin, out of a crew of about three hundred, no less than two-thirds were on the sick list at the same time, which compelled the Captain to run for St. Helena to recruit. During the whole period in which the men were under the Doctor's care, the Captain, a man of ample fortune, and whose table was commensurate, in short superb, surrendered up his whole stock of wines, sheep, pigs, poultry, &c., into the hands of the medical staff for the use of the sick and convalescent, placing himself on bare ship's allowance of salt beef, pork, biscuit, and rum, to which he confined himself; nor did he resume his usual style of living until the ship's company were able to do duty again. We need scarcely add, that such sympathy of feeling was duly appreciated by the men; in proof of which, two French frigates having at that period arrived on their station, were descried at anchor, and though weakened by disease, and diminution of crew by deaths, the seamen mustered aft in a body, cap in hand, and begged their Captain to place his ship between the two frigates. This required consideration, but the enemy weighed immediately. One of the frigates, however, got on shore; the other double-manned herself with the crew of the disabled ship, and, it is thought, kept the second crew below in reserve. An action ensued, in which sad havoc took place on both sides, and the affair terminated in a drawn battle.

We are half tempted to state names, but forbear doing so, as honourable brave men do not like to be shown up, even for honourable traits of conduct, without a sufficient cause for bringing them before the public. We are, moreover, further induced to withhold particular names, because these traits of kind consideration for the sick are common throughout the Service; for we do not hesitate to say that officers, whether of the ward-room or cabin, never sit down to a comfortable, or even to a fresh-meat dinner, without sending from their table such viands as the Doctor sanctions and their table affords;—hence our remark, "conformable to their private means." Yet such are the men whom Mr. Joseph Hume and others have thought proper to designate, or rather to stigmatise, as "dead weight."

We consider that, at this particular time, every such incident, tending to encourage seamen to enter, should be promulgated: and, indeed, it ought to weigh with the Military Commission, as showing to what expenses officers are put, and of which the public really know nothing.

The Court.

The Queen and her august mother continue in excellent health. Her Majesty held a Court on Saturday afternoon. Marshal Clausel had an audience of the Queen in the Royal closet.—On Sunday Her Majesty and the Duchess of Kent attended divine service in the Chapel Royal, St. James's.—On Tuesday evening the Queen honoured the Haymarket Theatre with her presence.—On Wednesday the Queen took equestrian exercise in the riding-school, and in the evening honoured Drury Lane Theatre with her presence.—Her Majesty visited the Princess Augusta on Thursday, at Clarence House, St. James's.

The Marchioness of Tavistock and Lady Theresa Digby have succeeded the Marchioness of Normanby and Lady Charlotte Copley, as the Lady and Woman of the Bedchamber; Viscount Torrington and the Hon. Major Keppel have succeeded Lord Gardner and Sir Frederick Stovin as the Lord and Groom; and Col. Buckley has succeeded the Hon. Col. Cavendish as the Equerry in Waiting on Her Majesty.

Despatches, dated 25th Feb., were received on Monday, at the Colonial Department, from the Governors of Jamaica and Barbadoes, and from the officers of Her Majesty's Government in the Windward and Leeward Islands. Despatches, dated Feb. 4, were received at the Foreign Department from the British Consul at Vera Cruz; others, dated Feb. 15, from Tampico; others, dated March 1, from the Havannah; and others, dated Jan. 28, at the Colonial Office, from the Cape of Good Hope. Despatches were forwarded from the Colonial Office for Sir Lionel Smith, Governor of Jamaica, and the Governors of the different West India islands. Despatches were forwarded on Tuesday from the Foreign Department for Lord Ponsonby, the British Ambassador at Constantinople; for the British Minister at St. Petersburgh; for Lord Granville, the British Ambassador at Paris; for the English Ministers resident at the Courts of Brussels and the Hague; for the British Chargé d'Affaires at Madrid; and for the British Minister at Lisbon. Despatches from Sir G. Arthur, Lieut.-Gov. of U. Canada, and from the Governor of Gibraltar, were received at the Colonial Office. Despatches from the Governors of the West India colonies, and from Col. Doherty, Governor of Sierra Leone, were received yesterday at the Colonial-office.

The Revenue.—The accounts for the quarter show that the revenue continues to increase. On the year ended 5th April, 1839, as compared with the year ended 5th April, 1838, there was an increase of 2,132,866*l.* On the quarter ended 5th April, 1839, as compared with the quarter ended 5th April, 1838, an increase of 565,243*l.* On the Customs, the increase for the year is 1,053,179*l.*, for the quarter 349,809*l.* On the Excise, the increase for the year is 334,686*l.*, for the quarter 135,638*l.* On the Stamps the increase for the year is 143,101*l.* On all the branches there has been an increase for the year, and a decrease for the quarter of only 7,941*l.* on the Stamps, and 25,000*l.* on the Crown Lands.

Whitehall, April 1.—The Queen has appointed Vice-Admiral Sir C. Adam, K.C.B., to be Lieutenant and Sheriff-Principal of the shire of Kinross, in the room of the Right Honourable William Adam, deceased; also, the Hon. J. C. Dundas, Lieutenant and Sheriff-Principal of the shires of Orkney and Zetland, in the room of Lawrence, Earl of Zetland, deceased.

The Duke of Sussex has appointed Lawrence Walker, Esq., to be H.R.H. Auditor and the Comptroller of his household; and Richard Bythell, Esq., one of the Surgeons Extraordinary to H.R.H., to be one of his Surgeons in Ordinary.

Lord Ellenborough has, within the last few days, been united to Mrs. Browne, widow of the late Mr. W. Browne, of Camfield, Hertfordshire.

An investiture of the Order of the Garter will be held shortly, to fill up the vacancies. The Duke of Cleveland will be honoured with the Blue Ribbon.

The Nelson Memorial.—The exhibition having finally closed on Saturday last, the competitors have removed their respective models and designs. They are at liberty to send in their models and designs in their original state, or so altered as, upon subsequent consideration, the artists may deem advisable. This was Mr. Ridley Colbourne's suggestion; but if he assumes that the whole of the models will be sent back, he will find himself much mistaken. Several of the artists seem to think that they have been very cavalierly treated, and are resolved not to send in any model to the fresh exhibition. New competitors there may be, but who is to decide as to their merits? The special sub-committee have made their report already, and it would not be respectful to call upon those gentlemen to reconsider their decision. It is, in fact, understood, that they will not again consent to undertake a task, the performance of which, under present circumstances, must be peculiarly ungracious. The general committee meet on the last Saturday in June, by which day it is expected that there will be a large accumulation of designs; but, unless another sub-committee be appointed, to what ordeal are they to be submitted? This general committee are thus in a dilemma from which they cannot extricate themselves without appeal to the subscribers to the memorial—a course that is strongly recommended by the most zealous promoters of the object which all are anxious to accomplish in the most satisfactory manner, and with the least possible delay, consistent with the convenience of the artists.

The young Duke of Rovigo was hastening to this country on an affair du cœur, when his progress was suddenly interrupted by the almost fatal termination of the duel in which he was engaged. It is a strange destiny that is likely to lead to the permanent residence in this country of the son of Savary. The lady is the daughter and heiress of the late Lieut.-Colonel Stamer, and possesses an unincumbered fortune of 4000*l.* per per annum. The attachment was formed during a recent visit by the lady to the French capital.

Post Office Regulation.—Notices have been issued stating, that all letters for Upper Canada will be taken at an uniform rate; viz., of one shilling for single letters and two shillings for double letters, and so on in proportion, without any charge for inland postage; and all letters from or to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, &c., will be received the same as those for Gibraltar and Malta, without the previous payment of the postage. A mail will be made up for Rotterdam, per Batavier steamer, every Saturday evening, and letters will be received for such, up to seven o'clock on that evening.

Various rumours are afloat respecting the sudden departure for the continent of a sporting nobleman, remarkable for his princely doings at Melton Mowbray, who, it is said, has involved himself in serious pecuniary difficulties. A noble Lord is said to be partly mixed up with the extravagant doings at Melton.

Col. Shaw Kennedy, late Director-General of the Irish Police force, is summoned to attend the Lords' Committee, on the state of crime and outrage in Ireland. His examination will explain the cause of his retirement from office.

Last week a melancholy accident took place in the Downs. A young man, son of Lieut. Duncan, R.N., who had been shipped only a few hours, while assisting to get the anchor to get the anchor to the bow, unfortunately lost his footing, and almost instantly disappeared. The body never rose to the surface, so that no opportunity occurred of rendering him assistance.

A laughable story has been going the rounds of the salons of Lisbon. It appears that the youthful Queen detected her husband in the heinous fact of kissing one of the Maids of Honour, and that, losing the dignity of the Queen in the feelings of the woman, she boxed the ears of both parties very soundly. However, le mari has been forgiven.

Grand Eight-oared Cutter Match between the Gentlemen of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.—This great contest, which has for some weeks past engrossed the attention of the cognoscenti, not only of alma mater, and those generally attached to river sports, but of sporting gentlemen of every grade, came off on Wednesday upon the Newmarket course of aquatics; that is, from Westminster to Putney, a distance which has been most judiciously selected as calculated to try the lasting power of aspirants for fame in this invigorating sport. The Cambridge crew were the favourites, but the very flower of each college boat had been selected on both sides. The Cambridge gentlemen went to the outside station, as it is termed, at the pier of Westminster-bridge; the Oxford gentlemen having won the inside and best position. They were stroke and stroke until they neared the Horseferry, where Cambridge showed a slight lead. Their antagonists disputed the advantage with all the strength they could muster, but the Cambridge men were too good for them. Off the Penitentiary they had increased their advantage, and went in advance through Vauxhall-bridge. Both crews did their utmost, the "white feather" was never shown by either, but the Cambridge were the better men—their opponents could not overhaul them, and in each succeeding mile the difference of their strength and style was more manifest. The Cambridge gentlemen arrived first through Putney-bridge amidst deafening shouts, one minute and twenty seconds in advance of their opponents. The distance was done by the winners in thirty-one minutes and a half. The losers had a slow stroke, but that of the winners was like lightning, although at first sight they appeared under boated.

British Auxiliary Legion.—A letter from Colonel Fortescue, one of the best officers of this unfortunate force, directs our attention to the unprincipled conduct of the Spanish Government in regard to the settlement of the claims. In July, 1837, a document was drawn up and signed by Colonel Wylde, the British Government's Agent, and General Tena on the part of Spain, guaranteeing every officer full pay up to the day of settlement. This right, Col. Fortescue says, has been denied by the Royal Commission at present sitting, such Commission unaccountably lending itself to an unworthy cause, and relying upon the necessities of individuals, are giving them—not money, as agreed, up to the present time; not even Treasury bills, bad as they are and ever will be—but certificates, not worth one shilling, merely for three months' pay, in full of all demands, which some officers, fearing they might get nothing better, have been induced too readily to accept. The Colonel very justly remarks, that "no Government, however pacific, ought quietly to permit treachery or deception to be inflicted upon men who, under privations and sufferings almost before unheard of, never failed to do their duty. Our appeal to Spain got us, to be sure, a Royal commission (such as it is) without funds, a trio without a head, a cottage without content, where may be seen congregated together some dozen expectant clerks and hungry pensioners, all unpaid. About the gates may also be seen in groups the fatherless children and widows, the maimed and wounded, seeking their hard-earned pittance."

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

France.—At length the French Ministry has been formed, and a most strange Cabinet it is. Every one was electrified on Monday by perusing the ordonnances in Monday's Moniteur, accepting the resignation of the old Ministry, and appointing the following one in its stead. We place the names in juxta-position:—

Present Ministry.	Offices.	Former Ministry.
M. Girod de l'Ain, Peer of France	Keeper of the Seals and Minister of Justice and Religion.	M. Barthé.
Duke of Montebello, Peer of France	Foreign Affairs.	Count Molé.
Lieut. Gen. Despan Cubières	War.	Lt. Gen Baron Bernard.
Baron Tupinier, Deputy	Marine and Colonies.	Vice-Admiral Rosamel.
M. Parant, Dep.	Public Instruction.	M. Salvandy.
M. de Gasparin, Peer of France	Interior.	Count Montalivet.
M. Gauthier, Peer of France	Finance.	M Lacave-Laplagne.
M. de Gasparin	Public Works, Agriculture, and Commerce, ad interim.	M. Martin du Nord.

The unfortunate members of this French interim cabinet are hardly dealt with. All Paris was laughing the entire of April-day at their expense; for no two Parisians met, whether in street, salon, café, or exchange, without indulging in quolibets on the score of the new Ministry. Not content with this scourging of ridicule, the journals of Tuesday apply, moreover, the scourge of serious indignation.

Spain.—There are serious differences in the Carlist camp. Two regiments have fired on one another, and the 5th regiment of Navarre has been completely broken up in consequence.

Holland.—The King has appointed Lieut.-Gen. Baron Van der Capellen, now Governor of the Fortress of Bergen-op-Zoom, to be Chief Governor of the Fortress of Maestricht, in the place of the late Gen. Dubbles; and Maj.-Gen. Bagelaer to be Governor of Bergen-op-Zoom.

North America.—No fresh collision has taken place between the people of Maine and Sir John Harvey. The moral position of the latter is improved by the prompt announcement from Sir John Colborne that he had placed five regiments of the Line at his disposal.

Cape of Good Hope (From our own Correspondent).—The emigrant farmers are now living dispersed in the Orange River, the Riet, the Modder, the Sand, the Kaffer, the Vaal, the Donkin, the Caledon, &c. They seem perfectly happy, are well-disposed towards the Government, and wish for its protection; hire places from the Bastaards (the mixed breed, who claim nearly the whole country just alluded to), and get a good fountain for 100 rix dollars (7*l.* 10*s.*) per annum, or for thirty sheep. Some of the farmers have taken places for 99 years. The first cause of emigration is said to have been drought. The eastern division of the Cape Colony, especially the districts of Beaufort, Graaffreinet, and Cradock, have been getting drier and drier for 15 years back. We hear no complaints of this sort in other parts of the colony, from which emigration also took place; but in the above, fountains, once thought inexhaustible, are now entirely gone. This circumstance, with the Caffer invasion of 1835, completed the rage for emigration. The slave question may have also ministered to the fuel, coming on the back of the above-mentioned causes; and a few disaffected spirits threw a bad light over the late South African war. It is pretty well ascertained that the north-eastern parts of the colony could not have supported their stock of cattle, if the graziers had not access to lands to the east of the Orange River; and it is fortunate that the stock in possession of the emigrant farmers is equally available to the colony as if it had been within the colonial boundary. The boors in the vicinity of Natal are suffering exceedingly, and are longing for the protection of Government. The Military detachments recently sent there will, it is to be hoped, secure them against the warlike Zoolahs. Why Militia are not organised in the Cape Colony (at a time, especially, when regiments of the Line are so much required in the East and in America) we cannot comprehend.

Theatres.

ITALIAN OPERA.—On Thursday evening Madame Persiani made her first appearance this season in La Sonnambula, a character which is the more interesting, as having been the first in which she was heard by the English public. On her entrance she was enthusiastically welcomed. Nothing can be more perfect than the manner in which she sustains the part of Amina: the power and finish of her execution, the elegance and grace of her ornaments, that quiet, unpretending, yet absorbing expression of feeling, which irresistibly carries the hearer along, stamp her performance as a work of the highest character. Ernesta Grisi was to have appeared in Lisa, but the severity of the weather is said to have detained her, and the part was taken by Bellini. The house was well attended. There is every promise of a brilliant season.

COVENT-GARDEN.—The managers of this theatre trusted to the attractions held out to the Easter holiday-makers by the performance of Sir E. L. Bulwer's successful play of Richelieu, aided by the revival of the old favourite dramatic romance of Lodoiska, in preference to producing any novelty of a more decided character. Both performances were received with great applause, and the house was crowded.

DRURY-LANE.—A new melodramatic romantic piece was produced on Monday night, for the gratification of the holiday-makers, called the King of the Mist, or the Miller of the Hartz Mountains. It is sufficiently full of wonders and improbabilities, but we cannot say much for any interest or suspense excited by the performance. The characters and the writing are both of a very ordinary description. The house was ill-attended, and at the fall of the curtain the hisses were predominant.

HAYMARKET.—There was no want of attractions at this theatre. Power, the only true Irishman on the stage—Hill, the only Yankee—and O. Smith, the beau ideal of villains, form a trio that could not fail to draw. Power received a hearty welcome in O'Flannagan and the Fairies. The other pieces were But However, A Wife for a Day, and Latin, Love, and War. Hill played admirably. His jokes tell now much better than when he first came to England, for people have become accustomed to his quaint delivery, and catch his meaning with greater ease. There is a quiet and unpretending drolleey in his look, voice, and manner, which is irresistibly ludicrous. The Queen on Tuesday evening paid a visit to this theatre. The performances were A Wife for a Day, Born for Good Luck, The Irish Lion, and Latin, Love, and War. Her Majesty seemed greatly to enjoy the acting of Power in the two pieces in which he performed.

LYCEUM.—This very elegant theatre opened for the season on Monday night, under the management of Mr. Penley, who has long been known as the successful manager of several provincial theatres. Nearly all the corps dramatique are strangers to a London audience, and until we have seen them in different characters it would be unwise to give a decided opinion as to their respective merits. The interior of the theatre has been re-decorated, and presents a lively appearance. The first piece, entitled Lady Mary Wortley Montague, or Courtship and Matrimony in 1712, is intended to "illustrate the manners of the seventeenth (or rather the eighteenth) century," and founded on one of the ludicrous adventures of the highly accomplished lady whose name it bore. The scenery and the stage accessories are creditable. The piece was loudly applauded throughout, and was followed by an amusing farce entitled Dark Events, and a new melo-drama called The Silver Crescent. We most cordially wish success to the new management.

OLYMPIC.—The attractions held out to the Easter folks consisted of Isaak Walton, a burletta, and the Garrick Fever. They are both of them of a character to keep up the reputation of the house—rapid, light, and laughter-moving. The theatre was crowded, and the applause unanimous.

ST. JAMES'S.—The great novelty here was Herrn Heirvich Schreyer and his troop of Monkeys and Dogs, Paris, Vienna, Brussels, Berlin, Hamburg, and all parts of the continent, had pronounced a most favourable judgment; and if continued peals of laughter and unqualified delight among the younger portion of the audience be, as we most willingly admit that they are, a certain test of the success of an Easter piece, then have Herrn Schreyer and his active corps been eminently successful. Haynes Bayly's burletta of the British Lion followed, and the evening's amusements concluded with Lemon Rede's farce of My First Champagne.

ASTLEY'S.—The opening novelty on Monday evening was one of those gorgeous equestrian spectacles for which this theatre has always been celebrated. It purports to represent, in a series of striking tableaux, The Victories of Edward the Black Prince, and is got up with great splendour. Van Amburgh and his lions followed. The scenes in the circle were more than usually attractive. The entertainments terminated with St. George and the Dragon.

The Coronation of Queen Victoria.—This striking and attractive performance, which has just been submitted to public notice previously to its being placed in the hands of that spirited publisher, Mr. Moon, with a view to its being elaborately engraved, is certainly the best effort of art that has yet resulted from the late accession of our lovely and youthful Queen. It represents that point of time at the Coronation when the Crown is about to be placed on the fair brow of its wearer by the Sub-Dean of Westminster. This is unquestionably the very best point of time that could have been chosen; and its deep and solemn interest has been caught and depicted with considerable success. The unity of effect obtained by the circumstance of all the persons present having their attention intently fixed on the one object of their interest and solicitude, is very striking. The numerous portraits of the most conspicuous members of our Aristocracy, which are included in this picture, and the really important historical as well as social interest which attaches to it as a whole, must claim for this work a marked attention and permanent value, under whatever form it may hereafter appear. On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday last, the fashionable world were admitted to a private view. On Wednesday, upwards of 600 visitors honoured the morning exhibition with their presence at the artist's residence in Grafton-street, and in the evening about 500, amongst whom were a party of the Lord Mayor and his friends. On Thursday the picture was conveyed to Buckingham Palace, for Her Majesty's final sitting.

Polytechnic Institution.—Our readers are aware that Colonel Pasley has rendered good service to the public by igniting small magazines of gunpowder some fathoms under water, and thus removing wrecks which obstructed in some degree the navigation of the Thames. Experiments of this nature, and upon the same principle, have just now been added to the scientific arrangements of this institution, where they are performed every day with complete success, and have not once failed in igniting the magazine, and the demolition of whatever happens to be subject to its action. The effect is perfectly novel, and very interesting, not only to persons of science but to the public generally; and, in similar cases to those above mentioned, it is likely to produce much public benefit, as the principle is simple, and any clever workman will easily comprehend how it is performed.

Model of the Battle of Waterloo.—Our attention has lately been called to a work, purporting to be "A New and Improved Model of the Battle of Waterloo." It is our desire to befriend every honest exertion, and to assist in giving publicity to anything which may be considered deserving of general notice. But, in the exhibition above alluded to, we see nothing but a base attempt to impose upon the unwary by a similarity of title, and a desire to profit by invading the well-earned reputation of a meritorious officer, whose Model of the Battle of Waterloo has attracted such universal attention. The work is so contemptible, and the attempt to mislead is so apparent, that we at first felt disposed to let it feel its own insignificance, and die from positive neglect; but fearing strangers should be entrapped to the exhibition, who, fancying they had seen the true Model of Waterloo, would depart with an unfavourable impression, we consider it our duty to give publicity to the fact that the only model commenced by order of government, and executed by Lieut. Siborn, is at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly. Of the monstrous humbug styled a "New and Improved Model," if improvement consists in a combination of all the most extravagant absurdities that can possibly be conceived, this new candidate for fame has indeed attained the very acme of perfection. The field of Waterloo, as projected by Lieut. Siborn, is correct, even to the most minute particular; and every part so truly corresponds in size, that when you once become accustomed to the scale, the eye and mind acknowledge the perfection of the work. In the "IMPROVED MODEL" we find a surface of nine feet square representing the actual field of two miles and a quarter in extent; consequently the scale selected is four feet to the mile. The whole of this plane is crammed full of figures, firing in almost actual contact. An infantry figure stands about two inches in height; thus, as compared with the field, these extraordinary men have attained the stature of 1-24th part of a mile, or the prodigious height of 220 feet! Two men of this gigantic size compose a company—a battalion may perhaps embrace a score! The spire of the village church of Planchenoit, being ten inches in height, lifts its head 1000 feet above the level of the land on which it stands. The trees attain a corresponding height, and by their bulk jostle the very hills and elevations out of their actual positions. The Forest of Hougomont (for garden, orchard, or loop-holed wall, there is none), which sheltered many battalions of the contending armies, is composed of about six trees, and these bestride the burning house. The artist is, we find, a publican, and doubtless urged to the attempted piracy by the extraordinary success of Lieut. Siborn's model. He may be well adapted for presiding at the bar, but cuts a very sorry figure in the field.

The Phantom Ship. By Captain Marryat, R.N. 3 vols. H. Colburn.

THERE is not, in the whole extensive round of popular superstition, a finer subject for a fictitious narrative of a supernatural cast, in connection with sea life, than the universally prevalent legend of "The Phantom Ship"—better known among sailors as "The Flying Dutchman;" nor could Captain Marryat by possibility have chosen one more happily adapted to the display of his varied powers, both of invention and of narrative. Moreover, the tradition is one which prevails in all countries of which sea life forms a conspicuous feature;—and this no doubt is another reason why our popular Naval novelist has chosen it as the groundwork of his new production, now before us:—for he has the satisfaction of knowing that, having obtained even more than European reputation, he is no less called upon than justified in adapting his works to as wide a range of popular associations as the limits of civilisation comprehend.

The great attraction of this work among our own countrymen will be, the new aspect in which it shows its popular author, who has hitherto confined himself to the realities of sea life, whereas, in the present instance, he fairly yields his pen to the guidance of his imagination;—still retaining over it that rein of judgment, and good sense which is one of the leading features of his literary character. Nor, in abandoning the actual truth of things, to expatiate in the inviting regions of legendary lore, does he wholly depart from his accustomed course;—for the belief in "the Flying Dutchman" is as much a living and breathing reality to a large proportion of the nautical world even of the present day, as that of any other fact that comes under the actual cognizance of their bodily senses; and as such it is as legitimate a subject for treatment in a work of this nature.

Having said that Captain Marryat has fairly and boldly taken up this singular and striking superstition, not as a superstition, but as a "true thing" (as Audrey calls poetry)—and thus having given the reader to understand generally what he is to expect in that particular, we should be doing anything but an acceptable service to all parties—author, reader, and publisher—if we were to enter into any details, even the most trifling, relative to the plan and construction of a work which will soon be in the hands of all the reading world. We shall, therefore, only say further of "The Phantom Ship," that its various characters are drawn with that boldness and decision of hand which so distinguish this popular writer;—that the fertility of invention which it displays, the unfailing flow of incident, on which the excitement of the reader so entirely depends in works of this nature, is quite equal to that shown in the best of its predecessors from the same source; that the occasional display of passion and pathos are as true to nature, and as admirably and forcibly worked out;—and finally, that there is a unity, and a consecutive flow of interest, which enchain the attention in a way and to a degree that nothing else is capable of effecting. The manner in which the beautiful vision of Amine blends with all the varied and trying fortunes of the hero of the tale, Philip Vanderdecken, and throws a halo of intellectual brightness round them all, may be adduced as a striking instance of that contrast which the practised writer now under notice so well understands.

Upon the whole "The Phantom Ship" will perhaps be pronounced the master-piece of Captain Marryat, at least among the more imaginative portion of his works; and if it has not so much of broad humour mixed up with its details as most of them have, it perhaps makes up for this in the intense interest excited by the skilful construction and uniform flow of the narrative portion of the work.

Woman Physiologically Considered as to Mind, Manners, and Marriage. By A. Walker. Bayly. This writer mistakes irreligion and indecency for grand philosophical principles. We never met with a more worthless or contemptible publication.

Mariamne; or, the Court of Herod the Great. A Romantic Poem. A Tragedy, by W. Waller, Esq. As the incidents of this tragedy occurred about twenty-nine years before Christ, we presume it was never intended for stage representation. The style is declamatory, but there are many passages which bear evidence of the good taste and genius of the author.

SERIAL PARTS.

Finden's Portraits of the Female Aristocracy of the Court of Queen Victoria. Part VI.—This is a charming number of the Female Portraits, and in all respects maintains the unrivalled character which the work has now fully established in this class of publication. It contains a charming portrait of Lady Tankerville, daughter of the Duke de Grammont, from a drawing made expressly for the work by A. E. Chalon, R. A.; a very spirited and characteristic one of Lady De Grey, by the same artist; and a third portrait (by John Hayter) that will excite peculiar attention at the present moment, as it represents the beautiful and youthful Lady Elizabeth Hay, daughter of the Marquis of Tweedale, and fiancée of the heir apparent to the name and honours of the greatest of living heroes, the Duke of Wellington.

Equestrian Sketches. By a Walking Gentleman. Part 3. M'Lean.—We have in this part portraits of Count D'Orsay, Lord Chesterfield, Sir E. Codrington, Lord Denman, and Lord Baudon. We suspect "H.B." to be the artist, for though singularly characteristic, the likenesses are not free from the pencil of the caricaturist. In the general style of the execution the plates are admirable; but we think the sketches of the men far more correct than those of the horses, which Nimrod or a Newmarket man, looking at the hind legs, would say are at fault.

The Aldine Magazine of Biography, Criticism, and the Arts. Part IV. Simpkin and Co.—Devoted to authors and artists, to books and booksellers, to literature and the fine arts, in all their bearings, and in their relations one to another and to the public, the Aldine Magazine has, with new and distinctive features, assumed a high and original position exclusively its own. The "Old Booksellers" pleasantly refreshes our memory with notices of the Lintots, Jacob Tonson, Andrew Millar, Johnson of St. Paul's Churchyard, and their extensive literary connexions. A series of the autographs of modern booksellers is an interesting novelty in its way. Amongst the more miscellaneous articles in the part before us, are some strictures on Serjeant Talfourd's Copyright Bill—an Original Letter from the Duke of Normandy to all the Sovereigns of Europe—Points of the Month—Poetry, by Miss Pardoe, and others—Criticism, Necrology, &c. Altogether, this is the most striking number we have yet seen of this periodical; to which, as not interfering with any other magazine extant, we cordially wish the success it deserves.

Heads of the People. No. 6. R. Tyas.—Another very clever number, in which are sketched, "The Family Governess," by Miss Winter; "The Midshipman," by Howard; and "The Pew-opener," by Jerrold. The two last are decidedly the best. We much regret not having space for the "Three Distinct Phases" of a Midshipman. Our young Naval friends cannot do better than obtain this sketch.

Farmer's Magazine. April.—This is the fourth number of a magazine both useful and cheap. It contains a great quantity of valuable information for agriculturists, and the illustrations are of a very superior character. The Ox, the subject of one of the plates, is admirably executed; but we have a Bull at the service of the Proprietors of the Magazine, equally worthy of representation.

SUWAROFF AND BLUCHER.

Glorious as the capture of the fortress of Ismailow was to the General and his Army, the ruthless manner in which the victory was used, cast a deep stain over the honour of both. Upwards of 30,000 men are said to have fallen in the assault, and in the carnage that ensued after the place was entered. It is related that Suwaroff gave out the following order on the evening before the attack:—"To-morrow I shall rise an hour before daylight; I shall wash, dress, and pray; I shall then crow like a cock, when the town will be stormed according to the dispositions already issued." Tales of this kind, like the one which describes him as killing, when a very young man, a sack full of the heads of vanquished Janissaries, and of laying the trophies at the feet of his Commander, must be received with more than caution. The same may be said of the Kinburn anecdote, which makes the wounded General throw himself off his horse before his fugitive troops, in order to arrest their farther flight. It is the fate of all celebrated men to have their names graced, as well as disgraced, by idle stories of this kind. Suwaroff was eccentric, and probably affected more eccentricity than really fell to his share; he also gave the dry and quaint kind of humour for which he was distinguished a pretty fair latitude, even at the expense of others; but the man who spoke and wrote, as we find him writing and speaking, could never act the absolute buffoon. He who exposed the follies and misconduct of others with such stern and unsparing severity, required to keep a guard over his own conduct, and was not likely to act the part of an ordinary mountebank. The following anecdote seems better attested. On the capture of Ismailow a splendidly caparisoned Turkish horse was brought him, which he refused, saying, that "a Cossack hackney had brought him and could carry him away." "It may not be equal to a load of fresh laurels gathered here," was the courtly observation of a by-stander. "It has carried Suwaroff and his fortunes," replied the General.

On the death of that cowardly man of blood and pleasure, Potemkin, Suwaroff succeeded for a time to the government of the Crimea, till the war of Polish succession again placed him at the head of the Army. He twice defeated Sierakowsky and Kosciusko, the Generals of the Crown, and then carried Praga, the fortified suburb of Warsaw, by assault. It is supposed that 15,000 Poles perished on this melancholy occasion, and their blood leaves a deeper stain on the character of Suwaroff and his troops than the capture of Ismailow itself, for the gallant and desperate resistance of the Turks, which, although it ought to have claimed the esteem and respect of brave adversaries, might well enough exasperate savage and ferocious victors, who had seen 10,000 of their comrades fall beneath the well-wielded scimitars of the Moslems. But at Praga there was not even this excuse; the place was ill defended, and the Russians did not lose above 500 men. It is humiliating to our nature to think that nothing but the prospect of indulging in the vilest and most infamous excesses can induce the Russian soldier to mount the breach or scaling ladder. To appease his excited thirst for blood it is not enough that vanquished foes should fall before him,—women and children must not only be murdered, but they must be martyred, mangled, and cut to pieces. And yet the Russian soldier is the most obedient and machine-like of men. What then must we think of officers who cannot prevent the recurrence of scenes that have actually inflicted a stain on humanity and on Christianity itself? Posterity will hold the fame and honour of the Commander responsible for the life of every human being sacrificed by disciplined Armies beyond the fair verge of battle; and the dark days of Ismailow and Praga have overshadowed the brows of Suwaroff with more asphodels than all the laurels gained in his many gallant fields can ever conceal.

Deeply as it is to be lamented that this eminent soldier allowed the lustre of his splendid actions to be darkly dyed with blood, the merit of great Military qualities can never be denied him. He was in a high degree brave, loyal, and disinterested;—he was active and energetic, had a quick and penetrating understanding, and always took a just and accurate view of the operations in progress. In many points he very much resembled Marshal Blucher; but he never gave proofs of that deep sagacity, foresight, and power of calculating and combining movements, for which the Prussian was distinguished. Both made up by subsequent application for their faulty education, and retained all the vigour of intellect till the last period of their lives, and both were, when more than seventy years of age, the most active Military Commanders of their time. Both affected singularity, but the affection of Suwaroff was of a lower kind, intended probably to act on the minds of an ignorant soldiery, whereas Blucher affected hussar manners, only in order to conceal before strangers what he deemed his want of polish and acquirements, although he was by no means deficient in either. Both were hasty, irritable, and of fiery tempers. Suwaroff's temper ruined the cause which his sword had so nobly supported, and ultimately brought his grey and laurel-crowned head with sorrow to the grave. Blucher's high sense of duty, on the contrary, kept his temper under control. In the hour of trial, the most passionate of mankind submitted to the vexatious fooleries of that weak vain man, Bernadotte, with the most perfect equanimity of temper, and in moments of the greatest difficulty, even in battle, and when the utmost severity might have been justified, it was his admirable and dignified conduct alone that brought the Russian Generals, Langeron and Wizingerode, back to the paths of honour and obedience.

In personal appearance also the Prussian had very much the advantage over the Muscovite. The latter was rather below the middle size, and spare of form; it was only by extreme temperance and activity that he had hardened a constitution naturally weak and delicate. His portrait, now before us, represents a keen, open, and animated face, harsh of features, but expressive of considerable humour, with a good deal of cynical indifference to human feeling;—we know it at first sight to be the face of a man of high courage and intellect, who would probably be admired in any station, though hardly certain of being beloved by any. His marriage was unhappy, but from his letters to his daughter we was evidently a kind and affectionate father.—Blucher, on the other hand, was tall and elegant, and must in early life have been extremely handsome. Even at the time of the battle of Waterloo, when he was 72 years of age, he had still what physiognomists would call a first-rate countenance; which, though stern and severe, and deeply marked by time, care, and toil, gave evidence nevertheless of the frankness, hilarity, and generous humanity for which he had been distinguished. Appearance in one of the Duke of Wellington's lately published letters has given rise to the opinion, that Blucher intended to put Napoleon to death had the latter fallen into his hands. That the old fiery hussar may have thundered out some threat of the kind is more than probable; but his well-known humanity, known indeed to every officer and soldier that served with him, prevents us from believing that he would have carried it into effect had it been in his power. Blucher was a keen patriot, and the sufferings to which his country had been reduced had made a deep impression on his heart and mind. It is necessary to have known the Prussian Army at that time—and few strangers could have known them better than the writer of these lines—to form an idea of the rooted hatred which they entertained against their former oppressors, and particularly against Napoleon, as the author of their sufferings. "It is well for you English to talk of forbearance," was their usual saying; "you have had no enemy in your country; but had you seen your native land trampled under foot, and every species of insult and indignity heaped, for years together, upon friends, kindred, and relatives, you would praise our moderation instead of being surprised at our harshness."

Both these Commanders were extremely beloved by their troops; but Suwaroff was as unpopular with the officers, particularly with those of high rank, as Blucher was cherished and esteemed. Both were celebrated for their wit, and both were authors; though, as far as we know, the Russian only was a poet. Blucher printed the journal he kept during the early campaigns of the Revolution war. The book seems to have disappeared from circulation; but, judging from extracts occasionally met with in other German works, it evidently possesses great merit. The general instructions issued by Suwaroff to his Army during the Italian campaign, are strongly characteristic of the clear head and energy of the man. Some of his orders are written in a strange doggrel kind of verse, not very intelligible. But though his poetry is as obscure as Cromwell's prose, his own prose, eminently laconic, is as clear and distinct as possible, and his general rules might, with great justice, be termed Golden Rules.—Suwaroff was living in retirement, acting the part of a good landlord, settling disputes among his neighbours and tenants, and never failing to ring the church bell long and loudly if the congregation were late in assembling, when he was called upon to take the command of the allied Army in Italy.—Monthly Chronicle.

THE CAROL OF THE CORONATION.

BY SIR LUMLEY SKEFFINGTON.

In dewery meads, the radiant rose
Triumphant holds her station,
Nor can the fancy interpose
More beautiful creation.
The morning star, enthron'd in light,
A glimpse of Heaven discovers;
Beams with a splendour mildly bright,
And wakes ten thousand lovers.

The rose, the star, we crown to-day,
In one bless'd maid combining!
These, in Victoria, well portray Refinement still refining.
Now talent, wisdom, genius, worth,
In purity are given;
Such visitation to the earth, Anticipates her Heaven.

New Monthly.

THE LATE LIEUT.-GEN. SIR HERBERT TAYLOR, G.C.B., G.C.H., &c.

We last week contradicted the statement published by our contemporaries of the demise, on the 13th ult., of this amiable man and excellent officer; and we knew, from a private letter, that his physicians on that day even entertained hopes that his valuable life would be saved. These hopes have, however, been disappointed; for on Tuesday letters reached Town for Sir Herbert's family, announcing the melancholy event as having taken place at Rome on the 20th ult.: he had been for some time in a declining state, and had recently arrived at Rome, from Florence, accompanied by his lady and daughter. He was better on his arrival, but suffered a relapse, which terminated fatally. The shock, therefore, to his numerous friends and relations has fallen upon them with increased severity.

Sir Herbert joined the British Army in Flanders, in April, 1793, as Secretary to Sir J. Murray, then Adjutant-General, and was present, as a volunteer, at the action of St. Amand, 8th May; battle of Famars, 23d; sieges of Valenciennes and Dunkirk, and at most of the actions during that campaign. The 25th March, 1794, he was appointed Cornet in the 2d Dragoon Guards; and 17th July following, Lieut. Upon the return of Sir James to England, this effect continued with the Duke of York as an Assist.-Secretary. He was present on general joining his regt. in the field as Cornet or Lieutenant at the battles on 17th, 2nd, and 26th April, near Catean; of the 10th, 17th, and 22nd May, near Tournay; and at some of the less important affairs during that campaign, and the retreat through Holland. The 6th May, 1795, he was promoted to a Troop in his regt. When H.R.H. returned to England, Capt. Taylor was appointed Secretary to the Commander of the British forces on the Continent, and continued in that situation with Lieut.-Gen. Harcourt, and Sir D. Dundas, until 16th Sept., 1795, when he returned to England in consequence of being appointed A.D.C. to the Commander-in-Chief, 1st Aug. 1795; and soon after Assist.-Secretary in H.R.H.'s office. In July, 1798, Capt. Taylor, having leave of absence from the Duke of York, attended Lord Cornwallis (appointed Lord Lieutenant) to Ireland, in the situations of Military and Private Secretary, and A.D.C. He continued with his Lordship until Feb., 1790, when he returned to England, on being appointed Private Secretary to the Duke of York; 1st Sept., 1799. He attended H.R.H. to Holland, and was present at the battles of 19th Sept., 2nd and 6th Oct. in that year. Capt. Taylor remained with Sir J. Pulteney as Secretary, until the return of the troops from N. Holland; 22nd January, 1801. He was promoted to a Majority in the 2nd Dragoon Guards; 20th Dec. following to a Lieut.-Colonelcy in the 9th W. India regt., the 15th of March, 1803, he was placed on half pay; and 26th May, 1803, appointed to a Company in the Coldstream Guards. He continued in the situation of Private Secretary and Aide-de-Camp to the Duke of York, until 13th June, 1805, when he was appointed Private Secretary to His Majesty George III. He received the rank of Col. 25th July, 1810. In March, 1812, he was appointed one of the Trustees of the King's private property, and soon after (in consequence of the Regency) Private Secretary to the Queen: 4th June, 1813, he obtained the rank of Maj.-Gen. In 1814 he was ordered on special service to Holland, and a few days after his return from the Army under Sir T. Graham, in March, 1814, he was sent on a Military mission to the Crown Prince of Sweden, to Sir T. Graham, and to the Hague.

After the death of George the Third, and the restoration of the Duke of York to the office of Commander-in-Chief, Sir Herbert, then Colonel Taylor, was appointed Adjutant-General of the Forces; here his application, urbanity, and attention to the Army were proverbial, and his levees were crowded by the respectful attendance of the most distinguished men. During the period that Sir Herbert continued to perform the duties of Adjutant-General, no man ever gave greater satisfaction to the Army in general, and no one ever left the office more universally regretted.

In December, 1818, he was appointed Master of Kneller's Hospital, and subsequently nominated a Knight Commander of the Guelphic Order; a Knight Grand Cross of the same, and a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath. Sir Herbert acted as Principal A.D.C. to George IV. and William IV., and by both was considered as a confidential friend. Sir Herbert was granted a pension of £1,000 per annum, on the civil list, with the reversion, we believe, in case of survivorship, to his lady.

As the private secretary and influential adviser of His late Majesty, during a period of the greatest excitement in the annals of our country, Sir Herbert had a most difficult duty to perform. It was known to all that His Majesty relied more upon the private advice of his experienced, calm, and deep thinking secretary, than on any other person or persons in the realm; and as Sir Herbert was, from his long and intimate association with royalty, suspected of being hostile to the revolutionary measure of Reform, he came in for his due share of suspicion and consequent vituperation. But nothing could assail his estimable private character, and the confidence of his Sovereign remained unmoved. Whatever his political bias might have been, he had the good sense to suppress and divest himself entirely of all private considerations in upholding the rights and dignity of his Sovereign, and no other man could, perhaps, have conducted William the Fourth through that trying period with so much sagacity, prudence, and forbearance, as Sir Herbert Taylor,—and to this even Earl Grey and his colleagues bore testimony when they entered upon office. During the reign of William the Fourth, so great was the reliance of His Majesty in Sir Herbert Taylor's judgment and faithful council, that he never would sign any document, unless Sir Herbert was present, or had been just consulted. He deemed to act as private secretary to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, although he was greatly pressed to do so; urging his long services, the indifferent health of Lady Taylor, and his own increasing infirmities from age, in excuse. Being permitted to withdraw, he instantly set out for the continent, with the prudent motive, as it is believed, of avoiding the suspicion of being in any way mixed up with political matters. After a short stay in Paris, Sir Herbert and Lady Taylor, who rapidly recovered her health, visited various places in Italy, and eventually fixed their residence at Pau, in the South of France, where he had built himself a very pretty villa.

Sir Herbert was born on the 29th September, 1775, and was elder brother to the Right Hon. Sir Brook Taylor, distinguished as a diplomatist, and second son of the late Rev E. Taylor, of Bifrons, in Kent, by Margaret Payler, his wife, descended from a family seated at Sutton Valence, whose ance tor was in King Henry the Seventh's household. The Taylors, originally from Whitchurch, in Shropshire, settled in Kent, in 1664, where John Taylor, Esq., purchased the beautiful estate of Bifrons, now the property of the Dowager Marchioness of Conyngham. Sir Herbert represented Windsor in Parliament from 1820 to 1829. He married Charlotte Albina, daughter of E. Disbrowe, Esq., Vice-Chamberlain to Queen Charlotte, and grand daughter of the third Earl of Buckingham, and has left issue one daughter. He was uncle to the Hon. R. Boodle Wilbraham, M.P., and to the lady of Lord Stanley. We believe that a peerage was offered to Sir Herbert Taylor, and refused. From a personal acquaintance of twenty seven years, we may add that, of all the individuals in office or power whom we have known, Sir Herbert was by far the most accessible, bland, and courteous. He enjoyed, in a pre-eminent degree, a peculiar tact in conciliating all who approached him.

East India Intelligence.

Outline of intended Operations.—The following plan of operations is that most currently credited, and is said to have been traced to the portfolio of Mr. Macnaghten:—According to these, the 2d division, or the portion of the force now in motion, and the Bombay troops, will halt, the one at Bhawulpoor, the other at Shikarpoor, pending negotiations, the object of which is to induce Dost Mahomed to evacuate his position in Cabul in favour of Shah Soojah. Should this be accomplished, the Shah and his contingent will detach themselves from us and proceed to Cabul, via Candahar. Should, on the other hand, the negotiations fail in their object, the whole Army of the Indus will move on to Shikarpoor, the 1st division from Ferozepoor, and the 2d division from Bhawulpoor, where, having formed a junction with the Bombay troops, the entire Army will forthwith enter Candahar, and commence hostilities.

While all these preparations are afloat with us, Dost Mahomed is not idle; he has, it is said, been making eager and reiterated overtures to the Persians for alliance and support, and even sought assistance from Russia. He is, we hear, likewise determined to offer opposition to us and with this view has closed the Khyar and Bolund passes—the principal ones leading from Candahar into Cabul—so strictly, that even travellers are denied a passage. We do not attach much credit to the existence of his Persian overtures, but we have no doubt he will not yield without striking a blow.—Agra Ukhbar Jan. 3.

Burmah.—Extract of a letter from Rangoon, dated 22d Dec:—

"War is fast approaching. Col. Benson is able to do nothing with King Tharrawaddie at the capital; he and his Ministers were becoming more and more insulting towards Col. Benson, and there is every reason to believe that he will be at Rangoon before ten days, and, of course, if he returns unsuccessful, war must quickly follow. The Governor of Rangoon is preparing all for war here, pulling down houses which might defend the shipping, &c, and threatening to kill and cruelly English subjects as soon as he hears of Col Benson's leaving Ava. Dreadful cruelty has been practised of late to frighten the people into submission. Seventy men, a short time ago, came down from the hills to a town called Kwan King, and raised the standard of their lawful King, Prince Pest Kaymong; they were arrested, and the most horrid tortures practised upon them to make them disown their Prince, which they refused to do, when they were cruelled on the bank of the river alongside of us. It is now said that this place is to be the seat of war, and that the King has ordered thirty thousand men to march for this place."—Madras Spectator, Jan. 3.

Much alarm appears to exist in Rangoon, under the idea that we are preparing here for some act of aggression; men and arms are said to be collecting from all quarters, and the people to be ready for a run into the jungle, with all their valuables packed into the smallest compass.

Letters from the Army of the Indus state that, in consequence of the want of rain, and absolute famine here for the last three years, the country is almost uninhabited, the remains of numerous villages are daily passed, and flocks of cattle seldom met with; grass is not procurable at any price. I do not know how the Cavalry column in front fared, but judging from the difficulty of feeding our few chargers, I should not think they will be fit for much work by the time they reached Bhawulpore. Along the banks of the Sutlege, we met with large tracts of rich cachar lands extensively cultivated. The Affghans talk with the utmost confidence, and insinuate that if we are victorious it will be more owing to our diplomacy than our arms. They seem to ridicule the idea of our putting Shah Soojah on the throne of Cabul. The country about Kassimke is highly cultivated, and the soil is a rich loam, capable of producing any kind of crops. The whole of this bank of the river appears a healthy country. In spite of the long marches, and exposure to the cold night air, the Sepoys are not more sickly than they would be in cantonments. We have suffered no casualties since we marched, and received no additions to our numbers, with the exception of Lieut. Matthews, Adj. of the Assam Local Corps, who, after a tedious journey from the very borders of China, has at length reached his corps, the 43d.

The head-quarters of H.M.'s 6th Foot, Lieut.-Col. Algeo in command, arrived at Bombay from Poona on the 17th Jan. The 15th N.I. reached Mulligaum on the 14th Jan. The 2d Grenadier reg. marched from Baroda on the 16th, and the 26th N.I. had arrived at Kaira on the 12th inst., on route to the Presidency.—Bombay, January 19.

The 37th N.I. has reached Palaveram all well. Cholera appeared in camp when they were at Oplundurpett, and continued a few days; but five followers only died of it, and the disease had entirely left the camp ten days ago.—Madras Spectator, Jan. 5.

The accounts from the Madras provinces are generally unfavourable as regards produce, and, owing to the want of rain, scarcity, if not famine, is anticipated in many districts. In the Hyderabad country the scarcity is even more distressing than in that of the Company, and a heavy loss of cattle is expected next hot season from want of forage. The accounts from Kattewar and Guzerat are most distressing, as there is every prospect of a famine in both provinces. The Committee of the Agra Relief Society have already remitted 10,000 rupees for the relief of the unfortunate inhabitants.—Madras U.S. Gazette, Jan. 4.

The principal difficulties the Army has to contend with, relate to the procuring of conveyance for the troops; 35,000 camels will be required for the transport of the combined force, and, surrounded with a hostile population, it is not easy to devise any means of procuring such a number. The drivers who have been engaged with the camels already in camp are a constant source of trouble and loss; they desert in bodies of 300 and 400 at a time, taking with them the ropes, &c., which in that country it is impossible to replace. A great part of the baggage, and a vast quantity of the public stores, is still at Vikkur. The plan of operations is, of course, still a secret; but it is highly probable that Kurachee will, in the first instance, be taken possession of, as it will furnish a good base to our line of operations. With regard to our prospects in Cabul, there is no doubt that Colonel Stoddart and Lieut. Pottinger have been obliged precipitately to quit Herat, and there is good reason to suppose that Shah Kamran has combined with Dost Mahomed to act in opposition to the British. We have not been able to trace to any authentic source the rumour which has prevailed here for some days, that a Russian General has arrived in Cabul, to lay down a plan of operations for the approaching contest. It is, however, well known, that the Russian Officer who procured Sir Alexander Burne's dismissal from that country is still there. It is now becoming but too plain that Russian intrigue has been far more deeply laid than we had been willing to admit. If, as it appears but too probable, the storm must come, we trust that the British Government will not shrink from it, but that it will enter upon the contest with an energy and firmness commensurate with the magnitude of the stake for which we are to contend.—Bombay Gazette, Jan. 16.

That a perfect reciprocity of feeling and mutual understanding might exist between the two services, the members might be selected as follows:—

To represent and guard the interest of the trading mariner, one Commander, or Lieutenant, and one Master, of the Royal Navy. To protect and represent the welfare of shipowners, one of the Senior Masters of the Trading Marine. In every case of trial the testimony of the mates and seamen, belonging to the ship to which the trial refers (except that of the apprentices) to be received in evidence. This court should be invested with power of awarding, as punishment to the mariner found guilty, a total or partial sacrifice of a portion or part of their proposed privileges (hereafter treated of in this work), together with imprisonment. Also power to dispossess or disqualify the Master or Mate for ever, or for a limited time, as it may deem fit, proportionate to the degree of their offence or excess committed. Of consequence in this case, a Master, deprived of his warrant, would not be prevented from serving as Mate; or the latter in any inferior capacity. These measures once adopted, and a consistent law of this nature put in force, on similar abuses to those described, and which would bear a resemblance in its jurisdiction to Court-Martial, we should ere long perceive a change in those records of excess and insubordination which are continually taking place in the trading marine, and the mariner would soon learn to appreciate (from benefits derived and the justice awarded him in judgment on those occasions) the due interference of his country, and the interest taken in his welfare by the officers of the Royal Navy. From the invariable and unbiassed justice ministered to him, he would not fail gradually becoming bound by principle and identified in feelings with the royal service of his country; yielding even to these inducements alone, he would view it in its true light as the legitimate service of his destiny, and become reconciled to his native country. At the same time the shipowners would have officers of skill, principle, and integrity to command their vessels; and also the underwriter would feel safe in his measures of insurance, free from preconcerted fraud, or wanton neglect. Out of the former circumstance would arise an understanding of professional interests between the Royal Navy and the Trading Marine (to accomplish which has hitherto been a perfect desideratum) of great and mutual benefit; eradicating at the same time from the latter service mischievous customs and baneful abuses, equally injurious to the nation. It ought to be observed here, while dwelling on the benefits of a "Nautical Tribunal," that officers of the Royal Navy, when called on to preside at such a court (when on half-pay), should be entitled to remuneration for such service, as also any Master of the trading marine, whether employed in active service or on shore.

A tolerably accurate idea may even now be formed of the beneficial results which would arise from the above tribunal, and the power it would possess in restraining abuses and curtailing insubordination, by drawing conclusions from the effect produced by Courts-Martial, even on trivial occasions, on the warrant and petty officers and seamen of the Royal Navy; and the awe * with which they are led to view that trial, which probably may deprive them of those benefits and that position bestowed as the reward of good conduct and zeal. Hence this proposed measure being so far exemplified, and its beneficial tendency manifested in an exalted service, why should it not prove to be equally happy in its results if placed in operation in the trading marine? Again, if all government services, or incorporate bodies, or companies, are permitted to qualify and hold responsible, their officers and servants, why should not the same be enforced in the above marine? and a power also invested in the before-mentioned tribunal to dismiss and break its officers on just grounds? Perhaps it may be advanced also, that compelling the Masters and Mates to undergo an examination before any board constituted under the immediate auspices of Government, would be an unwarrantable extension of prerogative. If such objections were produced, they must readily appear unfounded, by examples which bear a striking analogy to these circumstances: we find a physician, a surgeon, or apothecary, subject to prosecution for attempting to practice unauthorised, not so much from the innovation thus made on the members of the latter profession and pursuits, but by reason of endangering the life of subjects by precarious information or ignorance. If this be admitted (which cannot be considered irrelevant to the present case in point), how much more important ought the qualification of the Masters and Mates of ships, in whose hands are placed not only the life and property of numbers of individuals unconnected with the sea service, but also the existence and fate of 110,690 mariners, who compose at present the crews of 19,631 trading vessels of Great Britain, on which the treasure of our country so eminently depends; indeed, we have at present an example in France of the benefits of a similar system—the Marine commerce of that nation is admirable in every respect, being little inferior in organisation to its Royal Navy †.

SHEFFIELD PLATED DISH COVERS, plain and shaped, with rich silver mountings, handles, and shields for engraving armorial bearings, &c., are now submitted to inspection at JOHN COWIE'S SHOW ROOM, 11, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, warranted of Sheffield Manufacture, as J. C. can certify, from his experience of twenty-four years in the trade, that no plated articles can be relied on but those manufactured at Sheffield. Sheffield has for centuries been celebrated for the manufacture of Plated Goods and Cutlery. Soup and Sauce Tureens, and every other requisite to complete the table service.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.—FAMILIES in WANT of really good SERVANTS, of every description, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, 326, Oxford-street, corner of Regent-circus, (removed from 154, Oxford-street -established in 1809), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as domestics are waiting to be hired from Ten to five o'clock. Convenient rooms are appropriated to engagements, which prevents unnecessary trouble at home through promiscuous applications. Many persons are prejudiced against an establishment for hiring servants, but if the servants possess good characters, it must certainly be obviously absurd to suppose that they can be injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure situations. Fee for obtaining a servant, 2s. 6d.; as many as may be required in a family per annum, 14s.

DR. BAGOT'S SPECIFIC SYRUP.—This certain, safe, and pleasant remedy, which affords relief in a few hours, and a cure in a few days, in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Irritation, Pain in the Loins, Mercurial-ism, and General Debility, is warranted not to contain any copaiba, mercury, nor opium; requires no constraint nor change of diet, and may be taken without the least fear of catching cold. Prepared only by George Whiskin, No. 7, Oxford-street, London, in Bottles, 4s. and 11s., stamp included. Agent for the City, E. Johnston, No. 64, Cornhill.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lacahby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading or any other Sauce.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfumer superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits. Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop 63, Oxford-street; but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:— "Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"Dear Sir,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. Loftushouse."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance and to substitute for it an article not merely ineffacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 56, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

No period of modern history lays claim to more absorbing interest, or is susceptible of richer illustration, than that of the celebrated wars in which the great Captain of his age has shone with such distinguished lustre. To treat with success the numerous important matters essentially connected with the career of such a man, required a combined effort. This plan of co-operation has accordingly been adopted; and the entire work, thus fully prepared from exclusive as well as from open sources, is now presented to the public; and the publisher trusts that he is not too sanguine in his expectation of its proving one of the most comprehensive, interesting, and popular works of its class.

FOURTH OF THE PEOPLE'S EDITION OF

MR. STEVENSON'S familiar TREATISE on CATARACT, in 12mo., price 3s., in cloth boards.—Contents: Plain description of the nature, seat, and symptoms of Cataract, removable only by surgical expedients; fallacy and danger of trusting its treatment to ignorant pretenders, or painfully irritating nostrums; couching and extraction, the old and untractable, operations for its removal, limited to adults, and to hardened or ripe Cataracts, neither of which can be performed until after prolonged blindness and tedious preparation, nor without inflicting irreparable structural mischief, with risk of subsequent inflammation, acute suffering, destruction or permanent imperfection of the affected organ. These sad consequences, contrasted with an operation rendered applicable to Cataracts in their varying forms of dimness, greater obscurity, or total loss of sight, and at any period of life, which, by avoiding sensitive textures, and acting skilfully on the nerveless disease, produces little or no pain, while it enables nature to complete the cure in the most satisfactory manner, leaving no mark or deformity in the eye, or liability to relapse. The practice inculcated has received the concurrent and unqualified recommendation of distinguished writers and practitioners in this and other countries, and been adopted in his public and private practice to the greatest extent with the most signal success. By JOHN STEVENSON, Esq. (Conduit-street, Hanover-square), M.R.C.S., Surgeon-Oculist and Aurist to his late Majesty, &c., and to the King of the Belgians, and Lecturer on the Anatomy, Physiology, and Pathology of the Eye and Ear.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wishes it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s. 9d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 17s. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s.; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 20s.; furniture for ditto, 20s.; japanned chairs, 2s. each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each; japanned drawers, 31s. each; mahogany ditto, 41s.; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned, solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. PORTSMOUTH, April 12.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Lightning steamer arrived on Saturday to wait the orders of Vice-Adm. Sir T. Harvey. On Tuesday that officer went on board, and proceeded in her to Plymouth, to hoist his flag in the Inconstant. Pantaloon came in on Monday last from Plymouth, with some volunteers for the Navy, which have been put on board the Britannia: the Pantaloon is in harbour ready for sea. Hydra steam-frigate arrived from Sheerness on Tuesday, to endeavour to complete her crew at this port: she has obtained a few volunteers, and will no doubt get the remainder next week. Powerful cannot manage to complete. Benbow was commissioned on Wednesday by Comm. Hathorn, for Capt Stewart: she has been masted, and this day moved into dock to be overhauled, and will go out again on Monday or Tuesday. Blonde has been undocked, and will be ready for commission next week. Childers and Cho are in the basin, waiting officers. Dublin is to be taken in dock after the Benbow, and fitted for commission. Waterwitch, Snipe, and Ætna, are in the harbour, ready to go to Spithead; but there are no orders. Curlew is not quite so forward. The Victor, having had her masts taken out and cleared of stores, is to be moved up the harbour. It was fully expected the Britannia was to have been paid off on Monday, and the change of flags take place next day, but there is no certainty: it is now reported that she is to be put out of commission on the 30th; counter orders may, however, be down on Sunday; the Hon. Adm. Fleming is certainly to be here on the 16th. Rattlesnake is fitting for troops. A strong party of men of different trades are on the Royal Frederick, to get her ready for launching on 1st May; that day is fixed at present for the ceremony. Mr. Aylward, one of the foremen of the Dock-yard, has been promoted to the office of Builder's Assistant at Plymouth. The wind has been blowing hard from E.N.E. ever since last Saturday, and no vessels have arrived from the westward, although Pelican, Scout, and Pylades are daily expected. Ships in Port—Powerful at Spithead; Britannia, Victory, Benbow, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Curlew, Waterwitch, Hydra steamer, Snipe, Pantaloon, Messenger steamer; Ætna in harbour.

Sailed Pantaloon, 10, for Portsmouth. 6th.—Inconstant, 36, Capt. D. Pring, was towed from the Harbour into the Sound, by the Meteor, st.-v. Arrived the Swale, tender to the Astrea, with old stores from Falmouth, and sailed, on her return to that port, with stores for the packet service, on the 9th. The Camel, lighter, arrived with old stores from Liverpool. 8th—Arrived Racehorse, 18, Com. Henry W. Craufurd, from Vera Cruz, with despatches for this Government; everything was amicably settled between the French and Mexican Governments, and the inhabitants were daily returning to their different occupations. The Racehorse had a very fine passage, being only 28 days from Vera Cruz, which place she left on 10th March, called at the Havannah on 17th, and communicated with the Edinburgh and Cornwallis; both ships were to sail on the 18th, the former for Jamaica, the latter for Bermuda. The Pique was to proceed from Vera Cruz to Jamaica, and take on board troops for Halifax. The French flag was to be struck at the Castle 15 days after the treaty was signed, and all the ports opened; the English squadron would then proceed to Jamaica. The following changes had taken place in the squadron, viz.,—Com. Milne, of the Snake, to Command Crocodile, vice Pulkinghorne, deceased; Act.-Commander John P. Hay, of the Cornwallis, to the Snake; Richard L. Warren, of the Serpent, to be Acting Captain to Commodore Douglas; Lieut. Hon. Robert Gore, of the Charybdis, to command the Serpent; Lieut. Sir Thomas Harvey, K.C.H., who immediately hoisted his flag on board the Inconstant, 36, Capt. D. Pring, and sailed the following day for Bermuda and the West Indies; she has taken out a number of boys for the different ships on those stations. The Implacable, 74, Capt. E. Harvey, also sailed for Lisbon. A detachment of the 36th regt., consisting of 5 officers, 3 sergs., and 133 rank and file, embarked on board the Cleopatra, and she sailed the next day for New Brunswick. Arrived the Goodwill, lighter, with stores from Chatham and Portsmouth. 11th—Arrived the Gorgon steam-frigate from Pembroke, with the seamen who took the Windsor Castle to that port; she is to accompany the Tortoise coal depot to Sheerness as soon as she is ready, which will be in a few days. Sailed the Lightning steam-vessel for Woolwich, and the Meteor steam-vessel for Falmouth. 12th—It is expected the Druid, 44, will be commissioned this day or to-morrow; she is to have a complement of 290 men. Mr. James Atkins, many years master shipwright's assistant in this Dock-yard, is appointed master shipwright of Sheerness Dock-yard; he has been upwards of forty years in this establishment, and has been, during the whole of that time, a most active and zealous officer, and faithful servant of the Crown. Mr. Aylward, foreman in Portsmouth Dock-yard, is to be assistant in this Dock-yard, vice Atkins. Mr. Stocker, inspector of shipwrights in this yard, is to be acting-foreman in Sheerness Dock-yard. Toup Nicholas is appointed to the command of the Belleisle, 72, shortly to be commissioned at this port. The Royal Adelaide, 104 (flagship), Captain Thomas White (a), will be paid off on the 30th inst., Admiral Lord Amelius Beauclerk's flag will be hauled down at sunset, and she will be re-commissioned the next day by Capt. Henry Eden, and the flag of Admiral Graham Moore will be hoisted on board her, as Com.-in-Chief at this port. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Racehorse, Gorgon st.-v., and Alonzo (transport). In the Sound—Stakesby (transport).

MILFORD HAVEN, 10th April.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Capt. Whitcomb, R.M., has this week been relieved at detachment duty at Pembroke, by Capt. Palliser, and Lieut. Hadfield by Lieut. Crispin. Lieut. Budd, also, has been recalled to head-quarters at the Chatham Division, being near sea duty. It is expected on the relief taking place, which will occur in June, that the full complement of the detachment will be supplied, and the arsenal not left, as at present, to the protection of a Sergeant's guard. The Diligence, naval transport, arrived at Pembroke Yard, with timber and other stores, on the 6th inst., and the Gorgon, steamer, returned from Dublin on the 6th, where she had been for the late Lord Lieutenant's furniture, which she has now on board to take to Portsmouth. Mr. Blesly, Inspector at Pembroke, has been made Foreman at Portsmouth, in the place of John Allan, Esq., appointed Master Shipwright at Bombay. The Gorgon left Milford at half-past four, p.m., on the 9th for Plymouth.

April 9th, sailed the Hydra, steamer, from Woolwich.

Mr. J. M. Hobbs, Admiralty Office, Portsmouth, to be Chief Clerk in the new Admiralty Office at Plymouth, and Mr. Nichols to be ditto at Portsmouth.

FALMOUTH, Feb. 5.—Arrived here this morning from the Brazils, H.M.'s packet Ranger, Lieut. Turner, having sailed from Rio de Janeiro on 17th Feb. with the usual mails, and on freight 15,000*l*. H.M.'s packet Penguin, Lieut. Lace, sailed to-day for Rio, with the Brazil mail of 2d inst.; and to-morrow H.M.'s packet Tyrian, Lieut. Croker, proceeds with the Halifax mail of the 3d.

DEAL, April 7.—Arrived here this morning, H.M.'s revenue cruiser Lively, Lieut. John Benson, R.N., Commander, from a cruise; she has brought ninety-five casks of foreign spirits, crept up near the Sunk Light Vessel on 4th inst., supposed to be the cargo of the French cutter La Caroline. It is scarcely a month ago since the Lively landed here seventy-eight casks of brandy, thrown overboard from a smuggling lugger (name unknown) in the Black Deeps, that only escaped capture by crossing over a part of the sands where there was not sufficient depth of water for the Queen's cruiser to follow.

Three new steamers, on the plan of the Acheron, are to be built at Chatham, and called the Polyphemus, Ardent, and Alecto, where the Buffalo is unlocked and masted, and fitting for New Zealand; and the Terror and Erebus are preparing for the expedition to the antarctic regions—the latter will be doubled like the former.

The Profit and Loss of Newcastle has been lost, with the Captain, his wife, and 13 other souls, and were buried near Calais; but a subscription was made, and they were reinterred in the English burying-ground, and a tablet erected to their memory.

The Lightning steamer will proceed to the Mediterranean station, and her duties will devolve on the Firebrand. The former used to be attached to the Board of Green Cloth, and possesses a silver cup, presented to the Admiralty by Queen [illegible] made several trips from Woolwich down the river, on experiments to consume the smoke.

The Cyclops steamer, engines 320-horse power, will be the largest man-of-war steamer in the world.

The Parkfield and Blenheim are fitting at Deptford for convicts, the Cambrian for Ascension; the Hero, Cornwall, and Navarino for emigrants for Australia; Morning Star for the Cape and Fitzroymalee; and Asia for Bermuda; and sailed the Hindostan, to embark female convicts at Woolwich.

It is stated at Portsmouth, that Capt. Napier intends to apply to have his crew surveyed, to show the difference between sailors and seamen. See our Notice to Correspondents.

By orders recently received from the Admiralty, job-work has been partially resumed in Sheerness Dock-yard on a steamer building and the Atholl repairing. The shipwrights are permitted to earn as much as their work, when measured, entitles them to per day. Orders are also received at Sheerness that the men in ordinary are to be paid extra when fitting out men of war. This has been made general, and the pay will be as specified in the General Naval Instructions.

The Fairy has sailed from Woolwich to resume her North Sea surveys; and the Lightning steamer to embark Vice-Admiral Harvey, and convey him to Plymouth, to proceed to the West Indies.

The Egyptian convict Dr. Stewart has embarked near 200 convict youths from Chatham for Australia.

Eleven blacksmiths' apprentices are ordered to be entered at Woolwich Dock yard.

The Admiralty have contracted with Mr. Bankham, of Gravesend, to build, forthwith, 140 boats of various descriptions.

Mr. Abbinett, with his diving men and diving apparatus, has been of late most successfully employed on the wreck of the Pennsylvania packet, off the mouth of the Mersey—he has succeeded in raising 20,000*l*. worth of property; and a few days since succeeded in raising the hull of a French ship, of 400 tons, which the people of Liverpool had in vain attempted to do.

The sea equipments for the Blenheim and Hawke, 74 guns each, such as masts, spars, and sails, are ordered to be got ready without loss of time.

Larne, 20, was lying at Canton on 7th Nov., expecting to return to Madras in February.

Partridge, 10, Lieut. Morris, left the Gambia on 24th Feb. for Sierra Leone.

RE. NAVAL SCHOOL.—We are gratified to learn that drilling, so essential to youth for acquiring an erect and confident carriage, now forms a part of the discipline and exercise of the pupils of the school. The Council have appointed an experienced Drill-Serjeant to attend periodically, and put the young gentlemen through their evolutions.

VERA CRUZ, March 30th.—After the Cornwallis and Edinburgh had remained here about 14 days, they were ordered to the Havannah report says, in consequence of the French Admiral having refused to treat under an intimidating force. Before Cornwallis left, Commodore Douglas shifted his broad pennant to Madagascar, with his son, as acting Flag-Lieut., and appointing Lieut. Houston, acting Commander. The Serpent arrived here two days ago from Jamaica, from which she brings melancholy intelligence regarding the sickness and mortality which has been raging at Port Royal, Kingston, &c. The Serpent lost six men; Magnificent, six, and Tartarus, five. Serpent will sail in a few days with freight, to Barbadoes. Racehorse sailed two days ago for Tampico. Scringapatam, which was expected here, lately left Jamaica for Barbadoes, very sickly. Orders have been sent from England for Madagascar and Pique to proceed to Jamaica, thence to embark troops and convey them to Halifax. Station of the ships here.—At Sacrificios—Madagascar, Pique, Andromache, Satellite, Snake, and Serpent. At Anti Lizardo—Vestal, Rover, and Modeste.

A new 42-pounder gun has been ordered to be cast for trial, for the Naval service.

Lady Paget and family are on their voyage to England in the Cornwallis, the late flag-ship of the regretted Vice-Adm. Sir Charles Paget, the Commander-in-Chief on the station. Capt. Sir Richard Grant will return in the command of the Cornwallis.

The Hon. Capt. Edward Howard, brother to Lord Morpeth, has resigned the command of the Wolverine sloop-of-war, on that vessel being ordered from the Malta station to the Coast of Africa, to cruise after slaves. Commander Tucker has been appointed to succeed the gallant officer.—Globe.

Sir William George Legge Hoste, Bart., eldest son of the late gallant Sir William Hoste, who has just attained his majority, has been appointed an additional Lieutenant to the Princess Charlotte, 104, the flag-ship of Adm. Sir Robert Stopford, Commander-in-Chief on the Mediterranean station.

We have authority to contradict a paragraph which has appeared in several of the journals, stating that the Royal Adelaide was ordered into the Sound. It is not improbable such an occurrence may take place some time in the ensuing summer.

The Admiralty are recruiting for men in the Shetland Isles, and Lieut. Pipping has already enrolled many clever hardy young fellows there for the Navy.

The following Midshipmen passed for Lieutenants at the Naval College on Tuesday.—R. Willcox, Britannia; A. G. B. Holmes, Spitfire; A. J. Burton, Winchester; E. L. Brown; H. B. Hankey, Inconstant; J. W. Drummond, Britannia.

The Winchester and Druid have opened rendezvous for men at Portsmouth.

Fairy arrived at Harwich from [illegible], April 1 [illegible]

THE COAST-GUARD SERVICE.—The Coast-Guard station at Bembridge made seizure of a raft, with 50 tubs of spirits attached thereto, on the 23d ult. On 4th inst. the Coast-Guard pulleys of the Lulworth station picked up floating 47 half-ankers of brandy, 11 half-ankers of Geneva, and 1 flaggon. On 4th inst. the Boorsand station captured a boat and three men, with a small quantity of spirits in skins, two of these men were convicted, but the third was remanded. On 4th inst. the Tartar r.-c., Lieut. Davies, fell in and chased the Diana French smuggling vessel, and made her destroy her cargo; she was subsequently brought into port, and is still under detention; her cargo, consisting of 213 tubs, has been picked up by the boats of the Caractacus r.-c., and those of the Lulworth station. The boats of Desmond and Mary Ann, tenders to the Scout and Lively r.-c., succeeded in creeping up 94 tubs on the 5th inst. in the Swin. On 5th inst. the Coast-Guard at Porthillic, in the Falmouth district, captured a punt and 34 tubs, which a smuggling vessel had brought over during a gale of wind; on this occasion a party of smugglers assaulted and severely beat the Coast-Guard men, and succeeded in getting off with five or six tubs.

DARING AND SUCCESSFUL SMUGGLING.—[From a Correspondent.]—We have to record an instance of daring intrepidity on the part of the Cawsand smugglers. The weather on the Cornish Coast has, during the past week, been extremely boisterous; and, notwithstanding the terrific sea and wind which existed on Monday night last, two open boats belonging to Cawsand braved the storm, and after "calling up spirits from the vasty deep," they dashed through a raging surf, and safely landed their tubs near Looe, in the district commanded by Capt. Walcot, R.N., despite the vigilance and activity of that gallant officer and his recently increased force. It appears the man on the look-out near the place of landing arrived at the spot just in time to witness the departure of the smuggling-boats from the shore, and was rewarded for his hard night's vigil with only a few tub-slings left on the beach by "Will Watch" and his party.

Sir John Herschell has recently invented an instrument of measuring the intensity of light, and he has found that at the Cape of Good Hope it is twice as great as in this country.

Earl of Minto	Sir Alex. Dickson	Sir Charles Adam
Lord Melville	Sir George Cockburn	Sir Hussey Vivian
Lord Hill

Lieutenant GEORGE FIELD SOMERVILLE examined.—

Sir George Cockburn—You are aware of the objects for which this Commission is sitting. Have you any observations with regard to the Navy generally, or more particularly with regard to the class to which you belong, which you would wish to be taken into consideration?—A. More particularly with regard to the class to which I belong. Understanding that officers of each rank were to be examined, I thought it would not be right for a Lieutenant to apply himself to any other than his own particular class. I hold in my hand a memorial, signed by 636 Lieutenants, Lieutenant Somerville delivered in the memorial, and read a written statement, addressed to the Commission, which he submitted as evidence.)

Duke of Wellington—How long has the arrangement in the Navy prevailed of allowing the Admirals, and the Captains of ships-of-the-line, to choose their First Lieutenants?—A. I believe Flag Officers have always had the appointment of the Lieutenants of their own flag-ships.

Q. Always is a loose word—how many years?—A. Longer than I can recollect—I believe from the earliest ages. I believe the Flag Officers have always had the choice of the Lieutenants, but with Captains that has not been the case.

Q. How long has it been the case with Captains?—A. I think certainly not earlier than 1810 or 1811—I am quite sure it was not so when I received my promotion.

Q. Did Flag Officers choose the First Lieutenants of ships-of-the-line serving under their command?—A. Certainly not.

Q. Who chose the First Lieutenants of the ships-of-the-line serving under the several officers?—A. The Admiralty.

Q. Up to what period?—A. Always, I believe, prior to 1810 or 1811.

Duke of Richmond—Are you aware whether, in former times, every Flag Officer, Lord Hood for instance, did not nominate every Lieutenant in his ship, and fix what station he should hold in that ship?—A. I firmly believe it.—I believe that every Admiral did it.

Q. Your father served with Lord Howe?—A. He did, as First Lieutenant.

Q. Did you ever hear from your father, that the practice which then existed was prejudicial to the service?—A. Certainly not. In those days the number of Lieutenants, comparatively speaking, was very few, as you find in the Navy List, every Lieutenant had an opportunity of serving his country in some situation or another; but now there is a superabundant number of Lieutenants, and a few situations, and that makes the difficulty.

Sir Hussey Vivian—Your complaint is, that the Captains choose the First Lieutenants—is it not the interest of the Captain to have a good set of officers in his ship?—A. I do not know that it is; it may be to his interest, but it is not the practice; and I daresay Sir George Cockburn, or any other gallant Naval officer, will tell you numbers of instances where interest would prevail over the benefit of the service.

Q. Is it your opinion of the Captains of the Navy that they would not select the best men they could for their First Lieutenants?—A. It is a hard question to put to me; but I do think that man is composed of that material that he does see, or fancies he sees, more ability and talent in his near connexions, or his friends, than any body else can see.

Duke of Richmond—Might not, then, the Lords of the Admiralty see more merit in their relations than others could see?—A. No doubt of it; but if the Admiralty appointed the First Lieutenants of men-of-war, the Admiralty would have an opportunity of employing a great many more officers, because we have instances where a Lieutenant has been the First Lieutenant of a line-of-battle ship contrary to the regulations of the Admiralty, which provided that none under ten years' seniority should hold it, and there are 2,000 Lieutenants shut out of any chance of belonging to a ship, which would not be the case if the Admiralty had the power of appointing all Lieutenants, except in flag ships.

Sir George Cockburn—You have not stated when it was that you think this innovation was made, of Captains choosing their First Lieutenants. Now, I have been a Captain since 1794, and I have always chosen my First Lieutenant, all the way through the service.—A. I do not deny that officers of interest have always had an opportunity of doing so.

Q. Are you aware that it was in consequence of that permission given to a Captain to appoint his First Lieutenant, that I got Sir Thomas Hardy to be my First Lieutenant?—A. I was not aware that Sir Thomas Hardy was ever with you. I am satisfied that you, or any other officer of rank or of interest, would have officers of their choice appointed to them as Lieutenants, in private ships; but that it was not the rule I was quite satisfied, because I know many instances where Lieutenants were appointed to frigates without their Captains being consulted.

Q. Are you aware that Sir Thomas Hardy was not an Officer of interest—that, in point of fact, he had no interest whatever—A. I am aware that Sir Thomas Hardy rose entirely from his own merits.

Lord Melville—In your account of the funds which are applicable to Widows' Pensions, you stated unclaimed Pay and Prize Money as part of those funds, and you also stated that large sums had been paid out of those funds to other purposes, not connected with the Naval Service—to Windsor Castle, and other purposes, what authority have you for making that assertion?—A. I stated that it was tradition. I have associated with the Naval Service all my life—I entered the Naval Service when I was eight years old. It has been printed and published, over and over again, within the last twelve months, about the appropriation of the Widows' Fund to the furnishing of Windsor Castle.

Q. Are you sure that you are not making a mistake by confounding unclaimed prize money with the droits of the Admiralty—A. I do not know that unclaimed prize money ever formed any portion of the droits of the Admiralty.

Q. You meant to inform the Commission that it was not droit of the Admiralty, but unclaimed prize-money, that was applied to those other purposes, and not to the Widows' Fund?—A. I do not recollect that I ever spoke of the droits of Admiralty in my life, nor ever wrote upon them; but what I meant was this—that there was a fund created, at some period, for the purpose of paying Widows' Pensions, and threepence out of every pound received from Government, either for full or half-pay, was taken from them, without their permission, to form this fund, and that to it was added unclaimed prize-money, and arrears of pay; because it was quite possible for officers to die who have no family aware of the circumstances, and then there are arrears of pay, and so forth, and I always understood that that went into the fund.

Sir George Cockburn—What ground have you to assert here that any portion of that money was taken for the furnishing of Windsor Castle?—A. It has been printed, over and over again, within the last twelve months, in the Naval newspapers. I think it will be found in the Naval and Military Gazette, under the signature of "Tristram."

Q. Is that your only authority for that statement?—A. I have gone into calculations on the value of money, as applied to annuities, and I know what a sum of money ought to produce, and therefore I know very well that there must be a large sum of money somewhere, or that there ought to be.

Sir Hussey Vivian.—Your great complaint is, that promotion can only be had by patronage; and you stated, as an illustration, that your son had been seven years a Mate, and that you had applied to have him made a Lieutenant, and failed. Now, at the time you made that application, were there not many Mates in the service senior to your son?—A. So there always will be, because at each of the two last general promotions, the one that took place in 1837, and the Coronation Promotion, the senior Mates were not promoted.

Q. If your son had been made a Lieutenant, might not those who were his seniors have made the very complaint that you are making, that promotion was only to be obtained by interest?—A. I do not know that. I associate with a large body of Naval Officers of all ranks, and they, one and all, expected that my son would have been promoted, for the services rendered by myself and my family are apparent, and they are unquestionable.

Q. Was any interest ever made in order to obtain the promotion of your son? were not you prepared to resort to patronage and influence in order to obtain the promotion of your son?—A. I have used the common methods. With respect to Sir Edward Codrington, it was unsolicited on my part, because I never entered Sir Edward Codrington's Committee room in my life; but Sir Edward Codrington wrote to me, a few years ago, saying, if you will send up your son's certificates I will lay them before Lord Minto for you. I forwarded several documents to Sir George Grey at different periods—I had assisted Sir George Grey at his elections.

Q. Supposing your son to have been promoted, might not those who were his seniors have made the very complaint you are now making?—A. That may be the case; but still there are many promoted who have not served so long or so faithfully as he has served, because he has served continuously.

Sir Charles Adam.—Is not your own case liable to the very remark you made yourself, that persons are apt to see among their own friends and relations greater abilities than among others?—No doubt of it, but then there is documentary evidence—I have got in my pocket a letter from Admiral Sir Josias Rowley, and I believe that every body that knows him knows that there are very few he ever gave certificates to. It is not usual for Admirals to grant them. There is also Sir William Dillon, his last Captain, there are Admirals Brown and Hillyar, who recommend him; and therefore if officers are not to be promoted who are strongly recommended, we should know it.

Sir George Cockburn.—In what ship were you First Lieutenant?—A. I was First Lieutenant of the Nemesis frigate, in 1805.

Q. Who was Captain?—A. My father; I was appointed Second Lieutenant in that ship by his application to Lord Barham.

Q. In what other ship were you First Lieutenant?—A. I was First Lieutenant of the Ulysses, 44: there were four Captains while I held this situation, one of whom was Captain Woolcombe: then Captain Woolcombe applied to me to follow him into the Circe, but could not effect an exchange; in the West Indies he asked me to go with him, and he applied to the Admiralty to appoint me to the Circe, and I was appointed to the Circe.

Q. How long were you in the Circe?—A. I left in 1811.

Q. Have you been employed since?—A. Yes: after being home some little time, I made application to command a small vessel, and I was not considered old enough as an officer to do it; but I was appointed to the Rota, and went out to the West Indies.

Q. How long did you remain in the Rota?—A. About twelve or fifteen months.

Q. Who was Captain of the Rota?—A. My father.

Duke of Richmond.—Were you ever appointed First Lieutenant of any ship without your having been recommended to the Admiralty by the Captain?—A. Yes; I was appointed First Lieutenant of the Ulysses by the recommendation of nobody, but by the appointment of Sir Alexander Cochrane, in the West Indies, and he told me that while he remained under his command, no senior officer should be appointed above me.

Q. You were not appointed by the Admiralty, but by the Admiral?—A. By the Admiral.

Q. It appears that you have Parliamentary influence for your son, as you say that you rendered efficient services to Sir George Grey?—A. I did.

Q. But, though you have Parliamentary influence, your son did not obtain promotion at the Coronation Promotion?—A. I would rather maintain my independence; I do not look to my Parliamentary influence, so much as to keep myself clear from any matters of that sort, otherwise I should lose that little consequence which I fancy I possess in Devonport.

Q. But the fact is, that though you support the present Government, and though you rendered efficient services to one of the members of the Government, in the election at Devonport, you applied for your son to be promoted?—A. Yes, that is so.

Sir Hussey Vivian.—You complain of Captains making reports of officers serving under them, at the same time another of your complaints is, that the Admiralty do not select the officers, but that the Captains select their own officers; now, do you think that the Admiralty can, by possibility, select officers well unless they have the reports of the Captains of the officers?—A. I think that an officer should have an opportunity of seeing any report that may be made to his prejudice.

The Witness withdrew.

I request to be permitted to append the following evidence, in continuation of my answers to the questions of his Grace the Duke of Richmond. Page 20 of the Minutes of Evidence. I stated that when Admiral Sir Alexander Cochrane appointed me as First Lieutenant of the Ulysses, then under the command of the late Rear-Admiral Nesham, I was promised, by Sir Alexander, that no Lieutenant senior to me should be appointed to that ship, whilst upon the station. The following year a Lieutenant from the Intrepid, senior to me, was appointed, without the knowledge or consent of my Captain, although lying at anchor together. On my waiting on the Admiral, and reminding him of his promise, the appointment was cancelled, and a junior officer joined. On the arrival of the Ulysses at Spithead the Admiralty appointed a Lieutenant senior to me—when at the Nore, about two months afterwards, another Lieutenant, still senior to both of us, was appointed, and I became the Third Lieutenant, my Captain, the present Viscount Lake, always regretting that the Admiralty should have appointed senior Lieutenants over my head. This was my only inducement for quitting Captain Lake, i.e., the situation of a First Lieutenant of a frigate to remaining third of a 44, and from that period to the present I have invariably declared that a more humane or benevolent officer I never sailed with than was Captain the Honourable Warwick Lake.

[illegible]—Not long since we had occasion to call public attention to the conduct of the officers of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), and we feel sincere regret in being again obliged to revert to the subject. Our readers will recollect that a police report has mentioned the fact of the Hon. Capt. Pitt having been taken into custody on Wimbledon Common, he having at the time two pistols in a bag. Beyond these circumstances, nothing has yet appeared in any of the newspapers, although the whole affair has been the subject of discussion in every circle at the west end of the town. The story is this: and we shall be most happy to learn that it is exaggerated, most ready will we be to afford the parties implicated the opportunity of explanation. The story is, that Capt. Maynard, the Hon. Mr. M——, both officers in the Blues, were walking along Harley street at night, and, seeing a person with a——in his mouth, talking to a female, Capt. Maynard, turning towards him, said, "You sentimental ——." The person thus addressed instantly turned round and said, "Here is my card, give me yours." The officers of the Blues are said, we hope untruly, to have run away on the instant. The insulted man pursued, he overtook them, and was knocked down by the Hon. F. M. Again the Blues are said to have made a start, but were ultimately seized upon and taken to the station-house, where the outraged individual, insulted and assaulted, declared that he wanted only their names, and that he sought not to press any police charge against them. He obtained their names. First he sent a message to Mr. M——: they met, and in the first fire the ball went through Mr. M.'s hat. Mr. M. fired in the air, and then, in the most frank manner, apologised for the outrage that had been offered to his antagonist, assuring him "that if he had known he was a gentleman he would not have acted so towards him;" which, being interpreted, means this, that "We, the Blues, will insult every man whom we can insult with impunity; no respectable tradesman will we allow to walk the streets at night with his wife, sister, or daughter, without insulting him, but we should be very sorry indeed to insult a gentleman—that is to say, a person whom we dare not refuse to fight." What will their Colonel, Lord Hill, say to this? After the fight with the Hon. F. M——, the injured party sent a message to Capt. Maynard, and they were to have met at Wimbledon Common, on the morning that the Hon. Capt. Pitt, the second of Capt. Maynard, was arrested by the policeman. Now, one word as to the individual whom these guardsmen imagined they could insult with impunity. His name is Jennings, not a long time back he was a private soldier in the 10th Hussars; there he acquired the respect and esteem of all who knew him, and his friends, desirous of giving wider scope to his action, obtained for him a Cornetcy in Kinloch's Regiment of Lancers, in Gen. Evans's army in Spain. His conduct advanced him to a troop, and such was the gallantry of this soldier, and the accumulated testimony in his favour, that Lord Hill had, within a few days before this occurrence, given him a Cornetcy in (we think) the 15th Light Dragoons.—Observer.

Explanation.—On the evening of some day last month, Mr. Clayton Jennyns, 15th Hussars, was walking in Langham-place, when he was overtaken by a party of six gentlemen. At the time, he was neither smoking a cigar nor in conversation with a female, as it has been erroneously stated. One of the party applied to him, in passing, the epithet, "You sentimental ——," upon which Mr. Jennyns naturally grasped the arm of the aggressor, and demanded his card. This was refused, and, at the instigation of some of the rest, a blow was inflicted on the face of Mr. Jennyns. The person committing this assault was Capt. Maynard, who immediately afterwards ran away. Mr. Jennyns then applied to the Hon. F. Methuen, another of the party, for his name, by whom the request was in like manner denied, and he also struck Mr. Jennyns, not so, however, as to "knock him down." By this time the police interfered, and the offending parties were removed to the station-house. Mr. Jennyns continuing all along to express his unwillingness to prefer any charge against his assailants, if they would furnish him with their names. It was not, however, until the next day, and after an investigation at Marylebone police-office (in the course of which, although aware of Mr. Jennyns being an officer in the British service, Mr. Methuen had still declined to give his name,) that through the interference of an old and distinguished officer, a near relative of Mr. Jennyns, the names of the parties at length transpired. The necessary information having been obtained by that gentleman from Mr. Nepean, 77th reg., who had been deputed to act on the part of Mr. Methuen, the affair was gone into as regarded the latter, and terminated in an apology, which Mr. Jennyns was induced to consider satisfactory. With respect to the original aggressor, Capt. Maynard, a hostile meeting was arranged to take place between that gentleman and Mr. J., which, after some interruptions from the police, came off at Batchet, and ended to the satisfaction of both parties. Capt. Maynard receiving his adversary's fire, and subsequently firing in the air, and apologising for the [illegible] he had committed. It only remains to state, that Mr. [illegible] is a gentleman of family, and highly connected; [illegible]ving enlisted in the 10th Hussars was the result of a [illegible]thful inclination for military life, to the indulgence of [illegible] his family were at that time opposed; that after serving [illegible] months in the 10th, he was presented by Col. Kinloch with a Lieutenancy in the 1st Spanish Lancers, in which corps he obtained his troop and two Orders of Merit from the Spanish government; and that he has entered the 15th Hussars, not, as it would appear from the paragraph in the Observer, through the gratuitous act of the Comm.-in-Chief, but according to the usual modes by which English gentlemen enter the Army.

To the Editor of the Morning Chronicle.

SIR,—An anonymous and partial account of a late transaction (in which, to my regret, I figured as a principal actor) having appeared in your paper of this morning, I beg to forward the true version of that affair. No such words as "You sentimental ——" were addressed by me to Mr Jennings; but some observations which I made to my friend in passing Mr. Jennings (the expressions being, "Look, how sentimental that fellow seems!") were overheard by that gentleman, and a dispute arose thereon: the police having made their appearance during the collision I walked away to avoid being taken into custody, and not for the purpose of avoiding subsequent proceedings on the part of Mr Jennings. Further, directly I became informed of Mr. Jennings's station in society, I made every arrangement to acquaint him with my name and condition. C. H. MAYNARD, Lieutenant, Royal Horse Guards.

Windsor, April 11.

A foot-race [illegible] came off on Monday between two men named Day and Saunders, belonging to the corps. The distance, in which were still fences and a brook, was from the Cavalry Barracks at Spittal, across the country to the Hope Inn, Frogmore. All the fights were taken without touching a twig by both men, and the brook cleared in fine style, Clay proving the winner. The distance, which was about a mile, was covered a few seconds under seven minutes. A second match afterwards took place between a young man named Owen and another, both of the same regiment, to walk half a mile out, and run the same distance back; this was very much severely contested, and, after a neck-and-neck struggle, terminated in favour of Owen.

Baynes, Stipendiary Magistrate, whom, it is alleged, the prisoner took by night from her father's house to his own quarters, and having there given her a soporific, which made the young woman senseless, was enabled to complete the offence. Two females, servants of Capt. Baynes, were accessory to this outrage, having administered to the young lady's sister, who slept in the same room, a draft which rendered her insensible to the violence used in carrying off the victim, whose cries were stifled by the officer's hand on her mouth. The intruder was admitted into Capt. Baynes' house at night, after the family had retired, by the servants. After an investigation of three days, his brother officers considered Lieut. Griffith was very lucky, the Jury having returned, in the face of a very strong case in evidence, a verdict of Not Guilty.—Limerick Chronicle.

W Smith, the senior officer at the depot, who was also present on that occasion. The party sat down to dinner at two o'clock—Serjt.-Major Robinson, President After the cloth was removed, a toast was proposed—"To the memory of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of the 48th, who fell on that day"—which was drank in solemn silence—after which the health of the officers of the regt. was announced with three times three and one cheer more; and after enjoying themselves to a late hour, the party broke up "seeing more ways than one," and singing "Should auld acquaintance be forgot," &c.

57th—Major Hunt commands the 57th at Cananore, and Brev.-Maj. Donaldson is about to retire from the service. Two of the officers got married last Dec.

59th Depot—A soldier, named Michael Ward, was abducted for the purpose of initiating into the present system of manœuvre and military tactics as taught in the British Army, some of those lawless hordes with which the mountains of Tipperary are infested—barbarous beings whose element is predatory warfare. About noon on last Wednesday, as Serjeant Ellerton and Private Michael Ward, both of 59th, were on their way from Killaloe to Nenagh, they were met, at a lonely and wild part of the road, three miles from the former place, by a body of from 18 to 20 peasants, armed with a variety of rude weapons. The Sergeant and Private were ordered to "halt" by a fellow who seemed to be the captain or leader. Having obeyed the word of command, there followed a conference of some moments among the gang. The leader then stepped forward and addressed the two men in the Irish language: the Private answered him, but the Sergeant being ignorant of the vernacular, he could not comprehend either the interrogatory or the answer. The Private was then ordered to "fall in" among the wild group, and the Sergeant was warned, as he valued his life, to depart on his journey. Poor Ellerton spoke big, and remonstrated, but in vain; for a grim and ferocious-fellow, that wielded an herculean club, intimated to him in no gentle guise what would be his fate if he attempted to exercise any of his brief authority in that part of Her Most Gracious Majesty's dominions. Sergt. Ellerton, on his arrival at Nenagh, lost no time in communicating with the commanding officer of the depot, who sent Lieut. Simpson to the scene of this extraordinary occurrence, in order to learn, if possible, the fate of the soldier. The police have since been scouring the mountain fastnesses, and exploring the dreary wilds of Duharrow, but as yet (up to our going to press) without success. Ellerton and Ward were on their way home from Limerick, where the latter had been under the escort of the former, giving evidence in a case in which he was concerned.—Nenagh Guardian.

[Ward is now in gaol under charge of desertion.]

A riot took place on Monday evening between some of the townspeople of Roscrea, and a few of the soldiers of the 86th, in consequence of a drunken fellow of the name of Cole abusing and striking a soldier for not enlisting him; two or three other soldiers seeing this, and some of Cole's friends coming to his assistance, a row ensued, but the police arrived and took the principals into custody, and Capt. Rutherford, Commanding, with a couple of the guard, immediately got the soldiers into barracks, and by doing so put an end to the affair. Informations have been taken before W. Prittie and Capt. Smith, Magistrates of the county, and three of the soldiers are to prosecute Cole and two others at the Thurles Quarter Sessions.

LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR THOMAS McMAHON.

Portsmouth, March 31, 1839.

District Order.—The period having arrived which terminates Sir Thomas McMahon's command of the troops in the South West District, in consequence of his promotion to the rank of Lieut.-General, he cannot close his official intercourse with the troops now present, nor the recollection of those who preceded them on duty, without placing on the records of the district his warmest acknowledgment of the satisfaction which their conduct has given him, during the term of more than five years he has had the honour of standing at their head; and he now takes his leave, fully impressed with the approbation of their zeal and discipline, and he trusts they will believe in the earnestness of his parting wishes for their health and for their prosperity in all respects.

By Order,
D. Daly, Lt Col., Major of Brigade.

Government have purchased the barracks at Trowbridge, for 3,500*l.*, and will take possession on the 1st of May next. Shortly after the peace they were sold for 1,500*l.* by the then Government. By this transfer upwards of 40 families will have to move to other places of abode.—Wilts Gazette.

Government have it in contemplation to reduce the number of Cavalry regiments in the South-west District (Ireland) from two to one corps, fixing head-quarters at Cork, and detaching to Cahir and Limerick stations. A strong objection, however, is made to the policy of this arrangement, and the pretence of economy will not be excused for the great inconvenience that may arise. In the first instance, the discipline of a regt is materially affected by a distribution of detachments in distant quarters, and in the next place, to meet a crisis, or be made available for any public emergency or prompt service, they will not be brought together in due time to act with the desired effect. Centralization is a grand object to secure good discipline.—Limerick Chronicle.

Doctor Forrest accompanies the drafts of the 27th, 72d, and 73d, to the Cape of Good Hope.

Dr. John has succeeded Dr. Glasco as Chief of the Medical Staff to the Recruiting Service at Liverpool.

Barracks.—Capt. Hughes has entered on his duties as Barrack-Master of Galway. Capt. Ley, recently appointed Barrack-Master at Limerick, will shortly take up his quarters in the Ordnance dwelling, Upper William-st.

Dr. Glasco has succeeded Dr. Fraser, as Chief Surgeon to the Recruiting Staff in the Cork and Limerick Districts.

The issue of percussion muskets to the Army on home service will be general this year.

A detachment of recruits to the regiments at Bombay, amounting to 300 men, will embark on the 17th inst. at Gravesend, on board the Bombay, Capt. Furley, Commander—6th 140, 17th 44, 40th 116 rank and file.

The Prussian Army.—Extract of a letter from Berlin of the 3d inst.:—"We observe in the list of this year's army promotions eight Lieutenant-Generals, eleven Major-Generals, nineteen Colonels, and thirty-seven Lieutenant-Colonels. According to a recent order, army promotions will in future be made in right of merit and not of seniority. It is said that 3,500 crosses of the Order of St. George, of the 5th class, have been sent by the Emperor Nicholas, to be distributed to those who have already received the decoration of the Iron Cross."

United States Army.—During the last year the ordnance has been increased by 143 cannons for field artillery, 71 cannons for garrison service, 1,526 percussion-cannon locks, 52,700 small arms, 347 gun carriages; and for the use of the Militia, 60 cannon for field artillery, and 16,600 small arms.

A very pleasing series of Concerts commenced at the Egyptian Hall last week, and we derived much pleasure in our visit to one of them. A band of lady guitarists performed the Spanish Cachuca in a novel and pleasing manner. But our admiration was principally excited by the spirited performance of a piano-forte solo, played by Miss Geary. It was given with that vigorous touch which generally characterises the male performers, and which, in the present instance, produced an effect such as only a first-rate pianiste can accomplish. The lengthened applause that followed must have been most gratifying to the fair performer. Her sister, Miss Elizabeth Geary, possesses a carefully cultivated voice, and will no doubt become a popular concert singer. Her Italian songs are specimens of a good school, where pure taste alone, and no exaggeration, has been studied. Miss Galbreath has a fine voice, and acquitted herself creditably.

NATIONAL CORPS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I must return thanks to your correspondent Arthur for the compliments he is pleased to pay to me. I must adhere to my resolution of not entering into a controversy with an anonymous writer, or, indeed, with any writer, for my time is otherwise engaged. Arthur will, however, excuse my setting him right on a point of fact: I did not forbid the soldiers of the 50th Regiment to load at El Viña. The regiment advanced in line, with loaded arms, till close to the enemy, then opened its fire by my word of command, and that part of the line which came upon the village charged the enemy within: there was no regular charge made by the whole regiment. My brother did order his soldiers not to load previous to storming the breach at Ciudad Rodrigo; had he not done so, he would have acted as foolishly as I should have done had I prevented my regiment from loading at El Viña, which was not the case. I have the honour to be, &c. C. J. NAPIER.

THE ROYAL MARINES.

On the breast-plate is the King's Crest, surmounted by the word "Gibraltar," and under the motto "Per mare, per terram." On the colours, the "Globe," unwreathed with laurel, and the Crown and Anchor, as on the buttons.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Addresses, pamphlets, letters, as also the periodical press, having lately teemed with affairs of the Royal Navy, but been comparatively silent respecting the Royal Marines, I have deemed it but justice to that corps to request the indulgence of a portion of your valuable columns towards promulgating to the country generally the nature of this force, which, though now but 9000, was once 42,000! for unless it be on the announcement of some glorious victory, or in the immediate vicinage of a sea-port town, or near the rural locale of some retired officer connected with Marine detail, but few persons are at all aware of such an old-established, effective, and formidable body being attached to the State, and having so made known their origin (1), duty, services, and existence, I shall then state their grievances, and point out what I conceive would be a remedy for the ills complained of.

Of their Origin, &c.—The first regiment of this description of troops which were reviewed (on Putney Heath) was in the year 1684, and was styled "The Lord High Admiral of England, His Royal Highness the Duke of York and Albany's Maritime Regiment of Foot," and commanded by the Hon. Sir Chas. Littleton;—it consisted of one Colonel Commanding, one Lieut.-Colonel, one Major, nine Captains, one Captain-Lieut., eleven Lieuts., and twelve Ensigns, one Adjutant, one Quartermaster, one Chirurgeon, one Chirurgeon's Mate, and twelve companies, having yellow coats lined with red, and bearing a white standard (2) with a red cross, from the inner angles of which issued the sun's rays; it stood the third in seniority in the Line, and became shortly after "The Old Buffs"—an appellation still possessed by the present 3d reg. of Infantry, who to this day retain the buff facings. Several regiments of the same description were added, raised by the Marquess of Caermarthen, Sir Cloudesley Shovel, Lord Torrington, &c., and were variously employed until the Peace of Ryswick. On Queen Anne's ascending the throne, one of her earliest acts was to re-embody a corps of Marines, to which was attached a Chaplain (3). They were specially ordered to be employed on board Her Majesty's ships, and in or near the Royal Dock-yards, &c., and "when embarked to be allowed an equal proportion of provisions with the seamen, without any deductions from their pay for the same" (4). During her reign several independent companies were expressly to defend our West India possessions. In order to pave the way for the cordial reception of King Charles the Third, great dependence was to be placed by Sir Cloudesley Shovel in his Marines. At Barcelona, 1600 Marines were landed under the command of the Prince of Hesse, on the 19th May, 1704. On the 21st July, 1,800 men were landed at Gibraltar (5), under command of that Prince; and on the 24th, at the head of these Marines, he marched into that garrison. In October the Spaniards attempted to retake this fortress, but the Marines kept possession, though opposed to a very superior force. In April, 1706, the Marines of the fleet assisted the Earl of Peterborough in his successful attacks on Barcelona, Carthagena, Tarragona, &c.; after which they were again either disbanded or materially reduced.

In the first year of the reign of George I., as a mark of royal and the country's favour, and in proof of their value, they were restored, and subsequently incorporated with other corps of the Royal Army, and four invalided or veteran companies added, and an unattached title of General of Marines granted. In 1739-40, six Marine Volunteer regiments were embodied for America, and about this time the Colonels of Marines clothed their regiments, and recommended for commissions, and no Field Offices was embarked. In 1742, after the capture of Cuba, a plot was discovered at Port Royal, Jamaica, amongst the American troops, having for its immediate object the total destruction of the Marine garrison; but, by early discovery, and the latter's determination, the attempt was frustrated, and the island saved. In 1774, the Marines were 12,000, a bounty of 4*l.* given, and a discharge, if requested, at the end of three years. Commissions too were purchased at this time. In 1746, the ten regiments of Marines became again incorporated with the Line, and their numerical precedence commenced with the 44th reg., entitled "The First Marines," and so on to 53d inclusive; they were each 1000 rank and file, and ten companies;—and here I may remark, that although No. 44 is mentioned, most unquestionably No. 3, as before stated, is the proper seniority of the corps, it having been shown that they were grafted on the 3d regiment or Old Buffs, which latter, from having been raised from the "train-bands of the City of London" (6), have, as the corps also has, the privilege of marching through the metropolitan city of England with drums beating and colours flying, which the said city disputes, not only with every other corps, but even with the Queen's Guards going on duty to the Tower, by virtue of which ancient right "a guard of honour of Marines and Old Buffs" ought always to be near the Guildhall and Mansion House "whenever the Sovereign enters the City in state." In 1747, Admiral Anson and Warren captured five sail of the line, a frigate, and four armed ships, freighted, on account of the French East India Company, with troops and stores, and upwards of 300,000*l.* in specie, which money was escorted to the Bank of England in full Military procession by a party of the Marine captors, amidst the acclamations of the populace. It was in this year that the Marines were first placed under the orders of the Board of Admiralty. On the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, the respective rank between the sea and land officers was decreed by His Majesty, and an order issued for an exact uniformity of dress throughout the Naval service. Amongst the many reductions which now progressively took place during 1748 (7), and the ensuing year, may be remarked the total extinction of the Marine establishments, and of the officers being all placed on half pay. In 1755, in consequence of affairs relative to France with America, fifty companies of Marines were raised, and, being formed into "three divisions," were stationed at Chatham, Portsmouth, and Plymouth, "under the control of the Board of Admiralty, and an act passed for their regulation while on shore." The names of the officers were gazetted, but the sale of commissions abolished. In 1758, Mr. Pitt caused the vote of Marines to be increased to 15,000. Numerous instances of valour occurred under Admiral Hawke, Generals Amherst, Commodores Keppel and Howe, and Gen. Wolfe; and at one period of this eventful era a double complement of Marines were embarked in each ship of the fleet (8). In 1759, the first Naval General, Lieut.-General, and three Colonels were nominated to the corps, as a mark of royal approbation and distinguished honour for services performed to and by Admiral Boscawen, General, 2000*l.* a year; Sir Chas. Saunders, Lt.-Gen., 1200*l.*; Sir Piercy Brett, Bart., Colonel, Portsmouth Div., 800*l.*; Hon. Augustus Keppel, Plymouth Div., 800*l.*; and Lord Viscount Howe, Chatham Div., 800*l.* a year (9). In 1763, the corps was most impolitically reduced to about 4500. In 1771, Earl Sandwich, First Lord of the Admiralty, with a just appreciation of their merits, and a friendly disposition towards them, instituted the Colonels Commandant of Divisions, and increased the number of Field Officers. The year 1784 may be recorded as the earliest date of the seeds of the American rebellion being sown, though events slumbered for a while afterwards. Nor was it till 1774 that the Navy and Army were materially augmented. Two battalions of Marines were now, or in the following year, formed to serve in General Gage's Army at Boston, the Captains paying their own companies, as in the Line. On 17th June, 1775, the brilliant action of Bunker's Hill was fought, under Generals Gage and Howe, in which the battalions of Marines, led by the gallant Major Pitcairne, bore a distinguished share, and for which, I believe, the wreath of laurel surrounding the button was given. They greatly contributed also to the saving of Quebec. In Halifax they assisted the other troops in performance of heavy garrison duties; at this time too they had a Chaplain.—(To be concluded next week).

(1). This history is hastily selected and abridged from a work which deserves to be far better known, and should be continued to the present time—Gillispie's "History of the Marine Corps." Major Gillispie, of the Royal Marines, finished his active services at the battle of Algiers, under Lord Exmouth, in 1816, and died a few years since in Scotland on the Retired Full Pay List, as a Brevet-Major.

(2). Why is not this as a third, though original standard, as also their place (between the 3d and 4th regiments) in the Line restored to them?

(3). A Chaplain should most assuredly be appointed to the Woolwich Division, and a chapel built for their use; there being (shame on it!) no Dock-yard or Hospital Chapel at this place.

(4). This is not the case now; the deductions being made from the Marines' pay for victualling, &c.

(5). When the late King altered the uniform of the corps, he thought of inscribing on their colours and appointments most of the principal battles in which they were engaged; but on committing them to paper he found it impossible to find space for their enumeration; he, therefore, very aptly desired, as the corps had served everywhere, to place the "Globe" as its device; and, as much consequence was attached to the siege of Gibraltar, to place that word only.

(6). It happened, in the year 1746, that as a detachment of Marines was beating along Cheapside, one of the Magistrates came up to the officer, requiring him to cease the drum, as no troops were allowed to interrupt the civil repose. The Captain commanding immediately said, "Sir, we are Marines." "Oh, Sir," replied the Alderman, "I beg pardon—I did not know it. Pray continue your route as you please." This is again confirmatory of "the Marines being grafted on the Old Buffs," which were originally raised from the "train-bands" of the City of London.

(7). On 1st Sept., 1748, in the advanced guard, consisting of 100, principally Marines, which were attacked by a very superior force at or near Pondicherry, a woman fought in the ranks, of the name of Hannah Snell, a native of Worcester, who enlisted at Portsmouth in Col. Fraser's reg. of Marines, from whence she embarked on board the Swallow sloop, one of Adm. Boscawen's squadron. In this affair she behaved with distinguished courage, having fired thirty seven rounds, and received a ball in the groins which, two days afterwards, she herself extracted, and dressed the wound, eleven others in both legs, but of inferior consequence, also rendered her removal to the hospital, at Cuddalore, absolutely necessary, where she continued three months. She received a pension of 30*l.* a year, and always wore the Marine dress, and died many years after at Walsall, in Staffordshire.

(8). In 1763, a privilege was confirmed to Marine soldiers, investing them with the right of following their trades in any town of Great Britain (those having Universities excepted) after their discharge from the service.

(9). It having long since been determined on abolishing these sinecures as vacated, the only Naval Marine commissions remaining are General De Saumarez, Sir Sydney Smith, and Sir Geo. Cockburn, and these will not be renewed at the demise of those officers

CLAIMS OF THE LINE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Various articles have appeared at different times in the Naval and Military Gazette, on the subject of the claims of the different branches of the Army, and of the disadvantages under which each is supposed to labour. However true may be the adage, that "comparisons are odious," it sometimes becomes unavoidable nevertheless to enter into comparisons to a certain extent, in order that a fair judgment may be formed; and in submitting the following remarks, I trust I shall be acquitted of anything approaching to an invidious feeling towards any one particular branch of the Army, than which nothing is further from my thoughts.

My object is, to show that parts of it do enjoy certain advantages which others do not; and if this can be proved, it cannot be doubted that the impartial reader, and the candid and liberal-minded soldier, will think that it would be nothing more than common justice to place all parties on such an equal footing as to preclude the possibility of any invidious feeling existing between them. The maxim has been generally admitted as a sound and a just one, "that they who labour hardest should receive the highest rewards;" and on this I found the basis of my argument in favour of what I conceive to be a somewhat neglected portion of the Army.

Little ink and paper will suffice to show upon whom the far greater portion of colonial and of foreign garrison duties devolve, and, without entering much into detail, it would be equally easy to demonstrate on what branch of the British Army the hardest blows usually fall, as well as the drudgery, in campaigns.

Artillery has been styled "the right arm of an army;" and it is needless almost to observe, that an army is no army (a very imperfect one, at least,) without it. Not less true is it, that Infantry is the main stay, the bulwark, the rampart of an army; and very especially so of the British, as our countless battles in all quarters of the globe during the nineteenth century, and long before it, can fully attest. And this I assert with all due deference to, and respect for, the other branches who have served their country with equal gallantry and fidelity on all occasions. Let us take a cursory view of the quantum of colonial and foreign garrison duties performed by each branch.

On the services of the Horse and Foot Guards it is almost unnecessary to touch. From colonial and foreign garrison duties they have been exempt, until very recently some of the Infantry of the Guards were sent to Canada. With this exception, the services of the household troops have been confined, for nearly a quarter of a century, to London, Dublin, Windsor, and Brighton. Neither need the manifest and manifold advantages enjoyed by them over all other parts of the Army be here detailed.

The Engineers and Artillery are liable to serve in all our foreign possessions, except in India, from which they are exempt.

The Infantry of the Line serve in every quarter of the globe where we have colonies or garrisons; and out of the one hundred and three battalions of the Line, upwards of eighty are serving in the colonies; that is to say four-fifths of their number, leaving at home a depot from each battalion.

Our Cavalry force (not including the Household Troops) consists of thirteen regiments of Light Cavalry, three of Heavy Dragoons, and seven of Dragoon Guards; in all, twenty three regiments. Four of these are stationed in India, and the greater part of two regiments are now in Canada. Consequently, one fourth part only of the Cavalry is performing colonial duty, which leaves them three reliefs at home; and until the 7th Hussars and 1st [illegible] Guards were sent to Canada, one sixth [illegible] Cavalry were so employed. If it be [illegible] the Light Cavalry alone do duty in India, still the thirteen light regiments would afford two reliefs at home for those in India.

I will here make a short digression, which will no perhaps be deemed altogether irrelevant. Until the Fi Dragoon Guards were sent to Canada, the whole of colonial duty fell on the Light Cavalry. Some squad of the Carbineers accompanied the expedition, un General Whitelocke, to Buenos Ayres, upwards of thir years ago; but that will scarcely be considered colonial duty. The ice is now broken, and a regiment of Heavy Dragoons is serving in Canada. Nor is this the only change recently made in the distribution of corps for colonial duty. I allude to the intention of sending, in future, regiments of Light Infantry, and of Fusiliers, to take their turn of good and of bad foreign stations.

Is it not fair to presume that, if Canadian horses are capable of carrying Heavy Dragoons, those on which our Cavalry are mounted in India are equally so?

I know not whether any regulations now exist relative to the enlistment of men of only a certain height or weight for Light Cavalry: but I do know that I have seen hundreds and hundreds of tall, strapping fellows in our light regiments who were well adapted for Horse Grenadiers. If, then, the men of our Light and Heavy Cavalry are much of the same weight and size, (and I firmly believe such to be the case, although I may possibly err,) no cogent reason can be given why the Heavy Cavalry should not take their regular turn of duty in India, or in any other colony where their services may be required. Does the name of Heavy Dragoon or Dragoon Guards, a certain cut of the coat, or a helmet of a particular description, render this portion of our Cavalry unfit for duty in India? If a regiment embarks for that part of the world, the horses are left in England, and on its arrival it is mounted, I presume, on native horses. If any parts of the soldier's clothing or headdress are considered unsuited to the climate of India, nothing would be more easy than to dress them (during their sojourn in the East) in any costume better adapted for that country.

Having taken an active part in the duties of the outposts during many campaigns, I can declare, without fear of contradiction, that the French Dragoon regiments (by which I mean that part of their Cavalry mounted on a stouter class of horse than that of their Hussars and Chasseurs, and the men wearing brass helmets) were very frequently encountered by our people at the advanced posts. I mention this fact to prove that Napoleon's Generals (no bad judges of such matters) did not hesitate to employ their Dragoons in this manner; yet there was nearly as much difference in the appearance of them Light Cavalry and their Dragoons, as between our Light Cavalry, and our Heavy Dragoons.

I am borne out by high military authority in the opinion which I have ever entertained, that all our Cavalry should be so organised, trained, armed, and mounted, as to be enabled to perform all duties expected from outpost troops, as well as in more compact bodies, and in all parts of the globe. Cuirassiers, indeed, I have never seen at the outposts, nor have I ever heard of their being so employed, but I am fully entitled to believe what I have seen; and I may here remark, that I witnessed a charge at Waterloo, made by some squadrons of Light Cavalry (I believe of the German Legion, mounted on English horses) against a body of French Cuirassiers, which they drove back with great loss. This is proof positive (if proof be wanting) that our Light Cavalry, if properly mounted, and the horses not overweighted by the enlistment of men of too great bulk (an error which I much fear is too common in both heavy and light regiments), need not hesitate to attack any description of Continental Cavalry; and they will be at the same time fully capable of performing all descriptions of duties at the advanced posts.

No unprejudiced person will deny that this is a most desirable combination, and one which every regiment in the British Service should attain. I have been induced to digress at a much greater length than I at first intended; but my creed is, that all hands should equally put their shoulders to the wheel, both in peace and in war; and as there can be no semblance of injustice in this opinion, I have little apprehension of exciting the bile of lights or heavies.

One word more on the subject. The lance is very ill adapted for outpost duty; and I hope it will not be considered heretical to doubt how far this, as yet, untried weapon (untried by British Cavalry) will prove efficient in close encounters. Abolish it, and replace it with a good carbine or a light fusee, which, together with, a good sharp sword, will render the Dragoon (call him light or heavy, it matters not which) a much more formidable customer to his enemy in all situations. If my notions on this head are held to be sceptical, I am but one amongst the many of the same way of thinking; nor have I advanced these opinions without a due consideration of the subject. If the exploits of the Polish Lancers at Albuera are quoted (which first gave rise to the notion of introducing that weapon into our Army), it will be sufficient to observe, that the wondrous deeds performed those savages on that occasion consisted in charg r cover of a heavy storm of rain, a line (not a squ e) of Infantry, whose ranks were already shat murderous fire of grape and musketry, a ing to death without remorse many of our wo o were lying on the ground in a defenceless sta needless to say that exploits of an equally bra nature could have been quite as well and efficiently pe formed by any other description of Cavalry, had a similar opportunity offered.

But to return. As to the colonial duties which fall to the lot of the different branches, it would appear that four-fifths of the battalions of the Line are so employed, with the exception of their depots at home; and that one-fourth part of the Cavalry is now serving in the colonies, but until the recent revolt in Canada, one sixth part only was out of the United Kingdom. And here again let it be remembered that I do not include the Household Cavalry. I have no means of ascertaining what the numbers are of the Engineers and Artillery in foreign garrisons and in the colonies; but if they have a tithe only of that immense disproportion of it which falls eternally on the Line, the sooner both the Ordnance Corps are augmented twofold the better. One embarkation only for colonial duty, during a very long military life, can by any chance fall to the lot of Cavalry men, provided every regiment takes its turn, and unless they exchange from regiment to regiment; and the chances are not few, that a man may go from the rank of Cornet to that of Lieutenant-Colonel, with a moderate share only of rapidity in his different stages of promotion never see the colonies except on the map. The Ir regiment of the Line, which returns from a twenty sojourn in the East Indies, is certain to be again in a of our foreign garrisons or colonies at the termination three or four years at the utmost; and of this there exi not a shadow of doubt: it must be so, for we have n sufficient reliefs at home to render its stay in England or Ireland of longer duration.—(To be concluded next week).

MILITARY LIBRARIES.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—There are so many topics of interest connected with the welfare of the service, that notwithstanding my intention to proceed without digression, I am constrained to halt occasionally, and make observations.

The late grant for libraries has excited our best hopes and elicited most grateful feelings, although, as a matter of choice, the same sum for the erection of gymnasia would have been more acceptable; a greater number would have availed themselves of the latter, as there are more men able to leap and run than read;—but all in good time; a library is invaluable, and, as one of the greatest boons to the service, most acceptable, productive of vast benefit, as the corps who have regimental libraries can testify. But presume a certain sum, though a small one, will be re from the readers, it will, I fear, shut out the young re who, in consequence of the inefficiency of bounty, is h six to nine months in debt. But let us hope, Sir, that e long this will be altered. It was rumoured here that an ad dition of 1*l.* was expected, but I fear "the wish was father to the thought," and arose from the necessity, palpable to every one, of its adoption. Truly, Sir, does the Baron de Berenger remark, "that it is the most morbid part of the system" exercising its baneful influence "at the most critical period;" the increase of bounty (to the above extent only) would decrease crime, increase the comfort of the soldier, enabling the Captain to provide a third meal per diem—as advocated by Fiat, in No. 322—induce a love for the service, and a desire to employ his leisure hours in his reading-room or gymnasium, instead of the canteen or public-house. I could point out a corps in which, by a similar arrangement to the above, "kit-selling" is a very rare occurrence, and only committed by those characters who would sell a mansion as readily as a shirt, an estate as promptly as a pair of shoes. En passant, it would be a novel remedy to apply to those fellows afflicted with kitsellomania, if they were deprived of the remaining portion, confined to the dry-room, and ordered to attend drill or fatigue minus the article sold, barefooted or sans chemise, as the case may be.

But with regard to libraries, it is to be hoped that works on strategy will not be forgotten. There is Colonel Mitchell, on Military Tactics; Captain Jebb, on Fortifying Outposts; Major Jackson, on Military Surveying; Captain Straith, two (who, it is understood, was connected with the above work), might add to his literary renown by a contribution; and also several copies of "Field Evolutions." Let this be done, Sir, that the soldier may study the principles of his profession, to the end that, when on service, his Commanding Officer may not merely have the management of a machine, but the direction of an intelligent body, into which he may infuse a portion of his own gallant spirit, and witness his orders executed with promptitude, energy, and success. I regret exceedingly that your valued and intelligent correspondent Arthur should consider it neglect in my not seconding his efforts for the improvement of arms and accoutrements; but I respectfully submit that, having turned my attention to another important branch of the service, silence on the subject of his letters is not indifference. Where is the Baron de Berenger, his friend Adebski, Maitre D'Armes, and J. C.? Here are able and avowed allies; and although nothing can add to the force of Arthur's letter (No. 301), which you, Sir, justly remark, "is well worthy of attention at the Horse Guards," yet I hope they will by their continued efforts, and your unvarying advocacy of the interests of the service, ultimately be successful. Your remarks in No. 306, on the letter of "Cold Without," would be peculiarly applicable at the present time, as the "spring allowance" of coal is very judiciously abolished, and the troops brought up (query down) to "summer allowance," notwithstanding that the weather has been and still continues colder than at Christmas; the prevalence of the easterly wind also contributing to the comfort of the barrack or guard-room without a fire.

It is well known that the authorities have a difficult task to perform; but let "England arouse from her lethargic dream of parsimony," and, quelling "the withering shout of economy yelled forth by the brawling usurpers of ephemeral patriotism" (No. 307), turn her attention to the comfort and happiness of those who, when war desolated Europe, were styled "her gallant tars" and "brave soldiers," and who, when rapine and desolation stalked abroad, at the sacrifice of home and with the flow of their heart's blood, preserved her shores from pollution, and her domestic hearth inviolate.

CHEVRON.

THE HONOUR[illegible]

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—As a Member of the Hon. Artillery Company not but fully coincide in your admirable observations the present management, appearance, and want of discipline in this ancient corps, contained in your paper of 23d March. It has long been a source of great annoyance, and forms the ground of repeated complaints from those holding the unimportant rank of private (both officers and privates being on a perfect equality in their position in society), that sufficient attention should not be paid to the proper drilling of the men, as rigidly enforced, and as frequently exercised as in regiments of the Line, without which the Company would prove inefficient in times of public disturbance, endangering even the lives of the members themselves, and be the means of calling forth that condemnation from the public, unworthy and derogatory to the nature, character, and constitution of any volunteer corps. However strongly it may be urged by those in the Company, and as kindly and as powerfully animadverted upon, as in your admirable article already alluded to, there is a species of bigotry and intolerance prevailing in the Court of Assistants—a body subject to no control, and impervious to all reason—which prevents them from appointing a Serjeant of the Line to drill the men, and thereby rendering the Hon. Artillery Company not merely a Military body by name, dress and usage, but perfect in order, discipline, and efficiency. It is now quite time that some interference should originate from an illustrious person high in command, without whose influence all remonstrance with the Court of Assistants will prove futile and unavailing, as some of its members appear more anxious to gain admission to the Palace, as was the case at the last levee, instead of attending to the interests and contributing to the prosperity of the Company.

A MEMBER AND PRIVATE OF THE HON. ARTIL. COMP.

 Letters in type—"Maitre D'Armes;" "Crayon;" "D. on Wearing of Medals;" "Patriot;" and "One of 1200."

Capture of Paris by the Neapolitan Army.—Ferdinand II. is not quite so witty as his father, though a much greater warrior. In a recent review of his troops, given in honour of the Hereditary Grand Duke of Russia, he was directing his imperial guest's attention to the fine appearance of his soldiers. "Could I not," said he, pointing to a superb regiment which was leaving the ground, "march to Paris with such fellows?" The young Czarowitz being much at a loss for an answer, an old General, who had overheard the dialogue, coolly observed, "Sir, the Custom-house Officers, would prevent your Majesty."

To Readers and Correspondents.

We sincerely regret our inability to meet the wishes of "I. N.:" with the pressing demands on our space for papers affecting the Services, we should justly incur censure were we to devote any portion to poetical effusions having no reference thereto.

Our notice has been directed to an affair between two officers of the Household Troops, and a Cornet in an Hussar regiment. We must, however, decline making any comments on the transaction, and shall merely print the paragraphs as they have appeared in the daily papers.

We will attend next week to "A Veteran of more than 40 Years' Service."

Messrs. Dodwell and Miles affect that there is a discrepancy in our sentiments, and are consequently advertising a paragraph they got inserted in this paper some months before their compilation was published. Within a few days after their book reached us, viz. in Jan., 1838, we wrote to them our opinion of its inaccuracies, and we hold their acknowledgment. More time and space we cannot devote to a work utterly useless as a book of reference.

Thanks to "T. R." (Portsmouth), but the letter he alludes to was not addressed to us, and we are not inclined to comment upon correspondence that appears in the daily papers. His reasoning, moreover, does not apply, because the ships put in commission this week have already entered nearly as many seamen as would complete the complement of the ship in question. We predicted from the first what would come to pass, and our correspondent must, after all, admit that we are right.

Our readers will perceive, by to day's appointments, that three ships of the line have been put in commission this week, as we anticipated in our last. We shall in our next enter into a review of our present Naval position, and the amount of force that will be concentrated for the purpose of exercise and evolution, on whatever service it may be required in the course of the summer.

The report of the death of Commander Warren, H.M.S. Serpent, which has been current for this last week, is, we are glad to hear, unfounded.

Naval and Military Gazette.

We cannot be surprised that the storm so long gathering in the East should at last have burst. Had the salutary advice of honest and wise counsellors, and the warning voice often expressed in this Gazette, been attended to, in all human probability the perilous state of India had been averted. The happy condition of a people gives strong evidence of a beneficent government, and the respect paid by its allies, the fear entertained by its adversaries, pronounce it to stand on a proud and firm position; and under such a government reciprocal benefits may reasonably be expected to flow in a tranquil course.

Let us apply this touchstone to India. Are her hundred millions of subjects happy? Certainly not;—and why? because they are, and, to our knowledge, have been these 25 years, groaning under a severe land-tax, that has long been a just subject of very grievous suffering, and last December was forcibly explained by Mr. Martin at the India House. The land-tax is a sore burden, either as regards lease or sess; for how is it possible that any land proprietor can be in a contented state, when from one-half to two-thirds of the produce of the ground is claimed by Government, and the lease only renewed yearly! By this fluctuating and unjust system there is no encouragement for industry; for, whether the season be productive or the produce scanty, the grasping hand of Government claims rigid exactions, by which the benefit is destroyed that should connect the cultivator with the purchaser, for "he who separates the interest of the consumer from the interest of the grower starves the country."

Let us look to the manufacturing class,—are they flourishing? Positively not, for they have been nearly ruined since the trade was thrown open. In what situation do we behold the rich men of influence? Dissatisfied and despondent, they are by the British Government held as cyphers: they have long anxiously looked forward to the time when the influential from among them might have a voice in the Government; men whose integrity, talent, and local experience, might add their energies in legislating for their many millions of native brethren; and this measure Sir T. Munro expressed his hope he might live to see. Are we respected by our allies? Surely not: the impotent will act the Judas, while the more daring can scarcely be said to act an equivocal part; and, as for our enemies, it may be seen they defy us to combat, now that parsimony and weakness have reduced the Indian Army only to a sufficiency for peace establishment.

But now comes the question, pregnant with so much. How stands the Army, by which alone we must ever expect to maintain our vast possessions in the East? Is it as zealous and devoted as formerly? Is that main and strong link that connects India with Great Britain as firm and solid as ever? Alas, no! "Woe worth the day" that commenced the unhappy reign of misrule in 1828, when orders framed by cupidity were executed by injustice! It is true, we believe, the half-batta order has been lately abrogated, but it may be questioned whether as a tribute to justice or a boon to policy: gratitude is seldom felt where restitution is made of that which has been unfairly taken away. The time is now come when it may be asked—are we to retain India or not? If we are, attach the people of the country to us by giving them an interest in their natural soil; be kind and just to them, and degrade them not, "for a wounded spirit who can bear?" Grant them leases for a fixed time, and allow them a fair proportion of their crops.

Let the Army be conciliated, and, above all, let the strongest attachment be promoted between the soldier and his officer: for without the moral force of the latter there is no connecting band between the Government and the Army. As well might it be expected that a vessel from the Channel would find her way to China, without quadrant, chart, or compass, as that the firm cohesion of the Army could continue without the respectful attachment of the soldier to his officer. It might go a great way to bind the Indian Army to the British interests, if, in the first instance, this loudly-called-for reform in the land-tax were granted to the native soldier or his family, for in Bengal every soldier, directly or indirectly, possesses land, and this free gift of kindness would be highly appreciated. It might not, perhaps, be too much to expect, especially where there is a kind of balance of advantage between the party governing and the governed, if to those divisions of the Army very far in advance, and whose expenses must be so heavy, double full-batta to the officers and rations to the soldiers were granted, as in the ever-to-be-remembered brilliant days of Cornwallis and Wellesley, under similar circumstances. This, of course, to be granted to both armies; for being members, it may be said, of one family, fighting under one standard, as far as possible all advantages should be equalised. Such an act would gain the Indian Government, not only present golden opinions, but eventually a golden harvest; and certainly poverty cannot, with its chill breath, plead an excuse, when it may be proved that, during these last fifty years, two millions sterling have been annually sent home.

Whatever the right of conquest may urge, or present possession assert, great responsibility rests on the British nation in governing India, and the inhabitants have a right to look for justice and kindness, otherwise some foreign power will certainly prove an acceptable rival, and for ever separate us from our splendid Eastern possessions. The hour has arrived when every energy must be employed; when each treacherous neutral, and base professor of friendship should be punished, and every hostile force promptly crushed, that may be arrayed against Great Britain.

The augmentation of the regiments of Infantry in India has been published since our last Number was printed off. There is no increase of officers, as we announced from our private information. The following is the new establishment:—Serjeants and Stail-Serjeants, 56; Drummers, 18; Corporals, 41; Privates, 926; Supernumeraries, none! The number of supernumeraries will probably be determined on when the several regiments have enlisted to the new establishment. Is this to save the officers of an 11th Company?

The complaints in the letter of a correspondent, Senex, on the state of the barracks of the kingdom, appear to call for some remark. We generally allow "complaints" to have vent, provided they are in proper language and free from personalities, because we do not choose the independence of this Paper to be suspected even by the most querulous. At the same time, we should not feel ourselves justified in giving circulation to the grumblings of individuals without affording explanation, when we have the means of knowing them to be groundless; and with perfect truth we can say that such is the case with respect to the assertions in the letter under notice.

Since the control of the Barracks was transferred to the Ordnance Department, much has been done for their improvement;—we will admit that there is still something to be done, but nothing to justify the statements of Senex.

The opinions of our correspondent, in regard to the claims of married officers, are extraordinary for an old soldier. He must know that, barracks were built for the accommodation of Officers and Soldiers. To provide for married officers was not contemplated, and the admission of wives into barracks is, in fact, an indulgence. Now what would the argument of Senex lead to? He would have separate houses for every married pair, kitchen, &c. &c. Then, if they unfortunately had half-a-dozen children, he would, no doubt, have accommodation for all of them; in short, there would be no end to the public expenditure, if views such as Senex entertains were to be carried out. We despise Joseph Hume and the whole of the false economical theorists; but we must not run into the opposite extreme.

The reflections of Senex on Engineer Officers and Barrackmasters are unjustifiable, and the more so because totally unfounded.

If our correspondent will refer to the General Orders of 11th January and 5th May, 1836 (we believe we published them when first issued), he will perceive that the Ordnance Department, "anxious for the convenience and comfort of both officers and men," required Reports from all Barrackmasters and others in charge of barracks, of any alterations therein rendered expedient and necessary for the comfort of the troops; and further, that in drawing up the Reports, the Commanding Officers of Regiments and Detachments quartered in Barracks, and the General Officers commanding Stations or Districts, were to be consulted.—Should, therefore, there be ground for blame, in common justice let it fall on those who have neglected their duty.

Our friend Tristram must permit us to set him right on the subject of the pensions to the relations of deceased Army Officers. In his last letter he says that the widow, orphans, mother, and sisters, of a Captain in the Army, who had served his country ten years on parade and guard, within Great Britain and Ireland, would each receive an adequate provision from the country. A reference to the following extracts will clearly show the real state of the case, and the aggregate allowance which the family of a deceased Captain in the Army would receive under such circumstances would be seven shillings a day. The mother can never be granted a pension if the officer leave a widow, and the sister or sisters, if the wife or mother survive; and neither the mother or sister without the officer had been killed in action, or died within six months of receiving a wound, not even if he had died unmarried.

WARRANT, DATED JULY 7, 1830.

Page 10.—Pensions and Allowances to Relatives of Officers.
Widows' Special Pensions—Mothers and Sisters

Clause XXXI.—If such officer* leave no widow nor legitimate child, an annual allowance, equal to the ordinary rate of widows' pension attached to the regimental rank of the officer, may be granted to his mother, provided she be a widow, and in distressed circumstances, and was mainly dependent upon the officers for support, but if the mother shall be herself in receipt of a pension as an officer's widow, or shall have any other provision of any kind from the public, no allowance under this Regulation shall be made to her on account of her son, unless she relinquish such pension or provision. In the event of her re marrying, any allowance that may have been granted to her shall cease.

Clause XXXII.—If the officer shall have left no widow legitimate child, nor mother, but shall have left a sister or sisters—being orphans—having no parent, nor surviving brother—and having been dependent for support upon the officers,—an allowance, equal to the ordinary rate of widows' pension, may be granted to such sister, or to such sisters collectively, under extraordinary and special circumstances, to be judged by the Lords Commissioners of H.M.'s Treasury; but the allowance, in such case, shall cease when the person receiving it shall marry, or shall be in any other manner sufficiently provided for.

Clause XXXVI.—The aggregate amount of the foregoing allowances granted to the family of any officer killed in action †, including the widow's pension, if he leave one, shall in no case exceed the rates specified in the scale hereunto annexed; and in the case of officers not killed in action, shall not exceed for the family of a General Officer 300*l.* a year, or for the family of any other officer, the rate of the half-pay attached to his rank.

The recruiting for the Army has fallen off very much during the last month or six weeks, partly from the greater facility of obtaining employment at this season of the year, and partly from the recruiting parties having already enlisted a large number of young men, who, on the lowering of the standard half an inch, immediately offered themselves for the regiments in India. If it be the object of Government to complete the corps in India to the increased establishment without delay, the standard should be lowered to five feet five inches; the restriction to men not less than twenty should be removed—and the bounty should be raised to 4*l.* Without some such arrangement 3,000 men cannot be enlisted in less than five or six months.

The correspondence relative to Lord Auckland's measures fully bears out this Lordship's preparations for the defence of India. Doubt no longer can exist in this country—in India none ever existed—that Russia has long been engaged in a series of intrigues for the diminution and gradual extinction of our power in the East. She succeeded in urging Persia to assault Herat; she entered into political engagements with Dost Mahomed, and has since induced the Chief of Herat, Kamran, to expel Lieut. Pottinger and Captain Stoddard from his capital, and unite his interests with those of Dost Mahomed. Well may the Candahar Chieftains exclaim, as they did to Sir Alexander Burnes, "It is no longer an affair between one nation and another, but it is Russia and Persia against England and the Seiks." How long is this matter to rest in its present position? We conceive that the prospect is very remote of our being able to keep at peace,—indeed, by the movements in India, the contest for our Indian Empire, between Britain and Russia, may be said to have commenced. The honour of the British nation will not endure that Russian agents shall longer be suffered to tamper with the Chiefs on our Indian frontiers—and by intrigues, bribes, promises, and arms, sow sedition, or excite rebellion, in the heart of our Eastern dominions. We must be up and doing. We must meet the crisis of this political attack by counter-irritation; we must apply a blister to the Russian Empire in the Caucasian regions, and draw off the danger from the North-West Frontier of India.

A correspondent, "Justitia," has taken exception at our having stated that the Marines, as a body, are immeasurably the greatest sufferers, in point of promotion, as compared with the other branches of the Army. His letter, however, does not alter the real facts of the case, as stated by us, one iota; and we will put it to any candid man, whether it is fair argument to class the Colonels Commandant of the Ordnance, who receive 2*l.* 14*s.* 9½*d.* per diem, with the Colonels Commandant of the Marines on a daily pay of 1*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* We could place this subject in a very much stronger light, were it not that some of our friends of the Ordnance might suppose that we are unfriendly to them, whereas we are proud in being their staunch advocates, and are devotedly attached to the corps. Our abstaining from remark, however, on the present occasion would place us in the position of having made a statement which we were not enabled to substantiate, and which would convict us of a leaning to one branch of the Army, when our earnest endeavour is to serve each and all with equal fairness.

"Justitia" does not seem to be aware that the Colonels Commandant of Marines reside and perform duty at the divisional head-quarters; he must well know, however, that this is not the case in the Ordnance corps.

Does our correspondent wish to know what permanent advantage the boon, as it is called, has conferred on the Marines? We will tell him. The pay of the Colonels Commandant was reduced from 2*l.* 5*s.* per diem to 1*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* The established number of twenty-six Field Officers, which was even then in every respect considerably under the number required, either as regarded the wants of a corps 9,000 strong, or as holding out any reasonable prospect of promotion to the old Captains—was reduced to twenty-two, which includes the Colonels Commandant. A reduction of twelve from the established number of Captains constituted another portion of this so-much-talked-of boon. There cannot, then, be two opinions but that the prospect of promotion in the corps of Royal Marines has been seriously and permanently injured by this same precious boon.

That promotion throughout the service, with the exception of the Cavalry and the Foot Guards, is in a most depressed state, is a fact incontrovertibly admitted on all sides; and we hold it to be equally incontrovertible that the Marines, as a body, are immeasurably the greatest sufferers in every respect. If "Justitia" thinks otherwise, [illegible] good enough to name any single individual officer, in either of the Ordnance corps, who would, at the present moment, have been better off, either as regards rank or pay, if he had commenced his career in the Marines instead of the Ordnance! We rather opine, that he will be pretty considerably puzzled so to do.

We are inclined to think, too, that the unattached Major-Generals of the Ordnance would rather decline "Justitia's" considerate proposal of placing them on a footing with the retired officers of Marines, thereby depriving them of the prospect of coming in again as Colonels Commandant at 2*l.* 14*s.* 9½*d.* per diem. Besides, the rank of Major-General, once attained in the Marines, places an officer on the shelf for ever! Not so, however, in any other branch of the service.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—In your Gazette of March 23d, you state that, viewing the different branches separately, the Returns therein shown that the Royal Marines are immeasurably the greatest sufferers; and in that of the 30th say, we always "begin at the beginning," by establishing our basis on the last commission, which, according to our judgment, is the only correct line of attack or defence.

I beg, therefore, to point out a little incorrectness in the Tables given in the Gazette of 23d, in classing the Colonels Commandant of Marines along with the Colonels of Artillery and Engineers, and thereby making the Colonels of Marines appear as the oldest officers; whereas, by the accompanying Table, it will be seen that the Colonels Commandant of Marines are very much younger officers than those of either of the Ordnance Corps; and of the Colonels, but one of the Marines, of 1793, then before the other three, come fifteen Colonels of Artillery.

That the Colonels Commandant of the Royal Marines should be so much younger officers than those of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers is easily accounted for, by four of their General Officers (whose first commissions would probably be about the same date as those of the Commandants of the Ordnance Corps) and five Colonels having been allowed to retire as Colonels Commandant, while there has not been a single officer of either Ordnance Corps given retirement as such. I trust, therefore, that the Military Commission will begin at the beginning, and that it will appear to them, from the preceding (should it ever meet their eye), that, as to Colonels Commandant, and officers retired as such, the Marines have immeasurably the advantage over the Ordnance Corps, and also that the Unattached Major-Generals of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers are, for their length of service, by far the greatest sufferers in the non-purchasing corps, and that they will meet with due consideration, in order to place them on somewhat of a similar footing as to Colonels Commandant, and retirements as such, with the Royal Marines, so highly and partially favoured in this respect. JUSTITIA.

We fear that the urgent demand for European troops in India, and the utter destitution of any available force to meet our difficulties in America, will operate injuriously to the reliefs of regiments now abroad. From all we can learn, it would appear that the 16th and 54th Regiments must be detained in India, and yet these unfortunate corps left their native land in 1819. In this we see another reason for pressing the earlier period of relief, as a fixed arrangement, on the notice of the public. So long as the regular period of Indian service is made to be twenty years, on the least disturbance of the roster by a petty war, or by more important military movements, like those now going on in India, a regiment, which is in its 20th year of its foreign service, may be detained three or four years longer than the usual period. Now, had the fixed time of Indian service been, as it is in every other foreign station, only ten years, the additional years would at most make the service far less than it has ever yet been under the most favourable circumstances. The 20th, 38th, 45th, and 48th, returned after a service of little more than eighteen years each—but almost every other regiment, which came home from India during the last twenty years, returned after a service varying from twenty to twenty-five years! The case of the regiments in India is the hardest among the generally hard lots which befall "the hardest-worked Army in the world."

CAPTAINS are required to make periodical reports of the sailing and other qualities of the ships under their command, and printed forms are furnished to be filled up and signed by the Commander, Master, and Carpenter.

Amongst other items, they are to specify how many degrees the vessel heels under different circumstances, and also the extent of rolling motion; but they possess very imperfect means of determining this,—nothing in fact but the common pendulum plummet—the action of which is always more or less interrupted by the pitching motion, the jars, concussions, &c., and, moreover, it requires to be constantly watched; and, after all, the result given depends in a great measure upon the care and attention that has been bestowed in taking the mean of the vibration, and allowing for the swing of the plummet when set in motion.

So much has this defect been felt, that several ingenious mechanics have been long since engaged in the endeavour to remedy it, by designing an instrument capable of determining the amount of each roll, or of the varying inclination more exactly, and attempts have been made with the spirit-level, the balance, and the pendulum; also with a combination of these, with racks, wheels, and pinions, but hitherto without success.

Conceiving that the matter was to be effected, and knowing how valuable a perfect instrument would be, not only for the aforementioned purpose, but also for purposes of gunnery practice, we have more than once stimulated our Naval readers to the attempt; and we are, therefore, the more gratified to learn that it has been accomplished, with complete success, by Mr. A. G. Edye, a Mate now serving in the African, under Captain Beechey, surveying the Irish Channel.

The instrument we have seen, it is compact, and in our opinion perfect. We are glad to find that it has been favourably reported on by Sir F. Maitland, and the Captains of the Edinburgh, Inconstant, Pique, and other ships, on board of which it has been tested for some time.

The Society of Arts have voted Mr Edye their medal, and as we perceive that he passed his examination for Lieutenant so far back as 1832, and has been ever since employed, we doubt not but that we shall soon have the pleasure of announcing the promotion of this one of the meritorious candidates on the First Lord's list. When mechanical talent and nautical skill are found united, and backed with the highest testimonials for professional ability, activity, and good conduct, they are sure passports to preferment, whatever may be said about the exercise of patronage. When this combination of talent is apparent, it is, moreover, good policy to cherish and encourage it, because we believe the greatest improvements that are to be effected in that complicated machine, a ship, and more especially a steam-ship, are destined to be the work of Naval Officers, who have the best opportunities for meditating over what is required to be done, provided they possess the scientific ability to conceive rightly.

The Court.

Her Majesty and the Duchess of Kent continue in good health. Sir James Clarke attends Her Majesty merely on account of Her Majesty having experienced a weakness of late in her feet and ancles. On Saturday Her Majesty took equestrian exercise in the riding-school. Vice-Admiral Sir Thomas Harvey was presented to the Queen to take leave, at an audience, by the Earl of Minto. On Sunday the Queen attended Divine service in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. On Monday evening Her Majesty honoured Drury Lane Theatre and on Tuesday the Italian Opera House, with her presence. On Wednesday the Queen held a Court and Privy Council. The Queen took equestrian exercise in the riding-school on this day and yesterday.

A Chapter of the Order of the Garter will be held at St. James's Palace on Wednesday next, after the Levee, at which the Duke of Cleveland will be elected a Knight of the Order, in the room of the late Duke of Buckingham.

Her Majesty held her first Drawing-Room this season on Thursday afternoon at St. James's Palace. The following Naval and Military Officers were present —

The Knights of the several orders are to appear in their Collars at Her Majesty's Drawing-Rooms on Thursday, April 25, being a Collar-day, on Thursday, May 23, being for the celebration of Her Majesty's Birth-day, and on Thursday, June 20, being a Collar-day.

Her Majesty will hold Levees at St. James's Palace on Wednesdays April 17, April 24, and May 8.

On Monday despatches, dated 29th March, were received at the Colonial Department from Major-Gen. Sir A. Woodford, Governor of Gibraltar, from Maj.-Gen. Sir H. Bouverie, Governor of Malta; from Lieutenant-Gen. Sir H. Douglas, the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, and from Sir W. Nicolay, Governor of the Mauritius. On Tuesday despatches, dated Dec. 14, were received at the India Board from Lord Auckland, Governor-General of India; also dated Oct. 12, at the Colonial Department, from the Governor of New South Wales; from Maj.-Gen. Sir G. T. Napier, Governor of the Cape of Good Hope; and from Sir G. Gipps, Governor of New South Wales. On Thursday despatches were received at the Colonial department, from Col. Sir G. Arthur, the Lieut.-Gov. of U. Canada.

The Queen has been pleased to grant the dignity of Viscount to the Right Hon. John Baron Ponsonby, G.C.B., Her Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at the Sublime Ottoman Porte, by the title of Viscount Ponsonby, of Imokilly, in the county of Cork. Also the dignity of a Baron to the Right Hon. Sir Frederick James Lamb, G.C.B., Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at the Court of Vienna, by the title of Baron Beauvale, of Beauvale, in the county of Nottingham.

The Queen has appointed Charles Cunningham, Esq., to be Lieut.-Governor of the Island of St. Christopher; and Francis Cyric Sheridan, Esq., to be Secretary and Clerk of the Council and Remembrancer of the Court of Exchequer in the Island of Barbadoes.

The Queen expressly desired that Lady Flora Hastings and Miss Davys should receive the Sacrament with Her Majesty on Easter Sunday. This fact requires no comment!

The mortal remains of Lieutenant-General Sir Herbert Taylor, G.C.B., after being embalmed at Rome, will be conveyed to England for interment in the Hospital of St. Katherine's, in the Regent's Park. Sir Herbert was attended in his last moments by his intimate personal friend, the Rev. J. R. Wood, Chaplain to the Queen Dowager, who proceeded from Malta to Rome to visit the gallant General on learning his dangerous illness.

Miss E. Blair, daughter of the late Captain Blair, residing at 39, Welbeck-street, Cavendish-square, was thrown from her horse while riding in Hyde Park on Monday, and received a severe fracture of the skull. She is since dead.

The Duke of Richmond, who has been suffering from indisposition, principally a very severe attack of lumbago, is, we are most happy to find, fast recovering.

The Marquis of Douro and his noble bride elect intend to pass the summer in Germany. The Marquis is 32, Lady Elizabeth was 18 in Sept. last.

A report is current in the Brussels circles of ton that the Queen will pay a visit to the King and Queen of the Belgians, in the course of the summer.

Mr. Shiel has resigned the office he held as Commissioner for Greenwich Hospital, being determined that his vote on the policy of the Irish Government shall be unfettered.—Globe. Mr. Shiel, if the present Ministry stand, is to be appointed Master of the Mint.

The approaching visit of the Hereditary Grand Duke of Russia is said to have in view matrimonial intentions towards the Princess Augusta of Cambridge. The rumour appears more probable, from the disappointment lately experienced by his Highness at the Court of Vienna.

St. Ann's Society Schools.—We are glad to find the Duke of Cambridge following the steps of the late Dukes of York and Kent, in personally advocating at public meetings the best of our institutions. On Saturday next H.R.H. presides at the anniversary dinner of the St. Ann's Society Schools—an establishment that does honour to the citizens of London, and the nobility who are its patrons.

On Thursday, at Marylebone Police-office, Captain Marryat, of Grove House, Bayswater, was fined 1s. for having assaulted Mr. Walker, living at No. 34, Caroline-place. Soon after the termination of the case, Mr. Walker, who was much exasperated at the small amount of penalty inflicted, hastened to the house of Captain M., whom he assailed with the most abusive and threatening language, and as he caused a great mob to assemble, he was taken into custody, and ordered to find bail for his future good behaviour; in default of which he was, after violently resisting the officers, conveyed to Clerkenwell Prison.

ITALIAN OPERA.—On Tuesday night Grisi, Rubini, Lablache, and Tamburini, made their first appearance this season in the opera of I Puritani. Each on coming forward was received with enthusiastic applause, and with that evident good feeling, as if the audience were glad to see their old friends. All were in excellent voice, and the opera went off brilliantly, every piece being heard with approbation, and the drop-scene always descending amid loud plaudits. Grisi's polacca, "Son Vergine," the never-to-be-forgotten duet between Lablache and Tamburini, and Rubini's little adagio in the third act, "Ella è fremante," were universally encored. The house was full to the remotest corners, and the royal box was occupied by Her Majesty and the Duchess of Kent. M. Laporte has engaged Signor Mario, alias the Count de Candia, son of the ex-governor of Nice, who will make his début in the course of the ensuing month.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 8.—Lord J. RUSSELL, referring to the motion of which he had given notice for Monday next, said that it was his intention then to move a resolution declaring the expediency of continuing those measures of the executive which had effectually tended to support the administration of the law in Ireland. He afterwards said that he wished the motion to have precedence of orders of the day.—Lord PALMERSTON said, in answer to Sir W. Molesworth's inquiry, that there was every disposition, on the part of both Governments, to agree to a joint commission to adjust the boundary question.

TUESDAY, April 9.—Sir R. PEEL gave notice that he should move "an amendment" to Lord J. Russell's motion (regarding the government of Ireland) on Monday next, and that he would state the express terms of it on Thursday, or at latest, on Friday. —On motion of Sir F. Burdett, copies of any papers and correspondence that might exist relative to the appointment, during Lord Normanby's administration, of Mr. O'Connell to be a justice of the peace for Kerry, or any other county in Ireland, were ordered to be laid before the House.—Mr. LABOUCHERE moved for leave to bring in a bill for the suspension of the existing government of the island of Jamaica, and to make provision for the administration of [illegible] affairs during such suspension. He admitted that it was [illegible] of ordinary [illegible] but he contended that the [illegible] ordinary [illegible] justified the proposed temporary abrogation of its constitution—proceedings established in the papers laid before the House, and by every journal that had reached this country. The motion led to an extended discussion, in which Mr. Goulburn, Mr. Godson, Sir G. Grey, Sir R. Peel, Dr. Lushington, &c., took part, but the introduction of the bill was not distinctly opposed by any one, although Sir R. PEEL said that more powerful evidence must be adduced before he could agree to so strong a measure as that now contemplated.—Mr. PALMER moved for a Select Committee to inquire into shipwrecks of timber ships, and the loss of life attendant thereon. His object was to reduce in some degree the loss of ships, and the extreme suffering of the crews. By the returns at Lloyd's in 1834 there were four ships of this description wrecked on the coast, and seventeen lost at sea; in 1835, there were five wrecked on the coast, and thirty-four lost at sea, of sixteen of which no account could be learned, in 1836, there were 22 wrecked on the coast, and 44 at sea, of 16 of which no account could be had of the crews; in 1837, there were seven wrecked on shore, 23 at sea, of fifteen of which no account could be ascertained; in 1838, there were 10 on the coast, 45 at sea, of 26 of which no account could be had of the crews.—Alderman THOMPSON thought the committee ought to inquire into the subsject of deck-loading.—Mr. WARBURTON thought the investigation ought not to be confined to one class of ships. It was because we forced a trade in which old ships alone were used that such losses had been incurred.—The motion was agreed to.

FRIDAY, April 12.—Sir R. PEEL read the amendment which he proposes to move on Lord J. Russell's motion next Monday: "Resolved, that on the 13th of March a motion was made in this House for the production of various documents connected with the state of Ireland, in respect to crime and outrage, including communications made to the Irish Government relating to offences connected with Ribandism; and all memorials, resolutions, and addresses, forwarded to the Irish Government by magistrates or other official persons, in respect to crime and outrages committed in Ireland, and the answers thereto. That the period included within the Returns so called for extends from the commencement of the year 1835 to the present time, and that the motion made for the production of them was assented to by this House, no opposition having been offered on the part of Her Majesty's Government. That on the 21st day of March, the House of Lords appointed a select committee 'to inquire into the State of Ireland since the year 1835, in respect to crime and outrage, which have rendered life and property insecure in that part of the empire.' That in consequence of the appointment of such committee by the House of Lords, it has been proposed, that this House should resolve, 'That it is the opinion of this House that it is expedient to persevere in those principles which have guided the Executive Government of Ireland of late years, and which have tended to the effectual administration of the law and the general improvement of that part of the United Kingdom.' That it appears to this House that the appointment of a committee by the House of Lords, under the circumstances, and for the purpose above mentioned, does not justify Her Majesty's Ministers in calling on this House, without previous inquiry, or even the production of the information which this House has required, to make a declaration of opinion with respect to one branch of the public policy of the Executive Government, still less a declaration of opinion which is neither explicit as to the principles which it professes to approve, nor definite as to the period to which it refers, and that it is not fitting that this House should adopt a proceeding which has the appearance of calling in question the undoubted right of the House of Lords to inquire into the state of Ireland, in respect to crime and outrage, more especially when the exercise of that right by the House of Lords does not interfere with any previous proceeding of the House of Commons, nor with the progress of any legislative measure assented to by the House of Commons, or at present under its consideration."—Mr. DRUMMOND also gave notice of an amendment, to the effect that further reform was necessary.

Seizure of the Pilot on the Express packet.—Lord PALMERSTON said that he had a communication to make which he entertained no doubt would be highly satisfactory to that House;—it related to the seizure, by command of a French Naval Officer, of a Pilot who was on board the Express packet, in the Gulf of Mexico, and who at the time was engaged in piloting that vessel, she being a British ship. The statement of the officer had been received, and he (Lord P.) had likewise been in communication on the subject with Count Sebastiani. An explanation and apology had been offered, honourable to the Government by which it was given, and likewise to that by which it was to be received. The explanation had been given without any demand having been made by the British Government; it was therefore the more creditable to the French Government, and more acceptable to the British. Count Sebastiani said that he was charged by the King, his master, to make known to the British Government the deep regret which His Majesty felt at the removal of a Mexican pilot from the Express packet, and he stated, that when Admiral Baudin directed that measure, he was not aware that the vessel belonged to the British Marine, it was therefore the result of a mistake, and in no degree arose from any want of respect for the English flag. The affair was sincerely deplored by the French Government, as well as by the Commandant of the French squadron, and the strictest instruction had been given for the most vigilant attention, in order to prevent a similar occurrence. Count Sebastiani added, that he trusted this explanation would be satisfactory to the British Government, and that nothing would disturb the union which both Governments had so much at heart to maintain between the two countries [hear, hear].

The following Returns have been moved for by Mr. Hume:—1. The number of corporal punishments inflicted in the Royal Navy in each of the years 1837 and 1838, both inclusive (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 371, of 1838,) 2. An abstract of the number of men belonging to the Royal Marines who in 1838 have suffered corporal punishment or imprisonment; showing the nature of offences, in classes, and the number in each class; and showing the greatest number and the smallest number of lashes. Also the longest and shortest period of confinement awarded as punishment to each person, and the average period of confinement for each class of offence (in continuation of Parliamentary Paper, No. 584, of 1838). Also for an abstract of the number of soldiers belonging to the Royal Artillery in Great Britain and Ireland, who, between the 1st day of January and the 31st day of December, 1838, have suffered corporal punishment or imprisonment, &c.—2. Similar returns respecting soldiers in Great Britain, as well as the Colonies.

It is understood that should Sir R. Peel's party come into place, there will be a general election. It is also reported that Sir James Graham is to be put forward as Speaker.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The editors of the National, of the Europe, and of the Echo Français, were brought before the Court of Assizes, Paris, on Wednesday last, charged with preaching disobedience to the laws, and with exciting the soldiery to insubordination and revolt, in an article on "the Army," published originally in the National, and copied into the other papers. The jury, after deliberating for 20 minutes, returned a verdict of "Not guilty."

AUSTRIA.—The old custom of washing the feet of twelve poor persons, in commemoration of Christ's washing the feet of the twelve Apostles, was performed on Good Friday by the Emperor and Empress. The former washed the feet of twelve men, and the latter of twelve women, each of whom had a purse containing thirty pieces of silver given them.

PORTUGAL.—The Ministry have been beaten on the question of the amount of men to form the effective force of the army, and have tendered their resignations. No new Ministry has yet been formed, and there will be great difficulty in forming one, as no man possessed of any fame on financial matters likes to venture his reputation by taking the onerous place of Minister of Finance.

RUSSIA.—Prince Paskewitsch is to leave Warsaw in May next for Teflis, to take the command of the Caucasian army. This measure is of the highest importance, and shows that the Emperor intends at last to realise his ambitious projects in the east. Several of the most distinguished Generals of the Russian army, and amongst others Prince Gortchakof, Kapsaof, and Davidof, have been instructed to hold themselves in readiness to set out for Georgia. Great preparations are making at St. Petersburgh for the return of the Duke of Leuchtenberg, and for the reception of the illustrious guests who are to be present at his marriage.

Several officers of the Army of the Caucasus have received the insignia of Military orders or sabres of honour, for their bravery in 1838 in repulsing the attack of the Lesghis on the fortress of the Nucha.

TURKEY.—The refusal of the Porte to employ British Naval officers, is owing, no doubt, to Russian intrigue. England and Englishmen are decidedly unpopular. The rejected officers have not yet left Constantinople.

MEXICO.—H.M.S. Rawchorse, which arrived at Plymouth on Sunday, brought intelligence of the settlement of the differences with France, which have ended as nearly as possible where they began, the French having accepted from the Mexicans the same terms as were offered before the bombardment of San Juan d'Ullon.

Literary Notices.

Charles Tyrrell; or, the Bitter Blood. A Novel, by G. P. R. James, Esq., Author of "Darnley," "De l'Orme," &c. Richard Bentley.

"THE bitter blood!" Bitter, indeed, though not without the power of effecting great good, is the exposition here given of the frightful consequences which may arise from the indulgence of a bad temper. Mr. James is a thorough and an unsparing moral anatomist; the morbid parts of our metaphysical organisation are laid bare by his dissecting knife; and if a glance at their deformity do not improve the mind and conduct of rash men, why they are indeed, as Mercutio says, "past surgery." This great moral purpose is the aim of the present story, which is one of the most interesting in its incidents, in the masterly development of its characters, and in the skilful construction of its plot, of any that have yet proceeded from Mr. James's fruitful pen. Though the "bitter blood" has run copiously in the veins of the Tyrrell family for some generations, it seems to have reached its utmost intensity in those of Sir Francis Tyrrell, the most prominent personage of the story. The over-bearing violence of this man—his pertinacious cruelty—his withering taunts—his cold-blooded and determined opposition to the happiness of those around him, are demonstrated with almost frightful energy. The companion of his atrocities, a certain Mr. Driesen, presents another masterly exposition of character; this latter worthy is a professed sceptic—an habitual sneerer at all good—a supplanter, and a villain. These two make pretty work between them, leading to the alienation of the father's property from his son, and terminating in the murder of Sir Francis. A variety of singular circumstances, detailed in a manner that almost holds the reader's breath in suspense, tend to fix suspicion on the son as the assassin. We will not forestall the surprise of him who may trace this interesting story to its catastrophe, by even hinting at a solution of the mystery inherent in its pages; and we are the less inclined to do this, as we are certain that the book is destined for universal perusal. One word as to a matter respecting which we may be allowed to take a sort of professional cognizance. We allude to certain of the nautical characters who perform minor parts in the plot, these are not vraisemblable. Lieutenant Hargrave, and the seafaring men, Longly and Hailes, want that smack of the salt water about them which the public have been accustomed to in the delineations of Marryat and Glascock. It is true that a landsman cannot be expected to have this power, but then it is equally true he should not attempt it.

Life and Correspondence of M. G. Lewis, Author of "The Monk," &c. 2 vols. H. Colburn.

IT always gives us pleasure to hail the appearance of works of this nature, the materials of which, coming home as they do to the business and bosom of all of us, offer a pleasant and piquant variety to the flood of romantic fiction, which forms so prominent a feature in the popular literature of our day. It is true, the life of a man of letters does not usually present that exciting variety of incident which springs from the more adventurous course of the soldier, the sailor, the traveller, and others; but its interest and attraction are of a more intellectual cast, and better bear and repay that study and reflection to which reading of this nature invites. "Monk" Lewis, whose memoirs are now before us, was a man so celebrated in his day, that it may cause some surprise that he should have remained till now without a biographer, to record the triumphs and explain the causes of the celebrity. The reason will probably be found in a circumstance which will not render his memoirs less worthy our attention, namely, that he was strangely and extravagantly over-rated during his life-time; for this circumstance naturally gives occasion to inquiries relative to the causes of such over-strained admiration, and thus developes sources of interest and curiosity which might otherwise have remained unopened. It is clear, from the work now before us, that Lewis's celebrity was anything but of his own seeking; that his "greatness" was "thrust upon him," and that it took its origin from the evil rather than the good qualities which he possessed;—nay, that it never would have existed at all, had it not been for the accidental circumstance of his commencing his literary career at an age when most other literary aspirants are scarcely commencing their studies. His only celebrated work, "The Monk," was written and published before he was twenty years of age; and no sooner was it given to the world, than an outcry was raised against it, which was as salutary as it was unexpected to its author, for it induced him quietly to expunge from his work all that was deemed open to censure long before the questionable matter had reached the great body of the reading world; and thenceforth his book bore an interdict which set all the world upon seeking in it that which nobody could find. That Lewis himself was wholly unconscious of any mischief in what he gave to the world is evident from the character in which these volumes present him, namely, that of a prudent, sensible, moral, and even religious man; an affectionate son and brother, a generous and firm friend, a kind master, an agreeable companion, and a judicious and right-thinking man in all the relations of life. It is the chief merit of these pages that they allow the subject of them to develope his own character (unconsciously) in his numerous letters to his dearest relatives and friends; and that such letters can scarcely fail to offer much matter for pleasant reading will readily be imagined, when it is borne in mind that Lewis was the intimate associate of almost all the celebrated men of his day, political as well as literary, and not a few of the most celebrated women.

His biographer, who is evidently a lady, has executed her somewhat delicate and difficult task very creditably, and the book will be found full of entertaining matter, pleasantly and judiciously set forth. We extract some impromptus written after dinner.

Lord Erskine to Lewis, on returning his pencil:—

> "Your pencil I send you, with thanks for the loan;
> Yet writing for fame now and then,
> My wants I must still be content to bemoan,
> Unless I could 'borrow your pen!'"

Lord E. having indulged in a not very complimentary comparison at the expense of the ladies, was thus answered by Lewis:—

> "Lord Erskine, at women presuming to rail,
> Says, wives are the canisters tied to one's tail;
> While fair Lady Anne, as the subject he carries on,
> Feels hurt at his lordship's degrading comparison.
> Yet wherefore such grieving? Considered aright,
> A canister's useful, and polish'd, and bright;
> And should dirt its original purity hide,
> That's the fault of the puppy to whom it is tied!"

Lord Erskine rejoined:—

> "When smitten with love from the eyes of the fair,
> If marriage should not be your lot,
> A ball from a pistol will end your despair—
> It's safer than canister-shot."

SERIAL PARTS.

Froissart's Chronicles of England, France, Spain, &c. W. Smith.—Five additional parts of this new edition have been issued, making altogether fourteen, and we believe that two more will complete the work. Of the many cheap publications, and of all the reprints, this to us is the most welcome. It is carefully got up: the paper, type, and illustrations, are excellent. There should not be a regimental library without a copy.

Ure's Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines. Longman and Co.—The tenth part completes a very valuable volume of great research, and in which every matter in connection with the Arts and Manufactures is scientifically, and at the same time most clearly, treated upon. We know of no work, in fact, of more practical utility to the manufacturer than this publication, for, although confined to one volume, it contains all the information, carefully condensed, that could be gathered from the best encyclopædias. The diagrams are well selected and numerous.

Outlines of Celebrated Works from the best Masters of Ancient and Modern Sculpture. By Charles Morton.—Parts 10, 11, and 12, of this artistical work, which we have already highly praised, contain, among others, "The Happy Mother," a beautiful group by Westmacott; the "Ajax" of Canova; and the "Mercury" of Thorwaldsen. No publication could be better adapted to accomplish its object.

Ackermann's Sporting Gallery, No. I.—The Night-Riders of Nacton.—A series of four coloured plates, from drawings by Henry Alken, showing the rise, progress, and downfalling of "The First Steeple chase on Record." The "Sporting Review," a very clever publication, for January last, contained an "authentic account," by Sidney Cowper, who was an eye-witness, of a celebrated chase undertaken at night by some officers of cavalry quartered at Ipswich in December, 1803, and when, to "see each other better," and to remain "unknown to vulgar eyes," they wore night-shirts over their uniforms, with cotton night-caps on their heads. The plates are inimitably executed, indeed it would be impossible to pourtray the "choice spirits" and their noble steeds with greater force and truth. Even to this day we are told that some good wives will repeat, with many a holy hope and charitable tear, the well-known legend of "The Phantom Riders of Nacton."

> The steam of their steeds,
> Like a mist from the meads,
> Veiled the moon in a curtain of cloud;
> And the stars so bright,
> Shuddered in light,
> As the unhallowed troop, in their shadowy shroud,
> Galloping, whooping, and yelling aloud,
> Fast, and untiring, and furious in flight,
> Rolled on like the hail-storm, and vanished in night.

H.B.—Nos. 581 to 584. The first is the studio of an artist; H. B. (Henry Brougham) painting a bad likeness of Lord Ebrington, and boasting to his colour-grinder, Lord Lyndhurst, who calls it too flattering, that he does not think him so bad a subject. A finished sketch of O'Connell, with a long serpent-tail, is lying in the corner. 582 is entitled "A Leaf out of 'Nicholas Nickleby,' with slight variations," and represents that amusing scene where the manager of the theatre takes leave of Nicholas and Smike at the door of the coach-office in the public market. The late farewell to Lord Normanby, by O'Connell and Co. at Dublin, suggests this characteristic parody. The part of Old Crummles is admirably acted by O'Connell, who is hugging Lord Normanby, whilst Lord Morpeth is suffering an equal embrace from Morgan O'Connell. Lord Ebrington is deeply affected at the sight, and the mob are shouting around. 583 is "Dentatus." Lord Normanby in conflict with a host of assailants, including Lords Roden, Charleville, Wellington, &c. Brougham on an eminence behind hurling a rock upon his devoted head; Lord Glenelg, disabled on the ground, holds up a broken sword in impotent and pointless anger. 584 is Cado w setting Bruen at the top of the "pole,"- a laughable graphic pun on the recent election. Hume and O'Connell are hounding on the dog of the latter, Gisborne, against Bruen (represented as Bruin at the top of a pole). The whole are extremely clever and characteristic.

THE LATE CAPTAIN E. P. BRENTON, R.N.

This respected officer, who died suddenly * on Sunday evening last at his house in Upper York Street, Portman Square, was second son of the late Rear-Adm. Brenton, and brother to Sir Jahleel Brenton, Bart., K.C.B., &c., Lieut. Governor of Greenwich Hospital, &c. Born, July 19, 1774. He entered the Navy, in Nov. 1788, as a Midshipman, on board the Crown, 64, bearing the broad pendant of the Hon. W. Cornwallis, with whom he sailed for India in Feb. 1789. He continued on the East India station until Dec. 1791, at which period the Crown was ordered home, under the command of Capt. R. M. Sutton—Commodore Cornwallis having previously shifted his broad pendant to the Minerva frigate. Shortly after the Crown's arrival in England (May 1792), Mr Brenton was placed by the late Sir P. Affleck, then a Lord of the Admiralty, on board the Bellona, 74, Capt. G. Wilson. In Aug. 1794, he joined the Queen Charlotte, bearing the flag of Earl Howe, from which ship he was promoted into the Venus frigate, at the commencement of 1795, and was in the expedition of that year to Quiberon Bay.

In 1796, Lieut. Brenton removed with Captain Halsted in the Phœnix, 36, and assisted in the capture of a Dutch frigate.—Shortly after, he left the Phœnix, in consequence of some disagreement with his Commander, to whom he had been known ever since his first embarkation on board the Crown, of which ship Captain Halsted was then First Lieut. He next served as fourth of the Agamemnon, 64, on the North Sea station, and was on board that ship at the mutiny in 1797.

Lieut. Brenton was subsequently appointed first of the Raven sloop, commanded by the late Captain John W. T. Dixon, with whom he continued until that vessel was wrecked in the Fibe, Feb. 4, 1798. We next find him joining the Agincourt, 64, at the request of Capt. John Bligh, in which ship he served, under the flags of Vice-Adm. Waldegrave and Sir C. M. Pole, on the Newfoundland station, for a period of three years. In 1801, Lieut. Brenton was again applied for by Capt. Bligh, and accordingly appointed to the Theseus, 74, then fitting for the flag of Lord Radstock, who had recently been nominated Com.-in-Chief in India, but whose appointment was cancelled in consequence of the preliminaries of peace being signed on 1st October, same year. By one of the articles of the treaty the French were to be permitted to send a large force to reconquer the Island of St. Domingo. To watch this formidable armament, the scene of whose operations was within sight of Jamaica, it became absolutely necessary to send a fleet of ships to the West Indies, besides those already on the station. This service lasted until July. Lieut B. was at this time third Lieut. of the Theseus, commanded by Capt. Bligh; from this ship he was appointed Commander of the Lark sloop of war, and he returned to England in Aug. 1802.

During the short peace, Capt. Brenton sent to the Admiralty the model of a gun-boat, sharp at both ends, and carrying her gun on a slide, which might at pleasure be lowered into the boat's bottom as ballast, or raised to fight, either advancing or retreating. This boat, simple in her design, was approved of by Earl St. Vincent, but justly condemned by many as being very clumsy, the builder having made a mistake in her scantling.

At the renewal of hostilities, Captain B. was appointed to the Merlin, an old collier, fitted as a sloop of war, and mounting 16 guns between decks—in which vessel he was frequently engaged with the enemy's flotilla and land batteries in the neighbourhood of Havre. On 27th Oct. 1803, he drove on shore, and directed the destruction of a French privateer of two guns and thirty men. In Dec. following, Captain Brenton was sent by Capt. R. D. Oliver to destroy the Shannon, 36, which frigate had run on shore under the strong batteries of Tathion Island, near La Hogue, from whence the enemy were about to remove her, as she had sustained but little damage. This service was effectively performed. The Merlin formed part of the squadron, under Capt. Oliver, at the bombardment of Havre, July 23, and Aug. 1st, 1804. In Jan. following, Capt Brenton was appointed to the Amaranthe, a fine new brig, mounting 18 guns, with a complement of 120 men; and from that period until his promotion to Post rank, he was very actively and successfully employed on the North Sea and Leeward Islands stations. His services in the destruction of three national French vessels, on the 13th of December, 1808, were particularly noticed in the despatches. He also assisted at the capture of many vessels bound to the relief of Martinique, but was defrauded of most of his prize-money through the roguery of the agents employed to conduct his affairs. During the subsequent operations against Martinique, he served on shore with the rank of Lieut.-Colonel, under the orders of Commodore Cockburn. After the reduction of that valuable colony, Capt. Brenton was appointed to the Belleisle, 74, bearing the broad pendant of Commodore Cockburn, who, having the Captain General and all his Staff on board, proceeded to Europe, agreeably to the terms of the capitulation.

On his arrival at Spithead, Capt. Brenton found himself posted for his gallant conduct in the affair of 13th Dec. 1808, and that his commission was dated back to that day. In 1809, the Government determined to send out the Marquess Wellesley, as Ambassador to the Supreme Junta of Seville. His Lordship embarked at Portsmouth, on board the Donegal, Capt. E. P. Brenton (acting for Capt. Malcolm), and sailed on 24th July. The Donegal returned home with the Marquess in Nov. following; and Capt. Brenton, being then superseded, remained on half-pay till Apr. 1810, when he obtained an appointment to the Cyane, 22. In Sept. following, he was appointed to the Spartan frigate, as a mark of attention to his brother, whose severe wounds prevented him from continuing in active service. After cruising for some time on the French coast, Captain B. was sent to reinforce the squadron under V.-Adm. Sawyer, on the Halifax station, where he was very actively employed for upwards of two years. The following American privateers were captured by the Spartan in July 1812:—Active, schooner, of 2 guns and 20 men; Actress, sloop, 4 guns and 53 men; Intention, schooner, 1 gun, 3 swivels, and 29 men. Early in the following month, her boats assisted at the capture and destruction of six other armed vessels, in the Bay of Fundy, viz.—Morning Star, 1 gun, 4 swivels, and 40 men; Polly, of similar force; Madison, Olive, and Spence—each mounting 2 guns; and Commodore Barry, a rev. cutter, pierced for 10, but only mounting 6 guns. Among numerous other prizes taken by Capt. Brenton, but condemned as droits of Admiralty, were the Melanthe, a beautiful ship, from Valparaiso, with a cargo of hides and copper; and a brig laden with merino wool, opium, and wine; each having on board several thousands of dollars. The Spartan, being found defective, was paid off about September, 1813.

Capt. Brenton's next appointment was, April 11, 1815, to the Royal Sovereign, a first-rate, fitting for the flag of Rear-Admiral Hallowell, which ship he fully equipped in the short space of 18 days, part of his crew at the same time employed rigging and completing the stores of a brig, whose Commander was thanked by the Admiralty for his diligence, although the active exertions of Capt. Brenton and his 1st Lieut were not even acknowledged. On the 31st of the following month, Capt. B. was removed to the Tonnant, 80—the command of which ship he resigned in Nov. 1815. His "Naval History" has been so long before the public as to render any remark of ours upon that work superfluous.

Capt. Brenton was well known to the public as the founder of the Children's Friend Society, and the warm advocate of several charitable institutions. His life was spent in the duties of active benevolence; indeed, within the range of a very extensive acquaintance, we could not fix on a more kind or humane man.—He married, Mar. 29, 1803, a daughter of the late Gen. Thos. Cox.

* About seven in the evening he complained of a pain in the abdomen, and went up to his chamber, where he expired in twenty minutes after. An inquest was held, and a verdict of "natural death" returned.

Other grievances exist, although not so fraught with injurious consequences to the nation, shipowner, and seaman, yet in a considerable measure tend to render the latter dissatisfied by means of the apparently partial dictation of those peculiar edicts under which he serves—weaning his attachment at the same time from his country. Those laws of a mirot character in their effect have already been represented in general terms, and at least require that justice be equalised. Previous to further suggestions on the principal object of this treatise, it will be prudent to refer to some of those sections before alluded to. We now revert to one which, although inadmissible, requires to be mutual in its restraint, 5 & 6 W. IV. s. 6. This law does not allow the mariner, on any pretext whatever, to retract from his agreement, once subscribed to, or the stipulation for the probable length of time the voyage may occupy. Now, as there cannot be any possible opinion formed, bordering on accuracy, of the length of time the voyage may take, dependent as it is, not only on those circumstances over which man holds no control, but also on the private interest or caprice of the shipowner, it is irrational not to allow the mariner an appeal in this instance also, and to prevent his stating those causes which may induce him most plausibly to refuse to proceed on the service he engaged for. This case might justly be referred to the decision of a tribunal, and not summarily condemned, and punished as this law at present directs. Should the seaman adduce sufficient reason to the satisfaction of the above Court, provided he finds an immediate substitute, equity ought to be extended to him; if, on the contrary, his object arise from no just reason, a forfeiture of privilege should be awarded, according to the importance that may be attached to such a violation of his contract.

While examining the section in question, we are unable to perceive any restriction imposed on the shipowner. If, from private circumstances, the articles be broken on his part, or he should not choose to prosecute the voyage *, the seaman in this latter case frequently suffers more inconvenience and embarrassment, comparatively, than his employer. The usual advance pay, of which he may receive a portion, is sunk in the equipment, for a long or even a short voyage, and perhaps otherwise involved, to those specious impostors already spoken of, who never cease to tantalise him while there remains the least portion of finances to be extracted. He is, therefore, thrown again on the streets, a helpless prey to the evils enumerated. Ought not, on the common and broad principles of equity, the shipowner be required to provide another ship for the seaman, or pay him an equivalent to the length of time which it may be conjectured that the voyage would have probably occupied? Even in the following ratio it would guard against wrong, and place him above the probability of inevitable want.—If the voyage were supposed to take three months in accomplishing, six weeks' pay; if six months, eight weeks' pay; if twelve months, ten weeks' pay; and if eighteen months or upward, twelve weeks' pay; to be awarded on all cases dependent on circumstances, provided they do not involve wreck or loss of vessel, which would duly be considered by the dispensers of these arrangements. If all contracts be considered mutually binding, why not the same law be extended to this one also—a measure at once so just, and which will eventually prove beneficial to the nation? Under these feelings they are proposed as emanating from sentiments of ardent zeal. Having in a foregoing part of this work alluded to the incompetency of numbers of Masters in the trading marine, and the frequent loss of life and valuable property, it now becomes a duty to regard with astonishment and regret the errors of such ignorance and mal-arrangement pitifully visited on the mariner by 5 & 6 W. IV., s. 17. Thus, should a ship be lost after a long and toilsome voyage, even on the shores of England, he forfeits all his hard-earned pay, should there not be a sufficient portion of the wreck or freight saved to liquidate the debt of wages. Doubtless it will be urged that this peculiar law is in order to compel the mariner to perform his duty with greater zeal, and oblige him to exert his veriest power in the time of need and danger. True! our mariner can boast of viewing unmoved almost every description of peril; but it is only natural to conclude that motives of self-preservation, guided by discipline, independent of this decree, would alone be found inducement enough for the utmost energy on such occasions. But an irreconcilable contradiction, even to the former view of the intention, upon which this enactment is based, can be found in 5 & 6 W. IV., s. 46. It expresses, that should a mariner join Her Majesty's service from a trading vessel, he becomes only, conditionally entitled to his arrears of pay. Thus, if the ship has earned no freight up to the time of the seaman's quitting her, he is obliged to take a bill, payable by the owners; providing always that the ship shall arrive safe in Great Britain: but, in the event of any casualty, the seaman, who patriotically volunteers to the service of the country, forfeits his hard-earned pay, should the vessel be lost in which he formerly had served. Thus, is it proved, that the motive of inspiring assiduity is not applicable to the former section 17.

To guard against these evils, a discriminating justice ought to condemn the negligent by forfeiture of pay, or otherwise punish, but not to withhold the already due wages of toil from the deserving. In this instance the nautical tribunal would be empowered to award pay to the meritorious, while all, or a portion of that which may be coming to the dilatory or undeserving, should be handed over to certain funds hereafter described for the general benefit of mariners; as the returns of the shipowner are immense, he may calculate the risk as a matter of profit and loss, and not be peculiarly embarrassed by the latter, the underwriter being more frequently the sufferer. Does not the seaman undergo a tenfold proportionable loss and endurance of misfortune on these occasions? Those who have seen the wreck, where

> "No pomp of battle swells the exalted strain,
> Nor gleaming arms ring dreadful on the plain;
> But o'er the scene, while pale remembrance weeps,
> Fate, with fell triumph, rides upon the deeps.
> Here hostile elements tumultuous rise,
> And lawless floods rebel against the skies,
> Till hope expires, and peril and dismay
> Wave their black ensigns on the watery way,"

* The author recently commanded a Company's steam-ship destined for the West Indies, and to remain on that station for an undefined period, with a view of conveying the mails. A change took place after the vessel had left the port of London: she put back, and the Company deemed it expedient to dissolve. The mariners, although provided for several years' service, were dismissed without ceremony or remuneration for the loss, except their earned pay. But a passenger, who was going out to join Sir Lionel Smith at Jamaica, obliged the Directors to keep their stipulation with him; he was supported while delayed in London, and had a passage found for him to the West Indies. Here are placed in opposite scales, justice and injustice.

will answer in the affirmative. Again would the seaman perceive the justice arising from a minute investigation of those circumstances to which he is subservient, and learn to appreciate the wise interference of his country's jurisdiction, emanating as it would from a union of the naval and civil laws, and administered by officers experienced in every bearing of his case, and capable of deciding in it with equity.

The want of proper regard paid to the health of the trading mariner, and the hardship of his being obliged to defray the expense of medical advice if removed on shore and not lodged in a public hospital, has already been remarked. The repeated attacks of disease, consequent on his laborious vocation in pestilential climates, which he is subject to, ought to be taken into consideration, and section 18 of 5 & 6 Wm. IV., which directs every ship to be provided with medicine, and the surgical and medical advice, in the event of receiving injury on board, should be more comprehensive, and not limit the responsibility of the shipowner to defray the expense only till the mariner shall have arrived "in any port of the United Kingdom." If by that time it happens that he has not recovered, the result is, that he must provide for it at his own expense; in addition to which, this section of the law only compels the shipowner to defray surgical or medical advice, &c. &c., alone, "in default of not having a proper stock of medicines on board," which indeed in all cases is studiously avoided. This grievance frequently gives rise to a most nefarious understanding between the shipowner*, master, and resident doctor, in foreign and unhealthy climates.—To be Continued.

A PLAN BY PHILO-PALINURUS

For bettering the condition of Men-of-War Seamen when out of Employ; providing for them when past Service; keeping a supply of Seamen at the large Naval Ports, for Fitting-out and Manning Ships, and avoiding Impressment; all capable of being effected by a comparative small increase of Expenditure, if any.

By establishing a Naval Depot at each of the great Naval ports, and in the River Thames if required, a three-decked ship to be a rendezvous and asylum for Naval seamen when out of employ, or such as wish to enter the Navy, to be there provided with a sleeping-berth and mess-place; with breakfast and supper, until active employ be found, and for all Government work done by them on board the depot, but not depot duty, to be paid one half of the rate paid by Government for like work; slops, and a limited rate of extra provisions, to be supplied them at a small remunerating rate above the contract price. Thus every able-bodied man-of-war's man, from 15 to 45 years of age, may have constant employ and a home, either on board an active ship or in depot. The principle is alike applicable to the merchant service. The wounded and hurt refuging at Greenwich Hospital, the casual sick being sent to the port hospital. Service pensions to be granted after 45 years of age, as follows, independent of pensions for wounds and hurts. Servitude time commencing from 15 years old.

The depot regulations, fitting up, and work capable of being done on board

Government.—Admiralty, head control by their superintendent Flag-officer at the port. The managing detail committee, resident on board, in whom all depot regulating power to be vested under known established rules. Five intelligent and well-behaved petty officers, above five years so rated, with full provisions, and 2*s.* 6*d.* per day whilst so serving; three to be nominated by the Admiral, two by the seamen: one of each nomination to go out annually.

The Fitting-up the Depot.—Holds and orlop-deck as sleeping berth; part of lower deck the same; the rest of that deck as a mess-place; middle and part of main deck as work places, the rest of the main deck for galley and washing place.

Work capable of being done on board the Depot.—Fitting small rigging; spinning spun-yarn; twisting foxes; platting sinnet, gaskets, points, and robands; making mats; small sails, cots, hammocks, tarpaulines, bags, hammock-cloths, boom-cloths, sponge, caps, &c.; wads, picking oakum; joiners', coopers', smiths' (light work). For such work depot men to be paid at one-half the rate paid to shore workmen; all harbour duty and fitting-out ships full-pay. Manning ships to be done by volunteering, or by drafting by lot.

Funds.—1st. A deduction of one penny per day from all Naval seamen's wages. 2nd. Government to cover the amount annually. 3rd. One-half of one-third net part of all prizes.—(See plan of prize-money. 4th. One-eighth net part of all droits of Admiralty. 5th. The net produce of all waifs, flotsam, jetsam, and lagan. 6th. The just proportion of the funds of Greenwich Hospital; as this plan would relieve that institution from the maintenance of all seamen but the wounded and hurt. 7th. Net produce of old stores, and vessels sold out of the service. 8th. Seamen's unclaimed prize-money.

Charge and Management of Funds.—Trustees and Directors, three Flag-officers.

* The author knew a doctor who went to Jamaica, his principal object being an arrangement which subsisted between him and a shipowner in London, who guaranteed the medical man practice on the seamen of his vessels trading to Kingston; the masters of the vessels received instructions, and the doctor sailed for the West Indies. It is unnecessary to state the nature of those plans proceeded on in the case.

East India Intelligence.

On Wednesday last a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when the thanks of the Court were voted unanimously to Major-Gen. Sir James Law Lushington, G.C.B., Chairman, and Sir Richard Jenkins, G.C.B., M.P., Deputy-Chairman, for their great application and attention to the affairs of the East India Company during the past year.

A ballot was afterwards taken for the election of six Directors in the room of Mr. P. Vans Agnew, C.B.; Major-Gen. Sir J. L. Lushington, G.C.B.; Messrs. G. Lyall, J. P. Muspratt, M. T. Smith, and W. Wigram; who go out by rotation. At 6 o'clock the glasses were closed and delivered to the scrutineers, who reported that the election had fallen upon Mr. Josias Du Pré Alexander, Sir Robert Campbell, Bart., Mr. N. B. Edmonstone, the Hon. Hugh Lindsay, Mr. J. G. Ravenshaw, and Sir H. Willock, K.L.S.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. G. Fleming, one of the officers of the Indian Navy engaged in the survey, on the 15th Dec., at the Rest House, Colombo, of fever, contracted a few days previously at Cochin.—Colombo Observer, Dec. 17.

Col. Whish, who at present commands the Horse Artillery, will succeed to the Commandantship of Artillery, which, we believe, will be vacated, by the promotion of the present incumbent to the rank of Major-General. This will give the command of the Horse Artillery to Lieut.-Col. Gowan, the late Civil Commissioner in Kumaoon, an officer who had been removed from his civil appointment by orders from the Court of Directors. We believe the posting of Lieut.-Col. Gowan to the Horse Artillery was the act of Sir Henry Fane, who, we understand, made no reference whatever to the Commandant of Artillery.—Englishman, Jan. 3.

The Bangalore and Trichinopoly Batta Question.—It is with infinite regret that we announce the refusal of the Court of Directors to grant full batta to their officers at Bangalore and Trichinopoly, as solicited in certain memorials from those stations, and supported by the strong recommendation of the Madras Government. The grounds of the refusal we have not yet learned, for although by the Quartermaster-General's measurement, Bangalore and Trichinopoly are rather under 200 miles distance from Madras, and consequently not entitled to be considered full batta stations; yet, as they are laid down in the Post-office table as 295 and 200 miles respectively, and as for such distance the Government actually charge postage to the very officers from whom they withhold full batta, on the plea that the distance is under 200 miles.—Madras U. S. Gazette, Jan. 1.

We hear from Ferozepore that the greatest vexation had been experienced by irregularity of the Dawk arrangements. We are assured, on the authority of eye-witnesses at Ferozepore, that some hundreds of letters were found lying about in several public offices awaiting the claimants, and many more were taken out of the hands of the chuprassees, bearers and troopers, wandering about the camp in search of the owners.—Englishman, Dec. 24.

The authorities have decided that an augmentation of Assistant-Surgeons to the present list is indispensable, and, in consequence, a proportionate augmentation of the list of full Surgeons will be made.

CORRESPONDENCE ADDRESSED TO THE EDITOR.

PROPOSED FUND FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE WIDOWS AND ORPHANS OF OFFICERS IN HER MAJESTY'S SERVICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Your obliging insertion of the notice I sent to you last week, calling a meeting on St. George's Day, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of addressing a memorial to his Excellency the Commander of the Forces, on the subject of the Widows' and Orphans' Fund, demands my best thanks.

The able remarks, and the ready willingness evinced by yourself, and the Editor of the U. S. Gazette, to advance in every possible manner a proposition so materially affecting the interests of the two services, must and will be duly appreciated by the members of them both. It is most gratifying to witness, on subjects of pure philanthropy, public men like yourselves casting aside every minor feeling, and cordially uniting to carry out the one great object in view—the alleviation of misery to the fatherless Children and Widows. And fortunate it is, indeed, for the services, that men so gifted and so disposed, have at their control the powerful engine of the Press to advance the interest or combat the oppressions which both Army and Navy are sometimes subjected to.

A RETIRED OFFICER.

BARRACKS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I was extremely glad to see that the member for Kildare, some days ago, brought before the notice of the public the disgraceful state of the barracks in the kingdom, and I hope that the notice of the gallant member will be taken as an earnest of the general indignation of the Army at the way in which they are treated by the Ordnance Department in respect to quarters;—officers, Sir, are put in places to reside where a private gentleman would not think of putting his valet.

It appears, Sir, as if every possible way was taken to degrade the officer in his own eyes, as well as in those of the public, in the way they are lodged. The system, Sir, is bad throughout. In the first place, when a barrack is built or purchased, the allotting it out is entrusted to an Engineer officer, who has no fellow-feeling with the rest of the Army, never being put into barracks themselves, and in fact (unless when any good thing is going) affect to consider themselves not soldiers, but merely as scientific employés of Government. The consequence is, that every dog-hole of a place is considered good enough in their eyes for an officer of the Line. This breeds dissension in the service and I will venture to say, from long experience in all parts of the British dominions, that the ill blood which formerly prevailed between the Army and Navy (now so happily extinguished) was trifling compared to the bad feeling which now exists on the part of the Army generally towards the Engineer Department (the pet service), arising from the total want of consideration and proper feeling on the part of the latter in all which regards the allotment of barracks. The barracks being allotted by the Engineer, they are handed over to the custody of a Barrack-Master, who, from their conduct, an ill-natured person would say, appear to have received orders from the Board to render everything as uncomfortable as possible to the occupants,—you are put into one room, unless you are a Field Officer, with a table and two chairs—such as they are. In many barracks married officers are not allowed a kitchen, as the Master-General considers a dinner to a married officer quite a superfluous thing. When you have a little place as a kitchen, four walls is all that is thought necessary, there is a total absence of all the conveniences for cooking; two or three iron bars thrown across are called a grate,—it is just large enough to put a kettle on;—as to being able to roast a joint, that is a thing which never entered the heads of the Hon. Board of Ordnance. If you put a bit of board up as a shelf, or drive a few nails in the wall to hang your utensils on, then you have a long list of barrack damages to pay. If an officer, having a feeling of delicacy towards his wife, chooses to take her into lodgings, rather than expose her to the discomforts of a barrack, here again the Ordnance appear to be determined to make it as hard as possible to him, and immediately take away his allowance of coal and candles. This is not generous treatment, Sir, towards the defenders of the country—men who spend four-fifths of their lives abroad in the most pes-tiferous climates to secure the colonies which were won by their valour, and from the possession of which the wealth and power of Britain is to be ascribed; and I am convinced that the country would not think that it was too much to ask that then officers should be at least decently lodged. I have arrived, after long service, to the rank of Captain, and I am convinced that the footman of the Master General of the Ordnance, in the palace which is given to his master, is much better accommodated than I am!

There is a general opinion throughout the service, that it is the policy of Government to drive all officers from the Army who are not wealthy. Certainly it would appear, from the way in which the promotion is given, that this idea is just. Nine-tenths of the General Officers on the List are Guardsmen, from the circumstance of Officers of the Guards having but three steps to arrive at the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, while the Line have ten—and this without taking into consideration the climates in which the latter have to serve in. Our Government have not openly adopted the rule of the French Government of 1751, making it imperative that every officer should have noble blood; but they certainly act as if they were : discreetly, for none but the Aristocracy can hope for the higher ranks of the Army.

But to return to the subject from which I have digressed, i. e., the quartering of Officers. It is a bad plan to make officers so entirely dependent on the Barrack Masters for their comfort; there should be a certain degree of responsibility attached to the Commanding Officer in barracks, and a small annual sum allowed to be expended, under his direction, for the comfort of the men and officers. Under the present plan, the Barrack-Master actually, in a great degree, commands the garrison, inasmuch as he has it in his power to render a whole corps uncomfortable. They have house-rent allowed for themselves, and they can get how other officers are treated so that they have no trouble, and they know also, in common with the rest of the Army, that the Board of Ordnance support their own officers through thick and thin. I will just merely add, that when the late Duke of Kent commanded in Halifax, he was so much distressed at a married officer living in one room, that he gave an order that every married officer, of whatever rank, should be allowed two rooms; and I do hope that the present Master-General, himself a married man, will follow so good an example, and give an order that married officers should have two rooms as a right, not depending on the caprice of a Barrack Master.

Pray, pardon this long letter; you have been ever so zealous and able an advocate for the service, that I even were to solicit your attention to the above. SENEX.

RIFLE REGIMENTS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—As unfeignedly willing, as bound, to respect Arthur's superior talents, and truly extensive experience, immutable attachment to my "cloth" (since colours we riflemen have not) alone could reconcile a painful determination—that of measuring a few charges, and patching as many balls, although not to be used against him, certainly to blaze them away at his argument, under favour of (in your No. 322) they do, the utility of Rifle Regiments! Your space being as valuable to yourself and the public, as, just now, my time is to one employing it in preparations whereby, and demonstratively, to maintain, with the authorities, the to gymnastic and other Stadium exercises now favourable impression, which our united labours have so successfully brought about, I have to crave that my gallant (let me hope only pro. tem.) opponent will not misconstrue into disrespect my unceremoniously "tinkering" away, to disprove that rifle-hits are "too much for play, and too little for earnest," if fired by persons whose deference, like mine, reminds them that they must make many and stinging hits by humble "2½s to the pound," to put his "long 18" hors de combat; but as dry powder, a clean rifle, well greased patch, and nimble hair trigger, ably serve the ambitious, I'll trust to them, and to your true record of my shots. Crack! No. 1. There's a close hit, and if infantry generally had more of target play, even at one fourth of my present range, the enemy might pronounce us to be as more in "earnest." No. 2. Bull's-eye at 250 yards! If this is useless "play," the riding and fencing schools are equally so. No. 3. Crack. I have favoured that terrible "sabreur" with a hole through his "triangular target" to peep through, in order to dodge a dozen or more bullets I'll take care to riddle through his target, as he plies his shin-bones over the 300 yards now between us, in order to bring me within range of his pistol. Nos. 4 and 5. Both through his triangular shield, scuffles his feather-edged carcase on still, and shouts, forsooth, but n'importe! Is even his charm should treat him to a "n'ôlee," so as to expose me to his "sword," I shall say to him, Monsieur le "Sabreur" conceès, ce qu'il doit avoir oublié, that I, too, wear a sword, one not likely to be satisfied with "keeping off" assailants. No. 6. Accept that "vacancy" in your ranks; and should you flatter yourself that you are secure from "a charge of pikes," because your pistol-shots will "make vacancies" (at 25 yards, your longest range, and provided you do not aim at what you wish to hit), let me assure, or, instead, convince you, that, before you can hope to use your pistol thus, the vacancies from rifle-hits will be all on your side, at last to be isolated from the muzzles of our pistols. for, according to Stadium hints, riflemen need no longer fear cavalry or other charges, even in plains, having (as suggested by De B. in No. 312, at the bottom of folio 22, rifle pistols ALL and a THIRD rank armed with pikes or lances, apparently oublié by he Chef des Sabreurs. Called on, and formed into hollow squares, and crossing a plain in echelon of squares, to regain broken or covered ground, we are waited upon, and most insinuatingly, by dashing cavalry. No. 7 crack, with cartridge now, for who can miss a host of smokers, as fond of a "prise" as of their meerschaums? and we are too well bred to refuse them a "prise," a thankless office; for, although eagerly offered, even at the points of our pikes, the sneezing of their horses and of the riders too, shows that our cephalic is not to their taste, nor are the bolusses which our rifles know full well how to dose them with. No. 8. and crack the last, brings down a General, in conformity with new rules, as unfolded to General Sir Thomas Picton*, Is it not rifle dread of such skill which causes riflemen to be so much en mauvaise odeur with several officers? a fact which confirms my belief that Arthur belongs to that (by me nevertheless) respected class. Right he is when he says that rifle volunteer corps may "prove highly MISCHIEVOUS," but to say so immediately after declaring that they "could do NOTHING against invaders," can only be matched by saying that a rifleman is an awkward shot, because, instead of hitting the target, he always hits the bull's-eye! He can do what he likes, and by using him PROPERLY, you may make sure that he will equally attend to your liking! As this letter has been "play" throughout, I beg to state that I hope soon to bring up my reserve "in earnest;" and which, always having been kept in ignorance how to ground arms, and, although ever ready to skirmish, nevertheless as anxious to receive Arthur's inspection, in open order, and with presented rifles and lances; an honour equally due to your services and kindness, from, Sir, your obliged humble servant, DE BERESFORD.

ROYAL MARINES.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—On the conclusion of the labours of the Naval and Military Commission, the heads of departments will have the pleasing task of carrying out the several measures recommended. Let me, therefore, bring to the notice of the Board of Admiralty, ere any move consequent on the Report occurs,—First, the equity of adopting a system in the Marines corresponding with that now acted on in both Navy and Army, viz., the holding full-pay staff appointments for a period of five years only; a regulation which might with equal fairness be extended to the Commandants, whereby the very few good things the corps has would embrace a greater range of distribution; for, composed as it is of so many officers, it cannot surely be altogether fair that those offices of comparative emolument and ease should be held in continuity for periods (not unfrequent either) of from 8 & 9, to 16 and 20 years; by which, too, "these elect of fortune" pass perhaps four-fifths of their time at home, while others are risking their health, on a pittance of pay, amid the vicissitudes ever attendant on foreign service. Secondly,—Amend that "exclusive" system of not giving commissions to any but the sons of officers. Let there be, as heretofore, and as is the case in all other regiments, a mixture of civilians. The present plan may be, and I dare say is, kindly meant by Lord Minto, but rely on it that the little old adage of "variety is charming" will apply equally to this subject as others. Moreover, I would assuredly recommend "purchasing the first commission, and at the regulation price of the Fusiliers;" making exceptions, however, in favour of the families of officers who have lost their lives in the service, or whose health has been greatly impaired in it, or whose gallantry or length of active services entitle them to consideration; in fact, to all whose fair share of duties constitute a just and consequently a prior claim. Thirdly—Establish "forthwith" an intermediate grade of non-commissioned officer (similar to the Bombardier of Artillery) at an increased rate of pay of twopence per diem over that of a private, which would be the means of inciting an additional stimulus to the well-behaved soldier, and in 1st and 2nd mates, or the senior Sergeant, a sea-rating as Sergeant-Major, with the same pay as Master-at-Arms; for what officer, let me ask, who has been much embarked, but too truly knows the disadvantages attending the present paucity of non-commissioned officers? Fourthly—The existing mode of awarding "good-service medals," with their accompanying premiums, requires amendment. Instead of presenting these to men ONLY ON THEIR DISCHARGE at the expiration of 21 years, I would unquestionably give them the option at least of remaining four or five years longer, when they, being then most probably not more than 42 or 43 years of age, thus proudly displaying the medal at their breast, would, by their presence in the ranks, become a visible example to others for imitation. Perhaps, too (since, alas! alas! the cry of expense is always bruited as an objection to such matters), the prospectively reducing the amount of gratuity to four, six, and ten pounds respectively would be attended with this ultimate good, that SO MANY MORE MEN than are at present allowed would reap the advantage of attaining this highly-prized honourable distinction, with its solid concomitant, "increased rate of pension." Lastly—The purchase of a soldier's discharge is obtained too cheaply, viz., 20*l*. Now, if you take into account the bounty, subsistence, expenses of enlistment, pay, clothing, wear and tear of arms and accoutrements, barracks, &c., and the trouble and general charges attendant on his training, but small indeed is the balance in favour of the Queen; for often, very often, does it occur that ere six months have transpired from the date of his attestation that he buys his discharge, and thus is all the trial of patience, all the trouble of "making a soldier," entirely thrown away, as on an average it will take full that time ere he is fully fit to take his general duty. I would, therefore, most certainly recommend that henceforth twenty five pounds be the sum required for discharge; and further, that no discharge be granted under a service of three years, for a less sum than thirty pounds;—medical or particular cases, &c., of course excepted. FINIS.

THE BRITISH MILITARY SYSTEM (THE DRILL.)

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I should not trouble you with these lines, was I not desirous, before I leave old England, to offer one or two observations in reply to your correspondent named Chevron. It appears to me that as his remarks are so general, many of your readers will imagine that the course he so strongly reprobates is universal. Now, Sir, I have no hesitation in saying that in the regiment to which I have the honour to belong, that so far from ever witnessing anything approaching even to "bullyism," "mimicry," or "coarse abuse," in the drill-yard, I have always seen the greatest patience, and I may almost even say kindness, but at the same time firmness, on the part of all our Drill Instructors: and further, that it is more than any of us dare do, to bully or mimic any of our recruits. A considerable part of my time is passed in the drill-yard, and I have always considered it one of my chief duties, whilst instructing the uninitiated, to keep him in good humour with himself, and I have always found the advantage; when at the same time I will have done, and done correctly, whatever I order, or conveying my instruction in such a tone, but accompanied with a firmness, that is sure to be duly attended to. You must, Sir, be aware how very dull some men are, but with us I have always observed the greatest patience and forbearance exhibited towards them. Never having been on duty at Chatham, I am ignorant of the manner in which they do things there, but I wish to assure Chevron that all drill-yards are not like Chatham. THANE CHEVRONS.

THE WEARING OF MEDALS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Observing in your valuable Paper complaints by the War Army Officers at not having received medals, &c., brought to my mind a conversation I had some time ago with a friend—an old Coast Guard officer and a Lieut. R.N. He has at various periods received the silver and gold medals of the Royal Humane Institution, for the preservation of life from shipwreck, three handsome pieces of plate, and other honorary testimonials, none of which he either shows or speaks of; and upon my demanding the reason, he said that he feared it would carry with it an appearance of ostentation, as they were not permitted to wear such medals, nor were such either noticed by the Admiralty or in the Navy List. Is this, Sir, as it ought to be? Certainly not; and from the more than friendly manner with which you have ever advocated the cause of those ill-used officers, I look forward with confidence to your taking the foregoing into your consideration, particularly as their services upon those occasions are voluntary, and at all times attended with appalling danger, and requiring true courage and strength of nerve; whereas in going into battle one cannot but do as others do, however much we might incline to skulk out of it. It would be a satisfaction to them to have a notation in the Navy List before their names, and I think also that the present Commission should be cognisant of such services. I should also state, that my friend has a large family, who would be reduced to beggary were anything to happen to then parent; and he has told me, that when putting off repeatedly from the beach, the thoughts of his family were agonising in the extreme to him. D. Glasgow, April 4.

Sir Walter Scott, for the whole of his writings, now compressed in eighty volumes, received not less than 250,000*l*.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA.

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfumer superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits. Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop 63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove — "Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve flacon of Solvent, I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years, hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. LOFTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely ineffacacious but mischievous. It is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none other are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

THE FREQUENT ROBBERIES OF PLATE—CAUTION.—It having been represented to RIPPON and BURTON, that several persons are vending a spurious metal as their NICKEL SILVER BRITISH PLATE, they approve the public that the genuine article can only be had at the Warehouses, 13, Wells-street, Oxford-street. The Nickel Silver mical process, rendered superior to any other so called, in appearance and durability; it is equal to silver, all the articles being solid and of wrought material, they improve with use, and are warranted to stand the test of that strong acid, aquafortis. FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

WITHIN a period of Two Months upwards of Three Hundred Patients were successfully treated at the Metropolitan Hospitals with FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

By JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London—

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

TO MESSRS. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON-GARDEN.

GENTLEMEN,—I take the liberty of addressing my thanks to you for the great benefit I have received from your truly valuable Macassar Oil. Having had the misfortune to lose almost all my hair at the age of twenty-five, in consequence of a fever, which is very prevalent in this part of the country, I was lately induced, at the instance of a friend, to make a trial of your excellent specific. I can only say the effects are most surprising; for in a very short space of time my head (which was before perfectly bald) was covered with thick and strong hair. I am now fifty years of age, and would scarcely have expected that, after having worn a wig for twenty-five years of my life, I should ever be able to throw it entirely aside. I think it but justice to yourselves and the public to add my testimony to the virtues of your truly inestimable Oil. You have my full permission to make this letter public, or refer any one to me for proofs of the merits of this invaluable discovery I am, Gentlemen, your obliged and obedient servant,

WM. CHARLES PRIDLAUX.

Spilsby, Lincolnshire, March 21, 1812.

THE NEW CODRINGTON FROCKS are especially adapted, and will prove a valuable acquisition. The merits of the process by which they are rendered WATERPROOF, as also of the garment itself, are now too well known and appreciated to need description or recommendation. This invention, which renders ALL KINDS of Clothing waterproof, WITHOUT IMPEDING THE ESCAPE OF PERSPIRATION, was first publicly introduced by W. BERDOE, who, after trying all the others, believes the process of the "British Waterproofing Company" is the best.—A great variety of Waterproof Articles, suitable for all climates, seasons, and purposes, kept by WALTER BERDOE, Tailor, 69, Cornhill.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.—FAMILIES in WANT of really good SERVANTS, of every description, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, 326, Oxford-street, corner of Regent circus, (removed from 134, Oxford street—established in 1830), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as domestics are waiting to be hired from Ten to Five o'clock. Convenient rooms are appropriated to engagements, which prevents unnecessary trouble at home through promiscuous applications. Many persons are prejudiced against an establishment for hiring servants; but if the servants possess good characters, it must certainly be obviously absurd to suppose that they can be injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure situations. Fee for obtaining a servant, 2s. 6d., as many as may be required in a family per annum, 14s.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wishes it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial: they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse hair seating, 13s. 9d; Trafalgar, ditto, 7l. 6d., ditto mahogany sofas, 90s; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 20s., furniture for ditto, 20s., japanned chairs, 2s each, cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each; japanned drawers, 7l. 7s. each, mahogany ditto, 44s; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned, solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25s. each, ditto couches, 6l. 10s., ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s., fancy chairs, 7s 6d. each. BERROW, who, after trying all the others, believes the process of the "British Waterproofing Company" is the best.—A great variety of Waterproof Articles, suitable for all climates, seasons, and purposes, kept by WALTER BERROW, Tailor, 69, Cornhill.

INFANTRY.

Scots Fusilier Guards, 1st Batt.—On Thursday evening, about nine o'clock, considerable alarm was caused in the Tower by the sudden report of fire-arms. The following particulars have been sent us:—About the hour above named Corporal Furnival was on duty at the Spur-gate or western entrance of the fortress, and it was his business to prevent any soldier passing out unless regimentally dressed, and also to prevent any of the men confined to their barracks from passing the barrier. While Furnival was engaged in the above duty, private Mitchell presented himself and attempted to pass out. He was instantly recognised by the Corporal and turned back. As he went away he muttered something, which was not distinctly heard by Furnival. Mitchell immediately returned to his quarters, and, unobserved, loaded his musket, with which he returned to the Spur-guard, and approaching the Corporal raised the piece, and deliberately fired at him; but fortunately the ball did not take effect, as it passed between his arm and his hip, slightly grazing the tail of his coat. The villain was instantly secured by the guard, and placed in irons. Yesterday he was taken before the Commanding Officer, where, after a short examination, he was conducted back to prison, there to await the orders of the Com.-in-Chief.

Sir Lionel Smith, bart., K.C.B., commanding the troops in Jamaica, conveying the pleasure of Her Majesty in the case of Assist.-Surgeon William Kelly, of the Ordnance Medical Department.

A. DICKSON, Deputy Adjutant-General.

Horse Guards, 26th March, 1839.

SIR,—With reference to the General Commanding-in-Chief's letter of the 30th Jan. last, communicating Her Majesty's pleasure upon the proceedings of the General Court-Martial, held at Kingston Barracks, Jamaica, in Nov. 1838, for the trial of Assist.-Surg. W. Kelly, of the Ordnance Medical Department, who was sentenced to be dismissed Her Majesty's service, I am directed to acquaint you, that, in consideration of the recommendation of the Master-Gen. of the Ordnance, in Mr. Kelly's behalf, his former services and qualifications for the duties of his profession, his Lordship has again submitted the case to the Queen, and Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to extend her pardon to Mr Kelly, and to recommend that he should be restored to the functions of her commission. The General Commanding-in-Chief desires, therefore, that Her Majesty's gracious pleasure may be made known to the troops under your command in the same public manner as was the finding and sentence of the Court-Martial before which Mr. Kelly was tried. I have, &c. FITZROY SOMERSET.

Lieut.-General Sir Lionel Smith, Bart., K.C.B.

G.O., April 8, 1839.—The Master-General has been pleased to approve of the following transfer, viz.—Second Lieut. H. B. Campbell, from Major Moor's company, 3d batt., to Major Herron's company, 9th batt. J. E. JONES, Lt.-Col. A.A.G.

G.O., April 16, 1839—With reference to the returns of men of the Royal Artillery, who have established their claims to good-conduct pay, and of men entitled to wear badges of distinction for good conduct, which was transmitted to the Master-General and Board on the 1st of January last, it is now notified to the regiment that the several claims have been approved of, by letter dated 25th Jan. 1839 (M. 22). The Master-General and Board desire the officers commanding troops, companies and detachments, to quote the Board's Order of 25th Jan., 1839 (M. 22), in the Pay List, against the name of every man for whom a charge may be made for good-conduct pay, and that the same authority be stated for the expenses incurred for the badges of distinction worn by the men.—Vide Item 13 of the Instructions. The duplicate returns, No. 2, will be given back to Commanding Officers at head quarters, who will immediately forward them to the Commanding Officers of Artillery at the Stations where the men are serving, in order that the regulations for rewarding meritorious conduct may be brought into operation with the least possible delay. There are now 18,000 English regulars in North America, 3,000 of whom are in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The militia of New Brunswick compose several regiments, but their organisation is very defective, and they would find it difficult to raise 3,000 men. Sir John Harvey says he can bring 8,000 men into the field; in that case he must withdraw some of the troops from Canada.—Boston Courier, Feb. 26.

There is some idea of annexing the duties of Paymaster to the second Majors, or senior Captains, and of subjecting their accounts, at short periods, to the supervision of District Paymasters, preparatory to their inspection at the War-Office.—Limerick Chronicle. Fudge!—The present system of the finance arrangements of the Army works well, and no change is probable.—ED. N. & M. G.

Large drafts for Bengal and Madras will embark in the course of May next. About 1,500 recruits are now at Chatham ready for embarkation.

In our last we gave the augmentation of the regiments in India, without being able to particularise the increase. We now publish the detail:—9 companies in India, viz. 1 Serj.-Major; 1 Quartermaster-Serj.; 1 Paymaster-Serj.; 1 Armourer-Serj.; 1 Schoolmaster-Serj.; 1 Orderly-room Clerk; 9 Colour-Serj.; 36 Serj.; 45 Corporals; 1 Drum-Major; 17 Drummers and Fifers, 926 Privates. 1 company as a depot, viz., 1 Colour-Serj.; 3 Serj; 5 Corporals; 1 Drummer; 0 Privates; 74 Supernumeraries.

A fire broke out in Chatham on Thursday morning last at a very early hour, and which would probably have burned down a whole street, but for the unparalleled exertions of the garrison of Chatham. To the soldiers alone can praise be attributed, for the inhabitants gave themselves very little concern, appearing almost to enjoy the scene, while even those whose houses were in danger seemed quite indifferent, knowing how amply ensured their property was if destroyed. We, as the soldier's friend, ask, is it fair that the soldier should be a severe sufferer on these occasions? Yet such is the fact. Scarcely one soldier at a fire returns to his quarters without an injury to his clothing varying from 1s. to 5s. All this and more he suffers on these occasions, while civilians look on, and will neither work an engine nor carry the water. The Commandant, Colonel Ware, thanked the officers and men for their exertions, but the Insurance Offices should also remunerate the soldiers for their losses.

The total rank and file in Ireland for this month is, Artillery, 829; Cavalry, 1,464; Infantry, 15,790.

Lieut.-General Sir John Keane, it is said, taking warning by the interminable affairs of the Deccan and Burtpore, has caused an immediate distribution of prize-money to be made among his army, to their no small satisfaction.

It is believed in military circles that the regiments serving in the North American command will be increased to 1,000 rank and file, and that one skeleton company of each regiment will remain at home, for the purpose of recruiting, the whole of such companies being brigaded together either in Cork or Plymouth.

The five corps reported to have been sent by Sir J. Colborne from Canada across the snow, by land, to the disputed territory in Maine, are the 2d Batt. Royals, 11th, 15th, 71st, and 73d.

There has been a Court of Inquiry held during the week at the Office of the Board of General Officers, Whitehall, on the Paymaster of a regiment stationed in Canada, to investigate certain allegations preferred by his Commanding Officer, concerning bills and other pecuniary transactions. The Court consisted of Colonel Brown, Rifle Brigade, President; Lieut.-Colonel B. Drummond, Fusilier Guards, and Lieut.-Colonel Vandeleur, 10th Hussars. Mr. Anderson, of the War-Office, attended in support of the allegations, and Mr. Elliott acted as Secretary. The report has not yet transpired.

The propriety of forming an African Corps of all deserters, on their identity being proved by satisfactory evidence before a Board of three of the senior Officers of the corps they belong to, instead of bringing them to a Court-Martial as at present (which is never, indeed, more than a Court of Record as to the fact of desertion, and which, moreover, by its sentence of transportation, subjects the country to the expense of a transit beyond the seas, and deprives the Army of the man's services besides), is now under the Secretary of War's consideration, and it is thought that he will bring the subject before Parliament previous to the passing of the next mutiny act.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Rear-Admirals Sir C. Bullen, Kt., and Sir S. Warren, Kt., Companions of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, to be Knights Commanders of the said Order, in the room of Sir T. Rodd and of Sir George Eyre, deceased. Her Majesty has further been pleased to appoint the following officers of the Royal Navy, viz. Capt. Sir T. J. Cochrane, Kt., Capt. S. H. Inglefield, Capt. W. Bowles, and Capt. Hyde Parker, to be Companions of the said Most Honourable Military Order, in the room of Sir C. Bullen and Sir S. Warren, appointed Knights Commanders; and of Captains Sir W. Elliott and E. P. Brenton, deceased.

PORTSMOUTH, April 19.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Orders were received on Saturday by the Admiral Superintendent of the Dock-yard, to prepare the Royal Frederick for launching by the middle of May, and also to change the name to the Queen. The Royal Sovereign, 110, to be built in this yard, is to be called the Royal Frederick. The Powerful was inspected, and her crew mustered, on Tuesday, by Adm. Sir Philip Durham, who was pleased to express his approbation of their state of discipline, and the general appearance of the ship: she is nearly 100 short, and is ordered to Plymouth to endeavour to complete. Childers was commissioned on Tuesday by Commander E. P. Halsted. Benbow is rigging in dock: a few sheets of her copper require replacing—her party of Marines embarked on Tuesday, and yesterday she mustered 220 people on her books. Dublin was taken in dock on Tuesday, and is to be repaired and got ready for commission. Blonde and Cleo are masted, in the basin, and waiting officers and men: no one is yet appointed to either. Etna, Watersnake, Curlew, and Snipe, are in harbour, ready to go to Spithead, but have not any orders; the first and last were paid this day. Hydra steam-frigate is a few men short: she could proceed on service immediately, if required; but probably will not leave the port until next week. Britannia was paid off yesterday; but Adm. Sir P. Durham's flag was flying on board all this day: it is expected they are waiting the arrival of Adm. Fleeming from London before his flag can go up: the latter Admiral's officers have joined, and Lieut. Binstead has commissioned the ship. Pantaloon is in the harbour, ready for sea. Pelican arrived from the Coast of Africa this afternoon: she left Sierra Leone on the 13th March, and is quite healthy. Ships in Port—Powerful and Pelican at Spithead; Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Benbow, Royal George yt., Hydra, Childers, Watersnake, Snipe, Curlew, Etna, Pantaloon, Messenger steamer; Emerald, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, April 18.—(From our own Correspondent.)—April 12th—Stirling Castle, 74, was taken out of dock, having had her few defects made good. Belleisle, 72, and Druid, 44, were commissioned this day; the former by Capt. J. Toup Nicolas, and the latter by Lt. G. Goldsmith, for Capt. Lord H. J. S. Churchill; Belleisle is to have a complement of 510, and Druid 290 men; both ships have been taken into dock and had their copper scrubbed, and since masted. Arrived the Rochester lighter from Woolwich with stores; and the Devon lighter sailed with stores for Lord John Hay's squadron, coast of Spain. Sixteen blacksmiths' apprentices were this day entered in the Dock-yard. 13th—Sailed Stakesby transport for Deptford. 16th—Racehorse, 18, Com. Henry W. Cranford, was hauled on the graving slip to have her bottom examined, having been on shore in the River St. Lawrence; on inspecting her, it was found that only a small portion of copper had been damaged, which has been replaced; her other defects are trifling, and she will be soon ready again for sea. 17th—Sailed Gorgon steam-frigate for Sheerness, having the Tortoise coal depot under her charge; also sailed the Goodwill lighter, with stores for Sheerness and Chatham. 18th—Sailed Swale, tender to the Astræa, with stores for the packets at Falmouth. Thirty-four shipwrights' apprentices were this day entered in the Dock-yard. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Belleisle, Druid, Racehorse, and Alonzo transport.

DEPTFORD, 17th April.—Sailed Vigilant freight-ship for Cape of Good Hope, calling at Portsmouth to take on board the Melville's lower-deck guns and carriages, and the Morning Star to West India Docks, to take in stores for the Cape and Trincomalee. Remain—Asia for Bermuda, and Cambrian for Ascension; Hero, Navarino, and Cornwall emigrant ships for Australia; Parkfield and Blenheim, fitting for convicts. The Hero sailed for Leith to embark emigrants. The Deptford Dock-gates are rapidly repairing.

About five o'clock on Saturday afternoon, the usual hour at which the mail leaves Liverpool for Dublin, a dreadful accident befel Her Majesty's steamer Urgent, Master J. Emerson, which was appointed to convey the mail-bags of that day, by the bursting of both her boilers, by which nine men were very severely scalded, though, we are happy to say, none of them dangerously, with the exception of one whose life is despaired of, and whose name is Peter Hughes. At the time the explosion took place, the passengers and mail-bags were on board, and the vessel on the eve of departure; fortunately, however, the passengers were all on the quarter-deck, and escaped without injury, a great portion of the steam escaping through the funnel. The whole of the nine persons scalded belonged to the vessel, and were all below in the engine-room at the time. The cause of the accident is at present unknown, and it is the more unaccountable from the fact that the steam had not been stopped from escaping more than a few moments when the explosion took place.

In the Admiralty Court, on Tuesday, Lieut. Wylde, and the officers and men of the Guard Service on the Coast of Northumberland, recovered 60*l.* from the owners of the Lapwing for salvage services rendered to her while on a voyage from Sunderland to London, heavily laden with coals. The greatest contradiction existed in this case as to matters of fact, but it was evident that the vessel was in great danger, and the Master was unacquainted with the locality. Through the instrumentality of Lieut. Wylde and the men of the Coast Guard, the Master altered his course, and got safe into port. The conduct of Lieut. Wylde was entitled to the highest praise.

Q. E. D. is in some respects mistaken. We should not have inserted the minutes of Lieut. Somerville's evidence before the Military Commission, had he not himself previously published it, and sent to us and to other papers printed copies. If there is any blame in the matter, it must rest with the Lieutenant. We are perfectly well aware that, until the Report is issued, the evidence before the Commission is considered "secret and confidential."

The Admiralty have issued an order that seamen shall be supplied with tobacco at the reduced price of 1*s.* per lb.

At the Naval College, on the 9th inst., the following gentlemen qualified for Chaplain and Schoolmaster.—Rev. J. Jenkins, late Barham—Naval Instructor, Mr. J. Moncur.

Modeste, 18, Com. Eyres (1837), is ordered from the West Indies to the Cape of Good Hope station.

Lord Morpeth's brother relinquished the command of the Wolverine, not because she was ordered to the Coast of Africa, but because he (Capt. Howard) had been promoted; and his successor, Commander Tucker, had reached this vessel from England, and superseded him in the command.

The Zebra and Weasle, sloops of war, left Gibraltar, for Malta, on 26th and 29th ult. Harlequin, 18, and Wasp, 16, were at Gibraltar on 28th. Harlequin was to proceed in a day or two to the Coast of Africa.

The following Naval officers have been examined before the Commission:—Admirals Sir E. Codrington, Sir W. Parker, and Griffiths; Captains Wise, Deans, Dundas, and Jenkin Jones; Commander Saunders; Lieut. G. F. Somerville; and Sir W. Burnet, Physician-General to the Navy. It is reported that the inquiry of the Commission will be extended to the junior officers of both services. It is also reported that the Government intend to renew the system of allowing pensions to Warrant Officers' widows.

THE BRITANNIA.—It had been our hope that this ship would, on her being re-commissioned, have had her full complement of Lieutenants (8), because, as under the depot system of entering seamen, she will have seldom less than 500 or 600 men on board, over whom much vigilance is required; but we go farther and say, that the flag-ships at Portsmouth and Plymouth are, from their situation, the very centre of our port security; they ought to be the first to discover accidents in the harbour, fires in the Victualling, Dock-yard, and Gun-wharf departments; and, to keep a strict look out, their quarter-decks, night and day, should never be without a Lieutenant on the watch.—Hants Tel.

"H.M.S. Wellesley, off Kurachee, Feb. 2.

"I sit down to write you this after a very tolerable day's work, considering that we have battered the fort of Munhara down as decently as anything could possibly be done. I am sailing largely from my first intention when I sat down, which was to tell you all we have done since we left Bombay.

"Imprimis.—We embarked Her Majesty's 40th regiment on Sunday the 27th ult., left the ship at dusk in the evening, and pulled into the landing-place at Mandavee. There did not seem to have been any previous arrangement made, for we just took as many soldiers as we could into our boat, and stowed the poor fellows into the first patamar we could find, and I think you will allow that we did our work very decently;—we began embarking about ten P.M., with the men, and they were all on board the ship (which was lying three miles and a half from shore) at half-past two. On the 29th, P.M., we sailed for a place called Hujamree, at one of the mouths of the Indus, where we found the Berenice, with the 2d Grenadiers, who had disembarked, and were actually over the bar, and about to land, when the Admiral received despatches from Sir J. Keane, which were worded just as I should have imagined from his character, and as all orders should be, viz.,' Proceed to Karachee, and take it.' There was no mistake in these orders; no reading over twice is required in that sort of order. We sailed from Hujamree on the 31st, and arrived here last evening. At eight this morning we began disembarking the troops, and cleared for action- by the by, they fired on our guard-boat last night, but hurt no one. We sent a flag of truce, offering them terms, which they would not accept, but the Admiral wished to spare them, for they could make no resistance, as they had only seven guns and twenty men. We have since heard that they were to have had an augmentation of 100 men this evening, but to return. To the second flag of truce they returned a message to the Admiral, saying that they were much obliged to him for sending the second time, but they were determined to abide by their former decision, of holding it as long as they could. The Admiral then went himself with the troops, and they fired on one of our boats, which was full of men, but luckily missed her. But the fellows in the fort would not give in. We then opened our fire, as did also the Algerine, and we fired 50 shots, and knocked the walls pretty fairly about their ears before they quitted, and then they began to run, but we had pickets placed, so that we took the whole twenty prisoners. We have now (seven P.M.) a boat, with a flag of truce in her, gone up to summon the town. To-morrow I shall give you all particulars, but I must tell you the finish. We ceased firing at half-past twelve, and a prettier piece of work could hardly have been done. Our flag was planted in the fort by Lieut. Jenkins, of the Indian Navy.

"Feb. 3.—Our boat, with the flag of truce, returned this morning, and they have, I am sorry to say, acceded to our terms, so that there will be no more fighting. The head of the place has written a glaring account to Hyderabad of the bravery of the Governor of the fort we battered, in which he says he held possession for an hour and a half against the fire of a 74-gun ship and 5000 sailors, for which he will most probably get promotion. I believe the 40th take possession of Karachee to day, but about their further movements I know nothing as yet. I have just heard that the fort would have been given up to us had we sent up to the town at once, which is at the distance of six miles from us, but I am very glad we fired a shot, as it will, I am in hopes, be the means of our obtaining batta.

"The Berenice sails for Bombay this evening, with the whole account, which I suppose will be in print. There is no knowing when we shall return."

Scout, 18, Com. R. Craigie (1828), is ordered home from the coast of Africa, to be paid off; she has been in commission since December, 1835.

Andromache, 28, Captain R. L. Baynes, C.B. (1828), was at anchor off Sacrificios, near Vera Cruz, the first week of Feb.; she is ordered to England, and will be taken into dock to be inspected and repaired, having touched the ground in the St. Lawrence.

Harrier, 18, Com. W. H. H. Carew (1834), is ordered to Portsmouth to be paid off; she has been employed in South America since she has been in commission; she is expected in England about May.

Ringdove, 16, Com. the Hon. K. Stewart (1838), is ordered home from the West Indies, in consequence of having been on shore; she will be taken into dock to be inspected, and, when put in repair, will return to her station.

Charybdis, 3, Lieut.-Com. the Hon. R. Gore (1832), arrived at Port Royal from Bermuda on 16th Feb., and sailed on 20th for Carthagena.

PRINCESS CHARLOTTE, MALTA HARBOUR, 12TH MARCH.—We are hourly looking for despatches from the Ambassador at Constantinople to summon the fleet to the Dardanelles, as the Turkish ships are preparing for sea with the intention of attacking the Egyptian fleet; we are ready to start at the shortest notice, being heartily tired of so much inactivity. The weather here for the past few days has been severe, and the Commodore Superintendent's ship Ceylon has been struck with lightning, but no lives were lost. Pembroke, 74, is gone to Athens to relieve Dido, 20. We hear that the French ships in the Levant are to be increased this summer to ten sail of the line, but for what purpose remains doubtful. Rodney, 92, will depart home immediately on the arrival of Ganges, 84.

It is generally reported that the new three decker to be launched at Portsmouth in May, will be fitted for the flag of Admiral Fleeming, and that that splendid ship will form part of the squadron to be assembled in the summer for evolution, in order to test her comparative merits with other ships of the same class.

The Gleaner steamer has just left Woolwich for Holyhead, where Lieutenant Snell and present crew of this vessel will change over to the Kite steamer, and return to Woolwich to fit for particular service in the West Indies.

The following are the rewards of zeal and perseverance of a seizure made by Lieutenant Lester and crew of Coast-Guard station, Sutton, Lincolnshire, a short time since. Four horses, two carts, and fourteen hogsheads of tobacco, besides gin, brandy, and cigars; one man sent to jail. Shares — Lieutenant, 220*l.*; chief boatman, 87*l.*; commissioned do, 68*l.*; plain boatman, 53*l.*

The Prospero steamer will sail from Woolwich for Pembroke; the Mastiff and Woodlark tender on Sunday to the Downs; the Carron has gone to Sheerness.

Several changes have occurred on the West India and North American station, consequent upon the death of Capt. Foote, of H.M.S. Crocodile. Commodore Douglas is in command pro tempore. (See Appointments.)

BLOCKADE OF MEXICO.

COUNT SEBASTIANI TO VISCOUNT PALMERSTON.

London, April 3, 1839.

My Lord,—I am expressly charged by the King, my master, to make known to the British Government the deep regret which His Majesty feels at the removal which has taken place of a Mexican pilot from on board the Express packet. When Admiral Baudin unfortunately directed this measure, he was not aware that the vessel belonged to the British Marine. This incident, therefore, was the result of a mistake, and in no degree of a want of respect for the English flag. Sincerely deplored by the Government of the King, as well as by the Commander of our squadron, a similar error will not occur again; and the strictest instructions will secure henceforward the most scrupulous and vigilant attention, under similar circumstances. In conveying to the knowledge of your Excellency these explanations, I venture, in the name of my Government, to express to you its confidence that they will appear sufficient to the British Government; and that nothing will henceforward disturb the union which we ourselves have so much at heart to maintain unimpaired between the two countries, as well as between the two flags.

Accept, my Lord, the renewed assurances of my high consideration. H. SEBASTIANI.

VISCOUNT PALMERSTON TO COUNT SEBASTIANI.

Foreign office, April 9, 1839.

Monsieur le Comte,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's letter of the 3d instant, in which your Excellency informs me that you have been expressly charged by the King, your master, to testify to the British Government the profound regret which His Majesty had felt at the removal which has taken place of a Mexican pilot from on board the Express packet. Your Excellency further informs me that when Admiral Baudin unfortunately directed this measure, he was not aware that the vessel belonged to the British Marine, and that the measure, therefore, was the result of mistake only, and not in any way of a want of respect for the English flag; that being sincerely deplored by the Government of the King, as well as by the Commander of the French squadron, a similar error will not occur again, and that the strictest instructions will secure henceforward the most scrupulous and vigilant attention under analogous circumstances. I have not failed to lay your Excellency's communication before the Queen, my mistress, and I have great satisfaction in stating to your Excellency, by Her Majesty's commands, that the explanation of this affair on the part of His Majesty the King of the French, as conveyed in your Excellency's letter, is entirely satisfactory. I will only add that Her Majesty's Government fully participate in the friendly sentiments expressed by your Excellency on the part of the Government of France, and that they sincerely trust that nothing may ever arise to impair the strength of that union which now happily subsists between the two countries.—I have, &c. PALMERSTON.

THE PILOT AND THE EXPRESS.—Count Sebastiani's letter to Lord Palmerston, relative to the French outrage on the British flag, attributes the whole affair to incredible ignorance and blundering on the part of Admiral Baudin. "When," says the diplomatist, "Admiral Baudin unfortunately directed this measure, he was not aware that the vessel belonged to the British Marine." Not aware that the vessel belonged to the British Marine, indeed! Why the whole despatch of Lieut. Croke to Mr. Giffard, H.M.'s Vice-Consul at Vera Cruz, gives at least the "he circumstantial," if not the "the direct," to this statement. What does Lieut. Croke say occurred after the shot from the Creole, dropped unnecessarily close to H.M.'s packet, and a French officer came on board from the Prince de Joinville's vessel to demand the Mexican pilot? "I desired the French Lieutenant," says Lieut. Croke, "to be careful that he perfectly understood me (the conversation having been carried on in French). He said he perfectly did. I replied, that as to the pilot, the giving him up was impossible—First, that he had the greatest objection to go, secondly, that he was piloting H.M.'s brig Express to Sacrificios, and under the British flag, and unless he was ordered to use force, I certainly would not allow him to leave the ship. The French Lieutenant replied that he was ordered to take the pilot by force."—"That it was an order from Rear-Admiral Baudin, and must be obeyed without reserve;" and yet Count Sebastiani says, "When Admiral Baudin ordered this measure he was not aware that the vessel belonged to the British Marine." We are therefore asked to believe that this most deliberate and outrageous insult to the British flag, perpetrated by Louis Philippe's Admiral and Louis Philippe's son on the British flag, was all "a mistake" if the French officer who dared to come on board H.M.'s vessel for such a purpose, had—to use the words of a gallant Naval Captain—been "bundled into the sea," the mistake would not have remained so long unexplained as it did.—Herald.

Though it is true that four sail-of-the-line (the Benbow and Illustrious at Portsmouth, Blenheim at Sheerness, and the Belleisle at this port,) are ordered to be brought forward for commission; there are no less than eight line-of-battle ships to be shortly paid off, having served their time, viz.:—Rodney, 92; Asia, 84; Vanguard, 80; Belleraphon, 78; Talavera, 74; Hercules, 74; Minden, 74, and Pembroke, 74. No increase of force is therefore contemplated, nor can any considerable addition to the Navy be made without an application to Parliament, as the number of seamen and marines to be employed for the year is limited to 34,105. Equally groundless are the reports from the same quarter that the Royal Adelaide, guard-ship at this port, is ordered to be inspected and prepared as a sea-going ship; her place to be taken by San Josef. No orders of the kind have been received here. We believe the following is a correct statement of the movements now going on in the Naval departments. In addition to the above, four sail-of-the-line ordered for commission, the Dublin, 50; Blonde, 42; Druid, 42; Curaçoa, 24; Cito, 18; and Childers, 18; are also to be commissioned at the various ports; and the Calcutta, 84; Agincourt, 74; Hawke, 74; are ordered to be prepared, and to have their sea-equipments got ready in the event of their being wanted for commission. The Powerful, 84, is ready for sea at Portsmouth, and the Winchester, 50, has just been commissioned.—Devonport Telegraph.

In consequence of Mr. Mitchell, Mate of the Powerful, having written a letter to the Editor of the Morning Herald, the Admiralty Board have interfered with the strong hand of authority, to prevent future discussions on Naval matters by officers when in active employ. They have intimated to Captain Napier their displeasure at his letter on the constitution of the Admiralty Board, in a letter to that officer containing a reprimand; but Mr. Mitchell was not treated so indulgently. He was directed to appear before Sir Philip Durham, and was verbally reprimanded and admonished, on Monday last.

Last week the following circular was made public at the principal Naval ports of the kingdom:—

Admiralty, April 6, 1839.

SIR,—The attention of my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty having been called to the frequent instances which have recently occurred of publications in the public newspapers, on subjects connected with various points of the Naval Service, by officers in active employment, they desire that you will convey to all the officers under your orders, the expression of their disapprobation of a practice which they cannot but consider as most injurious to the discipline and best interests of the Naval Service. I am, &c., JOHN BARROW, Secretary

Sir Philip Durham, &c.

[Upon this circular An Old Naval Officer writes to us: "My opinion is that this order will greatly increase correspondence under various signatures."]

The immediate cause of the above order was the following letter addressed to the Editor of the Morning Herald:—

SIR,—I observe in a paragraph in your most valuable paper of March 27th, that "H.M.S. Powerful, Capt. Napier, has, it seems lost several men by desertion, and it is found impracticable to complete her crew for active service. This is said to be owing to the adoption of some novel mode of propelling the ship by a machine resembling a tread-wheel, which the sailors think degrading, as resembling the labour of convicts, and not that of her native element." Allow me, Sir, to inform you, that as to the desertion, which takes place more or less in every ship fitting out, has been of little moment; and those who have deserted were the most worthless characters, and whose consciences must have told them they would never do for the Powerful, which, from the day of her being commissioned (the day I had the honour of joining her, consequently, I presume, I have had the opportunity of judging), has advanced in the stages of discipline, until she has arrived at her present state—a real serviceable man-of-war. The men which she has are superior to those of most ships which I have seen fitted out at Portsmouth within the last 10 months (the period of my belonging to H.M.S. Excellent, the gunnery establishment in this harbour), for I have paid particular attention to it, as the Navy, my profession, has always been a subject of the greatest interest to me; and, Sir, as to it being quite "impracticable to complete her crew for active service," it is quite a mistake, for we continue to enter very good men, some of whom are as good as any in the Naval Service; and as to the tread-wheel that is said to be on board, there has never been a machine of the sort fitted, neither is there now, nor is there any prospect of there ever being, much to our sorrow in the event of a war, by which many flying enemies might have been overtaken. This cannot, therefore, be the cause—so that sailors cannot think it "degrading, or resembling the labour of convicts, and not that of their native element." In my humble opinion I believe it to have originally arisen from interested parties, fearing that "real good men" would hasten to serve under such a gallant and celebrated Captain, in preference to entering their service; but I feel happy that their plans have not succeeded, and that the Powerful, with her usual allowance of powder and shot, together with her 320 live shells, and experienced gunners which have long since been on board, only requires about 120 men to complete her 645 (which are ready, if wanted, on board the flag-ship at this port) to go into action within a few minutes' notice, and fight as good an action as ever was fought. The only misfortune is that both the English officer and sailor have not the opportunity, like those of France, to exercise their abilities occasionally upon some insulting nation's fleet, castle, fort, coast, town, or power, to keep themselves in practice, and induce others to join the Navy, in order that they might join in what Jack would call the "lark."

JAMES J. MITCHELL, R.N., Mate, H.M.S. Powerful.

H.M.S. Powerful, Spithead, April 2, 1839.

ROYAL MARINES.—2d Lieut. Brooker, of the Chatham division, is ordered to Woolwich for embarkation. 2d Lieuts. Mercer and Lawrence are ordered to join Marine Artillery at Portsmouth, on probation. A detachment of 1 Corporal and 9 privates is ordered on board H.M.S. Terror. A detachment of 1 Capt. (Whitcombe), 2 Subalterns (2d Lieuts. Whiting and Farmar), 3 Serjs., 3 Corporals, 2 Fifers, and 114 Privates, is ordered to embark on board H.M.S. Blenheim. Capt. Sullock, First-Lieut. Brown, and Second Lieut. Pengelly, will this day embark with a party of Marines on board the Belleisle, and First Lieut. Fosbroke, and Second Lieut. Maxwell will embark with a party of Marines on board the Druid. Capt. Searle, and Second Lieuts. Harrison and Alexander, have embarked in the Benbow.

East India Intelligence.

That portion of the overland mail from India via Marseilles was received in town on Thursday morning; the East India Company had, however, received their despatches by a special messenger late on Friday evening last. The dates now brought are, from Calcutta, Feb. 14th; Madras, 19th; and Bombay, 25th. The next steamer will be despatched for England on 25th March, and will bring letters from Calcutta 14th, and Madras 16th. The London mail of Dec. 23d arrived at Bombay by the Atalanta on 15th February.

The affairs of the East are progressing more favourably than was anticipated. The decisive line of conduct pursued by Sir John Keane has given success to the negotiations which have been brought about by the surrender of Hyderabad and the fortress of Bukkar into the British possession, temporarily only, on the condition of the Ameer of Khirepore during the campaign. The Ameers of Scinde have signed a treaty with the British Commander, which secures to us the future command of the Indus, and abundant supplies for future operations. Kamran, the ruler of Herat, it appears, has not declared himself hostile to the British; and it was reported that Herat was again about to be invested by the Persians, which would render our alliance of greater importance in the present position of the Army. It is now confirmed that despatches from the Home Government had met Sir Henry Fane on the Indus, and that he would return to re-assume the command of the Army of the Indus. Letters report the illness of Runjeet Singh, and his heir has expressed decided opposition to the present police of the old Maharajah. The news from the north-west of Feb. 14 has brought the Army on far in advance. The passage of the Indus has, however, been effected by the warlike array of Shah Soojah; and that doughty monarch, surrounded by his myrmidons, and supported by the diplomatic terror of the British embassy, is encamped at Shikarpore. The town of Shikarpore lies about 22 miles westward of the Husun-belee, and is said to present but a very poor appearance. No news of a pacific nature had reached the Army of the Indus on the 24th Jan. Lieut. Pottinger, whose motions are in themselves, or have been made, a perfect enigma, is said to be on the most cordial terms with Shah Kamran. General Allard died of an affection of the heart at Peshawur on the 23d Jan. Sir Willoughby Cotton had marched, with two Brigades of Infantry and one of Cavalry, to the succour of Sir J. Keane. The bridge of boats for the passage of the river is nearly complete: its construction is said to reflect the highest honour to those who have placed it. Sir A. Burnes is with the advanced force. The Governor-General and suite arrived at Delhi on 12th Feb. Sir H. Fane is at Rohree.

Karachee has dared to offer the first insult—resistance we cannot call it—to the British flag. That wretched town has already paid the awful penalty, being, as we are informed, at this moment a heap of ruins. The Admiral, on landing the force, had given orders to hold everything in readiness to punish any attempt at resistance. Some matchlocks were unfortunately fired on the troops; the Wellesley instantly poured in her broadside upon the devoted town, and, as we are informed, with terrible effect. The destruction, however, is, we believe, limited to the buildings. H.M.'s 49th Regt., and 2d Grenadier Regt., No. 1, occupied the place without further obstruction. The town capitulated on the 3d inst.—Bombay Gazette, 9th Feb.—See Naval Intelligence.

The following is an extract from a letter from Shah Soojah's Camp at Mumoondee Khundee, dated 31st Dec.:—"I have only time at this moment to put you in possession of the following highly important intelligence just received; namely, that the Ameer of Khyrpore has at length submitted, and has concluded an alliance, offensive and defensive, with the British Government, yielding into our possession for the campaign the fort of Bukkur, which gives us the command of the Indus. For this very important advantage the Government is indebted to the talent and perseverance of Sir A. Burnes, whose conduct throughout has been deserving of the highest praise."—Hurkaru, Feb. 1.

The following is a description of this formerly very important fortress, supposed to have been founded by Alexander, and the post where he rested on his way to the ocean:—"The island fortress, Bukkar, stands upon an oval flint rock three quarters of a mile in circumference. It is strongly built, but is overlooked by the bank upon which stands the town of Rohree. It commands the river, and all boats that pass up and down pay a toll."

We are sorry to record the loss of the Kellie Castle, Johnston, from Calcutta and Singapore for China, which was wrecked on the Louisa shoal on the 14th Nov. last, at half past 11 at night. No lives were lost, and the passengers' baggage, and some of the opium, were saved. The crews and passengers were distributed among several vessels which were in company with her when she took the ground.

The Bengal Herald of the 10th Feb. gives a report of Col. A. White, Resident at Assam.

The 6th Bengal N.I. was to leave Dinapore, 5th Feb. for the cantonments at Bareilly; and the 56th, and also the 28th regiments, were also daily expected to reach Dinapore.

The Bengal advices bring an account of the stoppage of the China trade, in consequence of the detection of some smuggling transactions in which the mercantile house of Innes and Co., it is alleged, were implicated, the Chinese Government having ordered the expulsion of Mr. Innes within three days, and determined that trade should not be resumed till that individual left Canton. An aggravated insult on the foreign merchants was attempted, by the intended execution of a Chinese, immediately under the flag of the American Factory, which was prevented by the liberal use of the rattan in the hands of the servants of the factory, and some sailors who had landed.

The last letters received from China, dated January 1, give a prospect of the settlement of the dispute, and the trade was to be opened on the morning of the 2d.

We have to record the loss of the Company's war steamer Semiramis, wrecked on 13th Feb., on the Point of Setal, near the mouth of the Indus. An extraordinary high tide having covered the low lands, deceived her pilot, so that at the recess of the tide she was left high and dry in a clover field. H.M.S. Wellesley had been despatched to recover her engines, but the vessel itself it is supposed will be lost.

The Scinde Force.—We have been favoured with another communication, dated Nourhera Ratan, 11th Jan., which is two marches from the frontier of Scinde. The plot apparently begins to thicken, and the Shah Soojah part of our policy to become more questionable, the more circumstances develope themselves. The Hyderabad Ameer had forbidden his people to afford any assistance to the Bombay force, which had greatly retarded its movements. Sir J. Keane expected to be at Hyderabad on the 12th January, or a day or two later at farthest, as 30,000 Beloochee juwans were collected in the town, who promised to exterminate Sir J. Keane and what they affect to consider as his paltry force. Sir J. Keane, in the meantime, is to be reinforced by 4,000 more troops from Bombay (his actual force independent of this expectancy is 500) 1200 of whom are Europeans. Of course Sir J. Keane must attack and beat these Hyderabadees at all risks, for a bult of hesitation would rally round him all the unquiet spirits far and near. Not a soul of the Affghans has made a move in favour of Shah Soojah. What has enhanced the disgust of the Affghans, is Runjeet Singh's being a party to the restoration of Shah Soojah. What do you think, by the way, of this puppet King that we are about to serve? When the Bhawul Khan met him, he said, "My army is behind me; I have plenty of those cut-throats (pointing to the officers of the contingent), but they are a rude race, who never before were in a royal presence, and that accounts for their impudence in speaking before me."—Hurkaru, February 9.

NUMERICAL FORCE OF THE ARMIES AND NAVIES OF THE NORTHERN POWERS.

ACCORDING to the most recent, authentic, and official reports (up to the months of Jan. and Feb. 1839), the actual military force of the Germanic Confederation (including Austria and Prussia), consists of 1,417,400 men; of which Austria furnishes 744,000, Prussia 451,300, and the states of the second and third rank in the Confederation the remainder, amounting to 222,100 men.

The forces of Austria consist of 58 regts. of infantry of the line of four battalions, 17 regts. of infantry of the frontier, of three battalions, 20 battalions of grenadiers; one Tyrolese regt. of chasseurs trailleurs (riflemen), of three battalions; 12 regts. of light infantry, of three battalions; five battalions in garrison; eight regts. of cuirassiers, of six squadrons; six regts. of dragoons, of six squadrons; seven regts. of light horse, of eight squadrons, four regts. of lancers, of eight squadrons; five regts. of artillery, making 1,592 pieces of ordnance, one fusilier regt. and one regt. of bombardiers, 1,000 strong.

The Austrian regts. are, numerically speaking, the strongest in Europe. In the event of war, this number is augmented by 89 battalions of landwehr, by the Hungarian levy of 30,000 men, and by the frontier reserve of 62,000 men. (The undermentioned troops of the line, 13 regiments of infantry and 10 regiments of hussars, are native Hungarians.)

The Navy of Austria consists of eight ships of the line, eight corvettes, six brigs, seven galliots, and several smaller vessels; total 47 sail. Austria keeps, moreover, on the Danube, as the frontier cordon of Turkey, a flotilla of 25 boats, mounted with 112 pieces of artillery and served by a regular battalion. The number of fortified cities in the empire is 28, and of fortresses 58.

The Prussian forces are composed of the royal guard, viz., two regts. of infantry, two regts. of grenadiers, one regt. of infantry of the reserve, four regts. of landwehr (of two battalions each), one battalion of light infantry, one battalion of arquebusiers of Neufchatel, one picked battalion, one regt. of the guards, one regt. of cuirassiers, one regt. of dragoons, one regt. of hussars, two regts. of lancers (of four squadrons each, one picked squadron), a brigade of artillery of 60 guns, a company of pioneers, two companies of invalids, a company of under officers, and six garrison companies. 32 regts. of the line, of three battalions each; 32 regts. of infantry of the landwehr, of three battalions; eight regts. of infantry of the reserve, of two battalions, four regts. of infantry of the reserve of the landwehr, of two battalions, four battalions of light infantry, of two companies, four battalions of arquebusiers, of two companies, and 18 garrison companies; eight regts. of dragoons, of six squadrons; four regts. of dragoons, of six squadrons; 12 regts. of hussars, of six squadrons, eight regts. of lancers, of six squadrons; 96 squadrons of lancers of the landwehr; eight squadrons of lancers of the landwehr of the reserve; eight brigades of artillery, each consisting of three troops of horse, 12 companies of foot and a company of artificers, with 1,400 pieces of ordnance. Three corps of engineers with eight companies of pioneers, 18 garrison companies, 10 companies of invalids; one corps of mounted orderlies and 10 brigades of gendarmerie.

This summary includes the line and war reserve.

The landwehr of the second levy (180,000 men) is destined for the defence of the fortified towns and the interior of the country, and is not accounted for in this list. In the kingdom of Prussia there are six fortified towns and 21 fortresses.

The remainder furnished by the other states of the Confederation are, Bavaria, 16 regts. of infantry, four battalions of charseurs, two regts. of cuirassiers, six regts. of light horse two regts. of artillery, with 96 pieces of ordnance—total 68,000 men.

Saxony—One battalion of guards, four regts of infantry of the line, three battalions of light infantry, three regts of cavalry, one regt. of foot artillery, one brigade of horse artillery, and 42 guns—total 17,800 men.

Hanover—16 battalions of infantry, four regts. of cavalry, one regt. of artillery, and 36 guns—total 29,060.

Wirtemberg—Eight regts of infantry, one squadron of mounted orderlies, four regts. of cavalry, two battalions of artillery, and 36 guns—total 22,406.

Baden—Five regts. of infantry, three regts. of cavalry, one brigade of artillery, [illegible] total 27,000.

[illegible] ship at dusk in the evening, and [illegible] ty. [illegible] sailed into the landing-place at Mandavve. There did not seem to have been any previous arrangement made, for we just took as many soldiers as we could into our boat, and stowed the poor fellows into the first patamar we could find, and I think you will allow that we did our work very decently;—we began embarking about ten P.M., with the men, and they were all on board the ship (which was lying three miles and a half from shore) at half-past two. [illegible] [illegible]

Brunswick—One regt. of infantry, one regt. of cavalry, one company of artillery, and six guns—total 3,700.

The two Mecklenburghs—five battalions of infantry, one squadron of cavalry, one corps of artillery, 10 guns, and one garrison company—total 5,960.

Oldenburg—Infantry and one company of artillery with six guns—3,450. The other small principalities, and the four free towns—27,280.

Grand Total—222,100.

Besides these forces, there exists also a reserve in case of war. Mayence, Landau, and Luxemburg, are strong places included in the Confederation.

The forces of Russia are

Imperial Guard	43,000
127 Regiments of Infantry of the Line	508,000
96 Regiments of Garrison Troops	108,000

I will now proceed to point out those disadvantages under which I conceive the Infantry of the Line and the Cavalry labour. I do not complain of a certain boon which the two Ordnance Corps enjoy; they deserve all they have got; but I complain that the Infantry of the Line and the Cavalry do not enjoy it also. I allude more particularly to the Captains of Engineers and Artillery going at once from senior Captains of their respective corps to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, avoiding the rank of Major altogether, and thus, in one day, going over the heads of innumerable Majors of the Line, and some of the Cavalry, who may have been serving in that rank for a very long period. Has not a similar boon been granted to the Marines? The defence set up for this invidious and most unfair distinction perhaps is, that officers of the Cavalry and of the Line purchase their commissions, whereas those of the two Ordnance Corps do not. There are, however, vast numbers of persons in the Army who, it would seem, are entirely lost sight of by those who advocate this system;—I mean the non-purchasing officers, the multitude of those who cannot purchase. Are these, then, to be utterly forgotten? I feel no hesitation in saying that there were, during the war (and very probably still are), a greater number of officers of the Line unable to purchase than of those who were able to do so. I was very particularly acquainted, during a long period of service, with many regiments of the Line, and I speak, therefore, with much confidence on that point. With Cavalry regiments I believe the reverse to be the case; yet there are many amongst them who cannot command funds to purchase. Does any one believe that the promotion of the non-purchasing officers of the Infantry and Cavalry (with a very few exceptions, possibly) has been more rapid, or as much so, as that of the two Ordnance corps? There are too many of the non-purchasing officers of the Line, Captains of no very old date, but with from thirty to forty years' service, and with wounds received in the Peninsula, at Waterloo or Elsinore; yet, without some extraordinary piece of good luck, they may calculate on holding their present rank for many years to come. Without doubt, in the Artillery and Engineers may be found Captains of equally long service; but how different are their prospects! As soon as the latter become senior Captains of their corps, the next step MUST be to that of Lieutenant-Colonel: no other person can be appointed to the vacancy; and it is right and fair that all promotion should go in their corps. But how is it with the Linesman when he becomes senior Captain and a vacancy occurs? He MAY (not must, as a matter of course) be promoted to—what? not to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, but to a Majority; and in that rank he may, and most probably will, go on serving for many, many years; by which time the Captain of Artillery or Engineers, who was promoted (let us suppose) on the same day, will be well on to the rank of a full Colonel!

If the promotion in the two Ordnance corps is not rapid, it is sure; but the non-purchasing officer of the Line is by no means certain of stepping into any vacancy which may fall in his regiment, nor need he be surprised, however much he may be disappointed, to see a sprig of aristocracy, from another corps, appointed to that vacancy to which he justly considers himself entitled. Such things cannot take place in the two Ordnance corps; and I may here remark, that although (very properly) no Cavalry or Infantry officer can be promoted into the Engineers or Artillery, the reverse has often been the case; and one of our Infantry regiments is commanded by an officer who was promoted from the Artillery into the Line. I may also be permitted to observe the immense advantage which the Lieut.-Colonels of the Ordnance corps possess over those of the Cavalry and Infantry by their regimental promotion. A few regimental vacancies, occasioned by deaths or resignations, cause a Lieut.-Colonel of the Ordnance corps to become a full Colonel, without the smallest reference to hundreds of senior Lieut.-Colonels of the Line, and some of Cavalry, over whose heads they pass at once. Nor is this all; for (unless I am much mistaken) the pay of the full Colonel of Engineers and Artillery is superior to that of a Major-General of Infantry. If, on the other hand, a Lieut.-Colonel of Infantry or Cavalry becomes a full Colonel by sheer length of service (most probably in tropical climates), he gains not a fraction of additional pay, but jogs on, commanding his regiment with the same pay as a Lieut.-Colonel. The non-purchasing officer of Cavalry and Infantry has nearly as great a chance of becoming Emperor of Morocco at the close of a long Military life, as he has of being a General Officer; and still more improbable is it that he ever becomes Colonel of a regiment, unless befriended by high and powerful interest, or some unusual run of good fortune. Those, however, of the Ordnance Corps must become General Officers and Colonels Commandant of Battalions if they live long enough; and although the chances are much against any individual who starts in life as a Second Lieutenant of Engineers or Artillery living to obtain those desirable objects, there is, nevertheless, a prospect for them in the distant horizon, which their brother soldiers of the other two arms have not in perspective.

Of those officers who have purchased some, or the whole, of their Commissions, there are not a few whose promotion has been anything but rapid, although long and arduous services in different parts of the globe have been performed by them. It is scarcely fair to pick out and to cull, as general examples of the rapidity of promotion by purchase, some names from amongst the Infantry who, backed by money and Parliamentary, or some other powerful interest, have made rapid strides from the rank of Ensign to Lieutenant-Colonel. Such promotions have been to the full as galling and disgusting to multitudes of their brother Linesmen, as to the members of other branches of the Army over whose heads these favoured ones have flown.

The justice of awarding a lower rate of pay to the Infantry than to all the other branches, may well be questioned also, with the exception of the Cavalry. As the Commissions of the Cavalry are purchased at a higher price than those of the Infantry, it seems but fair and reasonable that their pay should be in proportion. I have already declared, and I again repeat it with all sincerity, that I conceive the two Ordnance Corps richly deserve all they have got; but I appeal to those who may have given themselves the trouble of weighing well, and looking with a totally unprejudiced eye at the subject on which I have ventured an opinion, whether the Infantry of the Line have not claims equally strong in every possible point of view? Are the services of the Line at home, in the colonies, in the field, in sieges, storms, escalades, and in every sort and description of warfare, less prominent, less trying, less important than those of the other branches? I am not at a loss to guess what the solution of this question would be by the practical soldier, if he has candour. The boon which I ask for the Infantry and Cavalry, and which Guards, Artillery, Engineers, and Marines enjoy, is one which would cause not a farthing additional expense to the country. Let the Captains of Cavalry and Infantry, on being promoted, become Lieut.-Colonels in rank (as is the case with the other branches), but with the pay only of Majors as heretofore.

On the policy or the impolicy of the purchasing system I have not offered an opinion, neither is it my intention to do so. The subject has been often discussed by far more able pens than mine. The effect, however, of the system has been constantly to put young officers over the heads of older and more experienced ones; and it is this very class of officers (those unable to purchase) whose case, I conceive, merits very particular consideration. If the boon which has already been obtained for certain branches of the Army was also granted to officers unable to purchase, it would tend in some measure to allay the constant irritation which they must necessarily have experienced, at seeing juniors with longer purses pass over their heads. In order to obviate any objection to putting in force this so just and reasonable a grant, it might be simplified by a graduated scale of service. Few, if any, non-purchasing officers (of the Line especially) are likely to become senior Captains of their regiments in a shorter space of time than is usually required to bring Captains of the Artillery and Engineers to the top of the list of their respective corps.

By a reference to the New Army List, it appears that the senior Captains of the Engineers have served thirty-one years, and the seniors of the Artillery thirty-five and thirty-six. Is there any injustice, then, in the proposition that the Captains of the Line and Cavalry, who have served equally long (say thirty-three years, which is splitting the difference between the length of service of the senior Captains of Engineers and Artillery), should, when vacancies occur in their regiments, become Majors with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonels, as is the case in the two Ordnance corps?

"Where there is a will, there is a way," and it would be very practicable so to arrange it, that veterans unblessed with money, whose best days have been spent in pestilential climates, should have something in the shape of promotion to look forward to in the latter days of their career; nor would it be necessary or just to grant the same boon to others of, perhaps, less than half their length of service, who have gallopped on rapidly to Majorities by dint of money and interest. Those of this latter description could not think themselves aggrieved on being obliged to serve with the rank of Major, for a given time at least. What the extent of that period should be, I leave others to decide. In fine, it appears but reasonable that all Captains of Infantry and Cavalry who have served thirty-three years, whether their commissions have been obtained by purchase or without, should, on succeeding to Majorities, have immediately the rank of Lieutenant-Colonels, which would place them on an equal footing with their brother soldiers of the other branches.

Whether these subjects will ever be taken into consideration by the Naval and Military Commission now sitting, it is hard to say; but I am not without a distant hope that the Military members of it will not lose sight of the services of the Infantry of the Line all over the world, to whom they are in no small degree indebted for the rank, honours, and emoluments, they now enjoy. And I would here remark (irrelevant as such observation may be deemed) that the musket and bayonet, a weapon which some affect to despise, has ever proved a most efficient one in the hands of British Infantry, both in offensive and defensive warfare, to which our innumerable victories bear ample testimony. Long may we cling to it; long may it continue in use in our ranks, in preference to pikes, broad-swords, scythes, and pitch-forks, so strongly recommended by some few theorists of the present day! And now, in conclusion, let me assure those who may have patience to peruse the aforegoing remarks, that I have been actuated by no invidious feelings, my sole wish being that all hands should be put on as equal a footing as justice will permit; and I can with truth affirm, that individually I cannot by possibility be affected one way or the other, whether things continue as they long have done, or whether those alterations are made which I conceive to be but just, fair, and reasonable. Begging to apologise for having occupied so great a space of your invaluable journal, I beg to subscribe myself your most obedient servant,

9th April, 1839. MILES.

THE ROYAL MARINES.—(Concluded from page 300).

In 1779, the Marines signalised themselves under Admiral Barrington, with D'Estaing, in which events the names of Gardiner, Collingwood, and Cornwallis, were synonymous with victory. At Savannah the Marines and Grenadiers of the 60th reg., led by Lieut.-Colonel Glazier, decided the fate of the day, and elicited much praise. In 1781, 20,000 were voted. Sir Edw. Hughes landed the whole of his detachments in India to assist in the war against Hyder Ali, in which service they lost many killed and wounded, and several daring acts of storming batteries, &c., were by them performed, especially at Trincomalee and Negapatam, &c. In 1782, in the defence of Gibraltar, the Marines shared in its heroic labours. In 1793, the patriotic town of Manchester raised, at their own expense, several hundreds of men for the service of the State,—they were called the Manchester Marine Corps." At this epoch (war with France), many ships had only half their complement, and some, alas! none at all! Let this be a useful lesson in framing all future peace establishments. In 1797 (an eventful year!) an increase of the former allowance of provisions was granted to seamen and Marines afloat. "In this year it was that King George the Third went in procession to St Paul's Cathedral, and all the Marines which could be spared formed part of it." In 1798 the Marines shared in all the glories of Egypt, Malta, &c. (10). 1799, St. Jean D'Acre is a name conspicuous in the annals of the corps, as on the 7th of April of this year they were led by Col. Douglas and Major Oldfield against General Berthier's Army; and a bloody day it was. Lieutenant (now Colonel) Beatty * was wounded in the sortie. 1800, at Aboukir, Naples, Malta, &c. Marines were landed. 1801, 30,000 was the number voted; in this year the victory of Copenhagen was achieved, and the loyalty of the Marine (as in 1797) severely tested; but proved, as heretofore, and for ever, firm—true. The Egyptian campaign occurring, the Marines, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Smith, were brigaded with the Army of Sir Ralph Abercrombie, and greatly distinguished themselves. On 27th March, 1802, peace was proclaimed, and, by command of His Majesty, the corps was styled "Royal;"—the two silver epaulettes, white facings, and silver-laced hat, gave place to our gold epaulette, blue facings, and plain, but gold-looped cocked hat. In 1805, a fourth division of Marines, stationed at Woolwich, was established, and the corps progressively augmented until it numbered 42,000. In consequence of much inconvenience and delay to the Naval Service generally, by having to apply to the Horse Guards or Board of Ordnance for Artillery on any emergency, Lord Melville, as First Lord of the Admiralty, determined, in 1805, on raising four companies of Marine Artillery for embarkation in bomb vessels. Officers and men were therefore permitted to volunteer for this new arm of the corps from its parent stock, all of whom went through a regular course of theoretic and practical instruction under approved masters, similar to those of the Royal Artillery. They were subsequently increased to eight companies of 100, commanded by a Lieutenant-Colonel (Sir Richard Williams, K.C.B.), and fully officered; and certainly a finer body never worked a gun, threw a shell, shouldered a musket, or manœuvred in the field. They were, however, a few years ago reduced to their present establishment of two companies only. Various were the actions, numerous were the victories obtained by them during the war, to enumerate and detail which would lead us into volumes instead of pages. Let it suffice, that in every general engagement of fleets, single actions of ships, storming batteries, taking or defending islands, Curaçoa, Anholt, &c., acting with troops at Java, Monte Video, &c. &c., cum multis, they added additional leaves to their well-earned wreath, and repeatedly obtained the thanks of their Sovereign and their country.

Of their Duties.—On those they assimilate precisely with those of all other troops, and with whom they are usually brigaded. On ship-board, they mount guard, go on sentry, and take special charge of all stores, prisoners, &c.; they are exercised both at great guns and small arms, are kept prepared for landing in heavy or light marching order, either for active service or field drill, and, when not on Military duties, they materially assist in provisioning and storing the ship, and aid the seamen in their various evolutions. In short, the Marine, from the very nature of his pursuits, is perhaps one of the most useful men in Her Majesty's service. The corps at this moment is, I regret to say, no more than 9000, about 1200 of whom are formed into two battalions, and are garrisoning St. Sebastian on behalf of the Queen of Spain; there are upwards of 2000 at home, and the remainder are distributed in all parts of the world.

Now as touching their grievances, &c.

The daily pay of a First Commandant of other corps is 2*l.* 10*s.*, a Second Commandant 1*l.* 5*s*, a Captain 11*s.* 7*d.* That of the Marines, 1*l.* 18*s* 6*d.*, 1*l.*, and 10*s.* 6*d.* only; and to attain their ranks they must severally have held commissions for averaged periods of 45, 40, and 25 years, while in the Army they would scarcely have averaged half the time. Nor is this all. The Line Officer, from getting his company so much sooner, reaches the Brevet of Major many years anterior to the Marine; the consequence is, that not only is the latter deprived of the additional pay attached to it, but in garrison finds himself continually in juxta-position with Field Officers whose entry into the service was so much subsequent to his own; this is most acutely galling to the feelings of an equally deserving, though less fortunate man. In the Army, if an officer is shipwrecked, or in campaigning loses his baggage, a sum (though possibly not equal to its value) is forthwith awarded him. Not so with the Marine; he gets nothing!

Again. If an Army Officer is wounded in battle, he receives a gratuity of twelve months' pay; whereas in the Marines, unless it be actual loss of limb, he does not get one farthing. In the Army, pensions are granted for a space of five years; at the expiration of which they are re-surveyed, and, according to the report of the Medical Board, either struck off the Pension List altogether, or it is confirmed for life. This is liberal and just; but in the Marines no such thing is known. In the Army and Ordnance many comfortable, though perhaps not very lucrative, situations, as Lieut.-Governors, Majors, Adjutants, &c., of garrisons, forts, castles, towers, and small islands, as also various other staff appointments, are given to old and deserving officers, as some reward for good services and declining years; but in the Marines no such offices are available. In the same departments a proper number of Field Officers to the various regiments and battalions are apportioned; but in the Marines they are on so lamentably reduced a scale as to be altogether in numbers, for general duties, on an establishment totally inefficient.

In the Navy, seamen receive from 1*l.* 6*s.* to 1*l.* 14*s.* a month, whereas a private Marine gets but 19*s.* 5*d.* until he has been upwards of fourteen years enlisted, when he gets 1*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.* In both Navy and Army, every year of full pay, whether at home or abroad, counts in regular progression for pension; not so with the private Marine; he must, when on shore, count but one year's pensionrate for every two served, consequently he will have to serve 31, instead of 21, years to entitle him to a pension, though he may, nevertheless, be particularly desirous of quitting his barracks and embarking for foreign service; for let it be distinctly understood that it does not rest with himself when he shall go on board ship; he can only do that and at such a time as he is ordered. Neither do the Marines' pensions increase in the same ratio that his brother soldiers of the Line do.

In the Navy, nearly one hundred officers are placed on what is termed the out-pension of Greenwich, at sums of from 50*l.* to 80*l.* a year, but not one officer of the corps partakes of this desirable grant. In the Navy are the various Yachts, Transport Departments, Greenwich and other Naval Hospitals, Dock-yard, and Victualling Establishments, Semaphores, and Coast Guard, all open to innumerable officers, and which appointments may be said to assimilate somewhat with those offices of the Army just alluded to; but in the Marines there is scarcely anything whatever of a corresponding description. In all Flag-ships the Naval Officer has an additional sixpence per diem, but even this trifling, though distinctive, mark is withheld from the Officer of Marines. Thus are they, though intimately connected with both services, shut out from all and every of the loaves and fishes of either! And now for the remedy, if indeed it be at all necessary here to state it, since the antidote will be obvious in the enumeration of grievances; nevertheless, as some points have not been touched on, I will give it, though it may perchance seem in detail somewhat recapitulancy.

Increase the corps forthwith to twelve thousand, divide it into eight or ten battalions fully officered, as those of the Artillery are,—form depots at Malta, Bermuda, and Cape of Good Hope; give the Commandants and Captains the same pay as the Line; ante-date commissions of a certain date to enable those careworn officers to succeed at once to a Brevet, or grade of rank above what they hold and have held for these 26 to 32 and 38 years; grant a slice of the out-pension of Greenwich Hospital; recommend to the proper quarter for a more extensive distribution of decorations; give the governments of the Scilly Isles, St. Helena, Upnor, South Sea, and Carisbroke Castle, &c., &c., to officers of Marines; permit ten or a dozen old officers the indulgence of sale of commissions; give adequate retirement; give promotion; rescind the baneful Order in Council relative to the men's pensions, and give them a corresponding increase with their brother soldiers of the Line; extend to the corps the advantages of the Army generally; in short, re-constitute, re-vivify, recreate. Do these—do justice, and be assured of thus renovating a grateful and deserving, but, alas! drooping body, which then however would, as by a talismanic wand, and as the Phœnix from its ashes, reappear in all the vernal buoyancy of health and rejuvenescence.

AN OLD ACQUAINTANCE.

(10). Anecdote.—The capture of La Legere gun-boat, at Aboukir, in 1798, by the Alcmene, Capt. Hope, afforded a striking instance of intrepidity in Jas. Harding, Marine Drummer, and John Taylor, seaman, on board the British frigate. Although going through the water at more than five miles an hour, yet observing a packet of despatches to have been thrown overboard from the Republican vessel, they dashed into the sea and recovered them at the imminent risk of their lives; those fine fellows, however, were picked up by a boat, and each of them was rewarded by a pension of 20*l.* a year from the "Corporation of the City of London." The contents were of much importance, as being from the National Convention to their General, Buonaparte, in Egypt.

* Colonels Beatty, and Connolly, &c. &c., are all officers deserving recommendation to royal favour. Acre, Nile, Anholt, Trafalgar, and De Saumarez victories, are indelible in their escutcheons of warfare. For special services of numerous gallant officers, see Lieutenant Hart's forthcoming admirable New Army List, to be published in May.

HONORARY REWARDS.—LIEUT. DAVIES, R.N.

SIR,—In a late number of your Gazette there was a paragraph respecting the gallant and liberal conduct of Lieut. Davies, R.N., in recently saving a French vessel and crew. This is by no means a solitary instance in the same officer, as he had previously received a gold medal from the King of the French, three from our own institutions, and several pieces of plate, for services of this description almost unparalleled. I believe his services in the Revenue to be considerable; and, to my own knowledge, he particularly distinguished himself under the observation of the Commander-in-Chief at the battle of Algiers, and has been more than once gazetted for his gallantry since. On the present occasion, and for previously saving upwards of 20 French subjects, (the Admiralty having intimated to him that he is not at liberty to accept the order of the "Legion of Honour," which he had been officially apprised would otherwise be conferred on him,) Lieut. Davies is to be rewarded with another gold medal, and his two companions in danger with silver medals, from the French Government.

As the knowledge of these facts may lead to wrong inferences as to the author of this letter, I send you my name and address above; but for public purposes allow me to remain, Sir, AMICUS.

FIELD EXERCISES AND EVOLUTIONS.

SIR,—The directions in the Book of Field Exercises and Evolutions, for the inspection or review, when the troops are to be formed in line of battalion columns, do not appear to me to be sufficiently explanatory; for instance, "On the word Officers and Colours to the front, the whole of the officers and colours will move forward, and place themselves in line two paces in front of the column;" but how they are to get there is not described. Again, "The Reviewing-General is saluted without opening ranks." Why are not the ranks to be opened? There is plenty of space at quarter distance. "The troops will then shoulder"—What! have they presented with closed ranks, or received the General with ordered arms? In one of these two predicaments I must suppose them involved: either is sufficiently absurd and ridiculous. I presume to offer you my method for arranging this formation, which at least provides a proper reception for the General (who unquestionably ought to be received with open ranks and presented arms), and also directs officers their way to the front, instead of leaving them to struggle thither in an irregular manner.

Inspection or Review.—Upon occasions when the troops to be reviewed may exceed two battalions, the Reviewing-General may at his option, in order to save time, and preserve the troops fresh for the subsequent movements, direct them to be formed in COLUMN. 1. The troops will be formed in a line of battalion columns at quarter distance, with such intervals between battalions as may be necessary to admit of their wheeling into mass.

2. Officers and Colours to the Front.—On the word "Officers and Colours to the front," the whole of the officers will recover swords, and proceed in quick time to form in single file, and at close order in rear of the officer commanding the Grenadiers, Supernumerary Officers facing to the left, and wheeling to the right will move briskly up, immediately following the leaders of their respective companies in regular order.

3. Quick March.—On the word "Quick March," the officers and colours will move forward; and when the leading officer has taken two paces to his front, he will wheel to the right, followed by the rest, until he has reached the right flank of the Grenadiers, when the officers and colours will halt by word of command from the Major, who will dress them, and they will front by signal and part swords, the colours being in the centre, and the Adjutant on the left, &c. &c. &c.

4. The band and drums to be formed at the same time in several ranks, at open order, in line with the front rank of battalion, and on its right.

5. The pioneers in one rank, in rear of the drums.

6. The General Officer is stationed twenty paces in front of the centre

7. Rear Ranks take open Order, March.—The line of battalion columns will take open order, the rear ranks of companies stepping back one pace.

8. General Salute—Present Arms—Shoulder Arms.—The Reviewing-General will be received with a general salute. The men present arms, and the officers salute. The troops will then shoulder, and the whole stand in the order above directed, bands playing while the General goes down the line.

9. Officers and Colours to your respective posts—Quick March—Rear Ranks take close Order—March.—To prepare for marching past, the officers and colours resume their proper places on the word—"Officers and Colours to your respective posts;" the line of officers will recover swords, and face to the left. On the word "Quick March" they will wheel to the left and resume their places in column. The ranks will be closed while the officers are moving to the rear. The line of columns will wheel into a mass of columns, &c.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We rejoice to find that another quarterly publication of Lieut. Hart's invaluable Army List is on the eve of being issued. It will contain the Lists of Officers on full-pay, with much additional valuable matter relating to their services.—The record of the Officers of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers will in this number be most complete.

Repeated answers have already been given to the question put by "An Old Subscriber," Dublin, viz., that the Supplement will be published as soon as we are enabled to complete it, and which we hope to do ere long. Some of our correspondents appear to have little knowledge of the extent of our duties.

The letters of "Justitia" and "A Commander's Widow" did not reach us in time for our present publication.

We should be glad to have a copy of Captain Lihou's Petition of Right, presented to the Queen. Every man ought to receive the full reward of his industry and talents, and the law of Petition of Right, "Let Right be done," cannot be too well known.

In reply to several inquiries respecting the Military Commission, we can assure our Correspondents that there is no probability of the Report being made for a considerable time to come.

Captain George Gunning has lately addressed a long letter to the Rt. Hon. Lord F. Somerset, K.C.B., &c. &c. &c. The zeal of this old soldier is unabated, and many of his suggestions will interest Military men. We refer our readers to the letter itself, which we believe is very widely circulated, and which is too long for insertion in our columns.

The Naval Appointments of this week show that a number of old officers have been appointed to ships.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1839.

Our readers well remember how earnestly we combated the disparaging statements circulated during the Parliamentary recess, respecting the fallen condition of our maritime ascendancy, and the diminished means for increasing our Naval force. Long before the appearance of Sir John Barrow's "Supplemental Chapter," or opportunity occurred for the official explanations in Parliament, which gave the coup de grace to those statements, we had exposed their fallacies, and confuted their assertions, by publishing the real force of our own and rival Navies; and we maintained, that whenever occasion called for a demonstration of our Naval resources, they would be found equal to any claim that might be made upon them, and incomparably superior to what they have been at any former period of peace.

It is, therefore, with considerable gratification that we are at this period of the year able to take a favourable review of our Naval position; for it appears that, allowing nine ships, the present force in the Mediterranean, to be maintained, after deducting the flag-ships at the Cape and in the East Indies, we have in commission thirteen sail of the line, including three first-rates (the flag-ships) available for any purpose required, either for demonstration or display, with sixteen more in reserve, their furniture prepared, and capable of being got ready for sea in a week or ten days.

Now all this has been effected quietly, with little exertion, and by the addition of three ships only to the force which existed when all the clamour was rife. Whether it is intended that the vessels shall be brought together, and form a squadron to grace the intended visit of Her Majesty to Ireland and Scotland, or for the purpose of evolution, or both, is matter of speculation. It is certain that the force exists, and will be probably henceforth maintained to this extent in the summer months, notwithstanding that all apprehensions of war in the north, south, east, and west, appear to have abated, or entirely passed away by the explanatios which have taken place within these few days.

The late controversy induced us to give considerable attention to the investigation of our Naval resources—mercantile and military—and we can assert most confidently, and challenge contradiction, that they are in a more efficient and prosperous state, in every respect, than has been the case for very many years past.

But it will be said, that, although three ships of the line are added to the fleet, they are not manned, and the case of Powerful will be cited to show the difficulty of manning them. Now, we anticipate this objection, and we allude to it for the purpose of declaring that the case of Powerful is not in point. Unfortunately, by some means a prejudice has been created against that ship from the first; and besides that, it is always difficult to man a ship at Sheerness, on account of the labour the men undergo in passing to and from the Dock-yard, owing to the exposed situation and the strong tides; the seamen have taken up a prejudice (an imaginary one, we believe, but which cannot be removed), and we will venture to say, that if Powerful is detained in England until the 1st June, the three ships newly commissioned will be completed before her. We therefore presume her complement will be made up from the reserved men in the ordinary, and fresh hands entered to replace the draft.

Already, we understand, have men begun to enter for the ships just commissioned, notwithstanding that this is the season when seamen are absorbed in the Baltic and North American trade, and wages are at this date in the port of London from 55*s.* to 60*s.* per month. In a short time, however, a nucleus will be obtained: the work of fitting out will make progress, and then, should circumstances render expedition necessary, these ships can very soon be completed.

For the benefit of those who have been engaged in the patriotic work of disparaging our Naval force, and the means of increasing it, whilst they magnified the power of our rivals, we append the following extract from an American paper:—

National Defence necessary, and the Means.—Now that the people are not only talking about a war with Great Britain, but actually thinking of it, the inquiry may well be instituted, "What are our means, offensive and defensive, for carrying on a contest, in which the great object is to see which party can injure the other most effectually?" We have a few forts, the remnants of better days, and a few costly fortifications, the monuments of electioneering liberality, which, if properly manned and early admonished, might destroy one or two vessels of a fleet, windbound within reach of their guns. But the mode of offensive warfare is undergoing a change; it is not now the point of honour with an assailing squadron to stop at a fort to be assailed, and try conclusions there, but now the assailants pass the lets and hindrances as they can, and if one avenue to a city is fortified and the other is not, no rule of chivalry is recognised to induce the fleet to take the former and avoid the latter; but it has now become a settled principle of invading warfare, that the object of attack shall be reached as early and as directly as possible—and hence Great Britain, France, and Russia have supplied themselves with squadrons of steam ships-of-war, by which the immaneable fortifications and batteries, few and far between, along our coasts, can be avoided, and the cities and towns above them, which they are intended to protect, can be reached as well as if the invaders were to drop down from a thunder-cloud above. If it had not been for the ice, for which no thanks are to be rendered to Congress, the French steam ship-of-war Velore would have disturbed the deliberations of Congress by her national salute, within cannon-shot of the capitol; and every port in the Union, from New Orleans to Eastport, is in the most exposed situation. Last year, the steam power of Great Britain, France, and Russia, was as follows:—

Steam Government Ships.	In commission.	Ordinary.	Building.	Total.
England . . .	5	2	5	12
On Foreign Stations	13	—	—	13
Post-Office Packets .	26	—	—	26
Total . .				51

Of which Twelve are Ships-of-war.

France . . .	22	6	9	37
Russia . . .	8	—	—	8

The steam power of the United States is nothing, the Fulton being rather below zero. Now the wants of the nation have been made known repeatedly. Several years since, the measure of providing steam batteries or steam ships was urged upon the Government; but, alas! the whole business of the Executive seems to have been to feed, feed, feed itself and its supporters, perpetuate its dynasty, and die

"To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot."

When now several portions of the union are provoking or inviting a war with the greatest maritime power in the world, why is not the Government preparing for defence at home and offence abroad, rather than living in the exact reverse? Will she allow a war to grow out of the Maine or Canada troubles, without the means of sustaining it? If so, some southern mail may hereafter bring us the news, that while Congress was deliberating on a sub-treasury bill, the Philistines came up the Potomac in their steam ships, carried off the executive and legislative authorities, and again destroyed the capitol.

We are not writing an article for party politics; it is commercial, economical, national, and the subject to which we refer concerns every citizen.—United States Gazette.

We shall next week make some observations upon the quality of the present crews, as compared with those of last war; for very erroneous ideas appear to be entertained by young officers on this head. In furtherance of our purpose, we have much pleasure in acknowledging the communications of an old officer who had opportunities of witnessing the Naval preparations at the commencement of the two last wars; and we shall avail ourselves of his kind permission to apply them as he suggests.

The British public has been lately roused from its state of apathy regarding India, her people, and her policy, by the exposed intrigues of Russia and Persia, and the notes of preparation for a mortal blow at the power of Britain in Asia. Availing ourselves of the attentive state of the public mind at present, we have been induced to lay before our readers a brief but comprehensive statement of the position in which our affairs stand as they relate to Russia, Persia, England, and her Asiatic Allies. To make a complicated scheme of policy somewhat more easily intelligible to those who have hitherto passed over the politics of India with as much indifference as the very map of the country is usually treated in an atlas (for we have ever found it unsoiled in the most-thumbed works on geography), we shall give an outline of the principal events and treaties connected with the measures early adopted by the British and Indian Governments for the security of our Eastern Empire from foreign invasion. In this statement we have been materially assisted by "Notes on the Relations of British India," lately published by Allen and Co., which we strongly recommend to the perusal of our readers as a fair and liberal view of the question.

During the able government of the Marquess Wellesley, India was doubly threatened—by the French from Europe, and by Zemaun Shah from Affghanistan on the north-west of Hindoostan. To oppose these two powers, bent on the invasion of our Eastern empire, the master-mind of the Marquess Wellesley found a means, even more effective than arms, in a treaty with Persia, rigidly excluding the French from that country, and binding the Shah to coerce the Affghans should they venture upon the invasion of our dominions. This judicious measure was rendered, for a time at least, more effective by the events which followed; for Zemaun Shah was, shortly after the conclusion of the Persian treaty, deposed, and the immediate ground of apprehension removed, by his successor being an indolent Prince, incapable of enterprise. Thus from 1801 to 1806 the safety of India was secured from French and Affghan invasion; but, in the latter year, Napoleon commenced a series of intrigues with Persia, which, in 1808, succeeded in establishing one of his Generals at the Shah's court, to the prejudice of British connexion. Persia, ever Punic in her faith, deserted Britain for France. To meet this threatening danger, Lord Minto decided, by a daring stroke of policy, on turning Affghanistan into an obstacle to French and Persian aggressions. Mr. Elphinston, late Governor of Bombay, was accordingly despatched to Cabul, and concluded a treaty with Sooja-ool-Moolk, then sovereign, by which all attempts against India by France and Persia, through his territories, were to be repelled. This treaty, however ably designed, was of little avail; for Shah Sooja-ool-Moolk was almost immediately after deposed by his brother. Efforts were next directed to regain our influence in Persia, and in 1809 a treaty was concluded with Persia, stipulating that no European force should pass through that country to India, and that Britain, in return, would supply a subsidy and arms in case of an invasion of Persia from Europe. This treaty, with some slight changes, was in force till 1814, when it was definitively concluded, and remained unaltered till 1828, when the stipulation of a subsidy from England was cancelled, but the rest of the treaty remained in force. It will thus appear that the policy of England has continuously been directed to find a barrier in Persia or Affghanistan against the invasion of India from the North-West.

Danger from France has now long ceased: but danger still greater from Russia has for several years past been reasonably apprehended. Russia has entered skilfully and secretly into the affairs of Persia and the States of Central Asia. She has availed herself of the preposterous and ambitious views of Persia against Herat, and by her agency expressed her sympathy with the distresses of Dost Mahomed of Cabul. In urging on the Shah of Persia against Herat and in establishing a paramount influence over his councils, the Cabinet of St. Petersburgh secretly aimed at obtaining virtual possession of the "Gate of India," for such Herat is considered to be. The British Government did everything in its power to prove the absurdity of the claim, set up by Persia, to the possession of Herat; and clearly seeing that Persia would only conquer for Russia, boldly demanded of the Shah to withdraw his troops from the siege of that city. We need not here enter into the late discussions between our Minister and the Shah, nor yet quote from the correspondence of the Indian Government, our own Cabinet, and that of Russia, to prove to our readers that British influence is totally extinct in Persia, and that our friendly relations with that state have ceased. We invite our readers to the perusal of the Russian Ministry's State Papers, of which ability and duplicity are the chief characteristics.

Meantime the noble and energetic policy of the Governor-General, in boldly and promptly wielding the gigantic powers of our Indian empire by a magnificent arrangement of the varied means at his command, demands the admiration and gratitude of the British nation. Persia, and through her Russia, has been baffled, humbled, and rendered impotent. They may rage and fume, but their efforts to injure Britain must now be vain. England has acted like a great nation;—she has declared that the long divided and dismembered kingdom of Cabul shall be once more united and supported in a consolidated Government under its legitimate King—that anarchy and confusion shall be succeeded by settled Government—that Affghanistan shall be rendered an impenetrable shield to British India against Persia and Russia—that commerce and consequent civilisation shall no longer be debarred ingress to Central Asia—that the waters of the Ganges and the Indus shall be the bearers of European knowledge into the heart of Asia—and that if Persia and Russia combine, they must do so openly. The defection of Persia will be more than compensated by our alliance with Affghanistan—under a Sovereign who is attached to the British by ties of long friendship, gratitude, and interest. It was our obvious policy to form this alliance and resist the attempts made on our empire from the West; and in like manner as we formerly raised up Persia to resist Affghanistan, so now we seek for the friendly aid of the rightful Sovereign of the latter country against a faithless power, hostile to our interests. In fine, we found in 1809 a faithful friend in Shah Soojah, and in 1839 we find Interest, Inclination, and Justice alike combine to lead us to place him once more on the throne of his fathers. Such is the British policy in the East!

We have frequently called attention to the present system of promotion by Brevet, pointing out the great injustice inflicted by it upon old officers who have uninterruptedly followed the fortunes of their respective corps in every part of the world, but whose only fault exists in their not having attained the rank of Captain in or prior to a certain year. We have now serving innumerable unbreveted Captains of upwards of thirty years' full-pay service, while the benefits of the two last Brevets are daily falling to the lot of men who have been upon half-pay for years—indeed, the rank of Captain in some regiments bids fair to become extinct; for, in almost every Gazette we see some half-pay Captain returning to the service, receiving at the same time the Brevet of Major. Cases not unfrequently of a very gross nature come under our observation; for we invariably work up the services, and we are perhaps scarcely doing our duty in not giving them publicity. We adopt this course, however, to avoid wounding the feelings of individual officers, whom we should be obliged to name. We cannot, however, refrain from stating a case, as being so peculiarly hard upon the old Captains of the Army.

An officer received a Cornetcy in 1812; a Lieutenancy in 1813; exchanged to half-pay, receiving the difference, in 1817; brought upon full-pay in April, 1825, repaying the difference; promoted to a company in another regiment, without purchase, in October, 1825; exchanged to half-pay in December, 1825, only two months after such unprecedented promotion; returns to full-pay in 1839, receiving the Brevet rank of Major. Service on full-pay, six years! Service on half-pay twenty-one years, every day of which was at his own request!

In reply to some inquiries from a correspondent —Diggery—whose letter we annex, relative to steam communication with India, we cannot but remark that there are very many persons who conceive that a system of steam navigation may be brought into operation as readily as the scheme can be reduced to a prospectus for the approbation and support of the public; forgetting that the advocates are more au fait in talking than forward to give their support by the solid material which is absolutely necessary to get up the steam. After money has been subscribed, the ship has to be built and rigged, the engines to be prepared, and a great deal to be done before she can be got to sea.

The India Steam Ship Company launched a large vessel, called the India, some months since, which is getting forward with all expedition, though some delay has been caused by the introduction of Hall's patent condensors, a late improvement of great importance, and the vessel will probably not be ready for sailing before July. No other ships will be built by this Company till the success of the first is decided.

The East India Company have three ships in progress of building, from 500 to 800 tons, the first of which will be launched on the 30th of this month in the river, and will probably sail in July.

The projected East India Steam Navigation Company, via Alexandria, promoted by Captain Barber, has, it seems, already expired, as also the Inland India Steam Company.

The British Government only, in connection with the East India Company, are competent to carry this matter forward successfully and permanently. There is an item in the forthcoming miscellaneous estimates of 50,000*l.* towards the existing overland communications for the current year.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Your constant attention to subjects connected with us poor fellows in India, has induced many of my brother officers and me to subscribe to your paper; allow me then to hope you will take up one more subject, which affects all ranks of Indian society, soldiers included.

We are kept in the dark as to whether any steamers—either public or private—either John Company's or the Government—are being built for India, whether for the communication between the Red Sea and Bombay, or for the opening of the passage by the Cape of Good Hope by steam? We did hear that a steamer, called the India, was actually launched in the Clyde six months ago, in some sort of way to be eventually connected with India, and from that day to this nothing has been officially announced regarding her.

I heard only by mere chance about the Atalanta, Semiramis, and Berenice, when they were preparing,—why should their progress and the owners' ulterior intentions not have been made known to the world when all our hearts are so warm on the subject?—You have correspondents at the different ports,—you have also those who assist you in preparing matters of Indian information,—then do let me hope that through these resources you may be induced to discover "what is being done about steam to India in its various branches." Diggory.

MATERIALS FOR THE ARMY.

The perfect gentleman, brave, high-spirited, young sightly, active, healthy—these are the great desiderata the younger sons of noblemen and gentlemen, in and out of the learned professions, are very fit materials, having always a certain allowance whilst they are subalterns, but it is no advantage to the service, quite otherwise, when they are rich, extravagant, and expensive in their appointments. The sons of the nobility are the natural military grade, for it is the duty of the aristocracy to support the dignity of the Crown, and the fame and honour of the British flag; the sons of the landed interest have also a stake in the hedg to fight for, and whilst the senior branches of the famil have to stand on the defensive penates et foci, the junic ones will carry the war into the enemy's country, and thus keep our shores free and inviolate. sons of parents in the learned professions are also good materials, because it is presumable that they are highly educated, and intelligent by nature, or culture, or by both; patrons to the army, such as the high nobility and people of fortune, are excellent, in moderate number, to uphold the profession; but, above all, those young men, who have a strong predilection for the martial life, and who know its principles and are fond of its study, those make officers of high promise; loose and idle young men, soft and effeminate young men, mere dandies and radicals in principle or roués in practice, are totally disqualified, and should never be admitted into the ranks, where the chivalrous feelings of religion and bravery should always blend.

Having said thus much of officers, we will pass to the privates, with this sole remark, that it is fortunate when a young officer adds to the duties of his regiment the continued study of tactics, military history, and all other learned and ennobling subjects; and it is well when the regimental library supplies the place of the billiard table, or the rake's range for mischief to fill up vacant hours. In enlisting soldiers, youth is so necessary that they could no be taken too young, were it not for the expense of keeping them so many years without being fit for service; nevertheless we would recommend a great proportion of decent children, and above all of soldiers' children, to be attached to regiments, and, after the first two years, the supply would be regular, and the rotten branches of bad soldiers, at matunity and on decline, would be lopped off, and their places filled with thorough-bred soldiers—youths schooled under the standard, habituated to discipline and subordination, trained to habits of cleanliness and morality, kept to church and school-room in their seasons, and every way good members of a corps; of such recruits countless thousands could be got, and they ought to be selected judiciously, and discharged if found unworthy of their profession; and such children, unless soldiers' enfans de troupe, ought to have very little intercourse, if any, with their parents, unless they are in virtuous poverty, or decent and industrious in their line of life; and, lastly, those juvenile recruits should never mix with the world, but have their work and recreation, their discipline and encouragement, concentrated in their regiment, always under the care of schoolmaster and Drill-Serjeant, and under the especial protection and kindness of the Commanding Officer. To them the Adjutant and Drill-Serjeant of a squad ought to have a very different tone to that which suits manhood; a mild, yet firm, schoolmaster, and an old fatherly non-commissioned governor, would be their best tutors; the eye of the Adjutant over these, and the encouraging glance of superiors, would complete their studies and control their conduct; in their leisure hours trap-ball or cricket, together with gymnastic exercises would greatly tend to mature their strength and to bring the plant into vigour sooner than by any other life, so that a regimental boy would be fit for duty probably two or years sooner than one promiscuously enlisted; and I must observe, that such recruits would love their regiment and be so habituated to their officers, that they would not wish for a change of either regiment or of their profession.

In enlisting adults, the hand that has held the plough and plied the spade is always preferable to manufacturers, and most particularly to half scientific, half ignorant, half educated presuming men; no such should wear the red coat; nor should the pot-house politician and the law's low followers, scribbling fellows, warped in mind and body by the desk, be ever accepted; nor young men avoiding the arm of the law, nor middle-aged ones, stiff and unpliant in their interior and exterior; nor little bankrupt tradesmen, nor any one known to be dissolute and wild; men of good character are still to be had, and such out of employment are worthy of attention. An illness may have thrown decent servants out of place; if recovered thoroughly, such may serve with credit in a double capacity; deserving young men, whose families have been visited with misfortunes, and are on that account only, and the pressure of the times, unprovided for, may make, in time, respectable non-commissioned officers and regimental clerks; but the Army should be made of scribes, law clerks who will shirk their duty, stoop at all that is low to pick up a few shillings, and be firebrands in the camps, besides either being drunken and dirty, or disobedient and awkward. A handsome, healthy young peasantry, a few youths who really have a taste for soldiering, with few operations necessary for regimental purposes, clothing, &c. &c., together with the children allu[ded to] ought, if possible, to man our ranks. At the formation an Army such arrangements might be difficult, but th[ere] never was a more favourable period for enlisting the flowe[r] of the youth of our country than the present.

By a high character of the corps recruiting, sober and intelligent recruiting serjeants, a better choice might be made, so that, in a few years, by discharging, filling up, and internally educating children for the Army, drunkenness and low vice, laziness and insubordination, might be chased entirely away, and each regiment rest upon its original best men, its experienced and well-conducted non-commissioned officers, its growing youths and fine well-disciplined recruits, whilst a system of rewards and emulation, of disgrace and transportation instead of corporal punishments, would stimulate the good to a perseverance in desert, and awe the wavering from following evil courses.

Deserters in general merit being transferred to a condemned corps, and, at all rates, are fit to be sent to the colonies as [most] likely there to escape, and in terrorem to the others. The [re]a stain upon the soldier, and he who is guilty of it ou[ght] suffer the highest infliction of the civil power, a[nd] drummed out of the ranks with all possible degra[da]tion. Now, as drunkenness and bad company, mingling wit[h] vile part of society and with bad advisers, are the soul of misconduct, the soldier, until he is come to maturity of steadiness in conduct and knowledge of his profession, cannot be kept too distinct from the town's-people about him, and, above all, too much from the ale-house, or resort of chattering, smoking, and idle characters. Gymnastics ought to enter into the drill, and these, with other lawful recreations, will, from being a task, become an amusement, and pass away vacant time, whilst none but those who are too good soldiers to be in danger of being corrupted should be allowed to be in quarters, well-conducted married men, and steady old hands; camp and barracks are necessary for the young and ununiformed. In Cavalry regiments a certain pride and esprit du corps might easily be established, by taking none but fine men, and men of good character, whilst the pomp and high bearing of the old hands would attract recruits, and raise them above their ordinary level. Marching drill, at all times, for Cavalry and Infantry, is useful and healthy for the soldier, and it reminds him to be ready for a move; nor will the comparatively paltry saving of keeping regiments for a long time in the same quarters be found to be equivalent to the benefits which arises to the service from more frequent removals; the soldier is not formed to be a fixture, his regiment is his home, and he carries it with him go where he may. In war time it would be impossible to be so nice in choice as we have stated, but let the reduction to the peace establishment fall upon the bad material and not on the good, unless to receive that pension which their valour and perseverance have obtained.

The system of honour and exclusion from the people has produced, abroad, a certain contempt for the handicraft and for him who has not served his country; but that is neither natural nor necessary for an Englishman; his nature, his habits, and the constitution of his country are different; he is not used to dancing and chambering, nor are his wounded feelings to be settled at the point of the sword; but the exclusiveness of a British soldier depends on his attention to duty and on his attachment to the service, but, above all, to the distribution of his time, which leaves him no hours for clubs, politics, pot-house, gaming, and idle conversation. In all lines of life, he who sticks to his avocation is he who will live by it, deserve of his country, and do well; but he who would serve two masters, and embrace a variety of pursuits, will fall short of all of them, be shallow, restless, and a bad member of society. A fox-hunting, dancing, talking clergyman, is not very well qualified to do [by] his flock; the merchant, who is in every man's [mouth] his counting-house, is very likely to be a bank[rupt]; the handicraft, who does not first thoroughly learn, [and] afterwards diligently practise his trade, must come to poverty and ruin, involving all connected with him therein; thus, also, the soldier has nothing to do but to learn and to perform his duty, which the healthy honest peasant and the child trained up to arms is fittest for; all ranks have their place in society, and as St. Paul says, in preaching the doctrine of order and obedience, after touching other classes, concludes by saying, "Soldiers, be content with your pay." Those who teach them any other lesson are enemies in disguise, of which the lower classes are most numerous; they are decidedly enemies to the soldier—they view him with jealousy and undervalue him—forgetting who it is that fights their battles and ensures them their independence, by guarding them against foreign aggression and usurpation, by bleeding for them abroad, and by being always ready to strengthen the legislative arm.

GOOD COUNSEL.—By Blake O'Brien.

What if Simon does tell thee an angel thou art,
While Colin makes no such to do,
We all know that Simon, the while, in his heart,
Would be sorry to think it were true.
And if Simon does say that your eyes like the sun,
And yourself are no less than a star,
While Colin, who ne'er has these follies begun,
Likes yourself and your eyes, as they are,
Believe, 'tis the love that would woo thee with truth,
Will be true to the end of the page,
And, if Simon, perhaps, might adore thee in youth,
'Tis Colin will love thee in age.

The long-protracted negotiations on the affairs of Belgium and Holland have been at length brought to a termination. The Treaties between Holland and Belgium, and between those two Powers and the five Powers, represented in Conference, were signed yesterday afternoon.

On Monday despatches from Sir George Arthur, Lieutenant-Governor of U. Canada, were received at the Colonial-office, also from Captain Prescott, R.N., Governor of Newfoundland. Despatches were forwarded for the Governors of Jamaica and Barbadoes, and for the officers administering Her Majesty's Government in the Windward and Leeward Islands. On Thursday despatches were received from Major-Gen. Middlemore, Governor of St. Lucia.

It was mentioned some months since, that a payment had been made by the Queen's commands out of Her Majesty's privy purse, to those creditors of the late Duke of Kent whose claims had not been satisfied out of his Royal Highness's own property, which, after his death, was administered under a decree of the Court of Chancery. We are now enabled to state that Her Majesty has directed a further payment of 50 per cent. upon these debts to be immediately made. The debts amounted to a very considerable sum, and we are assured the adoption of them by the Queen was the spontaneous act of Her Majesty, and that the funds for their liquidation are provided entirely from Her Majesty's privy purse.

The Queen Dowager and suite embarked in the Hastings at Malta on the 26th ult., and was to sail on the 1st inst., escorted as far as Matetino by the Rodney, Vanguard, Asia, and Castor. The Hastings was to touch at Lisbon only. Her Majesty and suite, accompanied by Sir H. Bouverie, Admiral Sir Robert Stopford, &c., proceeded to Erzo on board the Firefly steamer, and returned to Valetto on the same day. Her Majesty had experienced so much benefit from the climate of Malta, that she is expected to pass the winter of 1841 there, by which time the new church, building at Her Majesty's expense, is expected to be completed.

The following is an odd mistake to be found in Cotta's Quarterly, one of the best German periodicals:—

"The Queen has conferred the honour of Knighthood on Dr. Alex. Morison, formerly President of the Royal College of Physicians at Edinburgh, and so unenviably notorious in Germany on account of his pills."

On Thursday morning the marriage of the Marquis of Douro, eldest son of the Duke of Wellington, and the Lady Elizabeth Hay, daughter of the Marquis and Marchioness of Tweeddale, was solemnised at St. George's, Hanover-sq. On the arrival of the Lady Elizabeth Hay, accompanied by her bridesmaids, her Ladyship was cheered by the assembled people. The Duke of Wellington appeared in excellent health and spirits. The ceremony was performed by the Hon. and Rev. Dr. Wellesley, Dean of Durham, uncle of the noble bridegroom. A great number of the family circle were present, and numerous members of the nobility were in various parts of the Church. At the termination of the ceremony, the Duke of Wellington retired with his brother, Lord Maryborough, when the noble Duke was loudly cheered. The wedding circle repaired to the family residence of the Marquis of Tweeddale, in Belgrave-sq., where a sumptuous dejeuner awaited their arrival. The Marquis and Marchioness of Douro left town in the afternoon for Strathfieldsaye, to pass the honeymoon.

Arrangements are in progress for offering a grand tribute of respect from the county of Kent to the Duke of Wellington. His Grace has accepted an invitation to a splendid entertainment, at which the Earl of Winchilsea has consented to preside. The place fixed upon is Dover, as being the centre of the Cinque Ports, of which the illustrious Duke is Lord Warden. The festival is to be on the most extensive scale, it being intended that accommodation should be provided for 2,000 persons.

The following appointments are about to take place :—The Lord Advocate of Scotland to be one of the Lords of Session, in the room of Lord Corehouse, resigned; Mr. Solicitor-General Rutherford to be Lord Advocate; James Ivory, Esq., of the Scotch bar, to be Solicitor-General of Scotland.

[illegible] the United States. After some trifling [illegible] airs with the handful of British troops stationed at Amherstburg, and hearing of the surrender of Michilimacinack, on the 4th July, to a few soldiers, voyageurs, and Indians, he became alarmed for his own safety, and returned to Detroit on 7th Aug. Sir George Provost had intrusted the Government and command of Upper Canada to General Brock, a downright politician, an [illegible], active, and spirited soldier, he had infused an excellent spirit into the loyal inhabitants. The command of Lake Erie [illegible] remained with the British. On 8th [illegible]

Lord Brougham was sufficiently recovered to leave Paris on Sunday for London. His Lordship's indisposition is said to have arisen from his having swallowed a needle.

The new Lord-Lieutenant seems well qualified to preside over the land of blunders. On intending to take his seat in the Lords, he omitted to bring with him his writ of summons; and, on arriving in Dublin, it appears he had left his appointment behind him.

Lord de Ross, having succeeded to his hereditary honours, has resigned the appointment he held in the royal household, as Gentleman Usher Quarterly Waiter to Her Majesty.

Lord Ranelagh has been requested by the gentlemen interested in a discussion which has arisen from an article in Fraser's Magazine, relative to Spanish affairs, to say that a correspondence between Col. Merry and Col. Butts has passed through his hands, requesting an explanation of expressions of a personal nature, attacking the character of the latter, which has terminated by Col. Butts acknowledging his error, and expressing, in a handsome manner, his regret at the publication.

The purchase of pikes and other arms is much more extensive in this neighbourhood than is generally suspected. At a meeting at Hindley, to lay a church-rate, the Chartists assembled, and marched in procession through the village, preceded by two females, each armed with a long pike. They were followed by two men with naked swords, and amongst the company a number of pikes were exhibited, and also fire-arms, which were fired off occasionally. About Westhoughton, Leigh, and Chowbent, great quantities of pikes have been sold; indeed, there are smiths in the neighbourhood of those places constantly employed in the manufacture of those weapons; and there is scarcely a sick or benefit society in which a majority of Radicals are to be found, that a resolution has not been passed to apply the funds in the purchase of pikes or other dangerous weapons.—Wigan Gazette.

Marine Society.—The annual dinner of the friends of this national charity took place on Wednesday, at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street. Lord Romney presided. There were present about one hundred noblemen and gentlemen. Amongst them were Lords Ingestrie, Marsham, and Radstock, Sir G. Cockburn, Sir H. Hart, R.N., Sir H. Baker, Sir F. Ommaney, Admiral Young, Captains M. Smith, R.N., Sykes, R.N., and Jones, R.N., &c. The aggregate amount of the sum subscribed was nearly 600*l.*

A commission of lunacy was held at the Bear Inn, Box, Wilts, on Friday last, to investigate the state of mind of Major-General Sir James Wilson, K.C.B., a supposed lunatic. It appeared from the evidence of the medical attendants and others, that Sir James Wilson has been of unsound mind from the 3d of March, 1838, to the present time, and has not during the above period had a lucid interval, and is incapable of taking care of his person or estate, and it appeared that he was admitted into Kingsdown-house Lunatic Asylum, and placed under the care of Dr. Langworthy and Dr. Austen Langworthy on the 29th day of March, 1838, where he still remains.—Wilts Independent.

Arrangements have been made for the admission of the public to view the armouries at the Tower after the 1st of May, at the reduced price of sixpence each person.

The late Captain Brenton.—The funeral of this truly-benevolent man took place on Saturday, and was attended by many of the objects in whose behalf he was known to take so great an interest during life. The procession moved from his late residence, 18, York-st., at 11 o'clock, in the following order:—Two mutes, Mr. Cheveley and Mr. Pitt; Mr. Wright, Superintendent of the Brenton Asylum; the flag presented to the boys by Mrs. Brenton was hung with crape, and carried by the senior boy; one hundred boys two and two; Mr. Wright, Jun.; the matron and one of the girls; twenty-two girls, two and two; the boys had crape on their arms—the girls black riband on their bonnets; the Committee, two and two; a plume of feathers; the hearse and two mourning coaches and four, Sir Jahleel Brenton, Bart., chief mourner to his brother, and friends of the deceased. On arriving at Marylebone New Church, the corpse was met by the Rev. B. Burgess, and by him the service was read in a most impressive manner. The poor children were much affected, and sobbed audibly during the ceremony.

We are sorry to learn that Mr. John Galt died in Greenock on the 11th inst. He had suffered no fewer than thirteen paralytic shocks before that which proved fatal.

Lady Flora Hastings.—We have been requested by the Marquess of Hastings to publish the following letter:—

TO VISCOUNT MELBOURNE

Donnington Park, April 8, 1839.

My Lord,—I am induced thus publicly to address you as Prime Minister of the Crown, not only from a feeling of duty to my own family, who have been insulted and wronged to the last degree by the late proceedings at Buckingham Palace, but from a sense that public justice and public opinion loudly demands my adopting such a course. I feel that no public reparation having been made for this outrage against every feeling of delicacy, of justice, and of honour, I should be wanting in every impulse which ought to actuate and guide a brother, if I did not take the last means now left in my power of showing, that it is not from the numerous difficulties which have been thrown in the way of finding out the slanderers of my sister that her family have been prevented from bringing them to justice, and holding them up to the contempt and indignation of the world, but from the manner in which they have been screened by the Court (and whilst I use the word Court I will not allow my loyalty to be questioned—such a supposition would ill apply to one who bears my name)—I impute nothing to the Sovereign, but the misfortune of being betrayed by that baneful influence which now surrounds the Throne, and it is to clear that Court of these slanderers, and to place this infamous transaction in its true light, that I now address you as the responsible Minister of the Crown. My lord, you have stated that the removal of these persons would be unprecedented. Need I say that their conduct has been unprecedented, and is calculated in the highest degree to throw disgrace and discredit on the Court? A near relative of mine having, from a kind feeling of the painful position in which all my family have been placed by the garbled statements which appeared in the public prints, published (unknown to every one of its members) an authentic statement of facts, I feel convinced that the thinking party of the community will no longer require from the wounded feelings of a brother a repetition of these disgusting proceedings. I once more urge upon you, my Lord, that course which you say is without precedent; the occasion will justify you in making one. My sister is daily subjected to the bitterness that results from the presence of those who have so basely slandered her. I should instantly have relieved her from this, had I not known that by so doing I should give fresh opportunity for calumniating her, and act ungratefully to her illustrious and generous mistress, the Duchess of Kent, whose noble conduct will ever be gratefully remembered by my family, and duly appreciated and respected by every well-thinking person within this realm.

HASTINGS.

The following correspondence between the Queen, the Dowager Marchioness of Hastings, and Lord Melbourne, has been placed in our hands for publication by the mother of Lady Flora Hastings:—

To the Editor of the Morning Post

Sir,—Being unable to reach the original calumniator or calumniators of my daughter, Lady Flora Hastings, and having received no mark of public reparation from Her Majesty's responsible advisers, I consider it due to my personal and family honour to show that I have sought it. I am reluctantly obliged to have recourse to the publication of the following letters.—The first letter in this correspondence, addressed to Her Majesty, would have been very incorrectly placed here, had it not been for its official answer, and the report which is in circulation, that I had been guilty of writing an improper letter, called "An impertinent letter to the Queen." With whom such an imputation originated (as no copy of it has been given beyond my own family) may appear extraordinary, but it is to me quite immaterial; not so the refutation of a charge so serious. Some other letters received from and addressed to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, are not inserted, although connected with the same dreadful subject, from a wish to withhold, as far as possible, everything that would unnecessarily associate her Royal Highness's name with these occurrences; except the expression of my unalterable respect and gratitude for her Royal Highness's conduct towards my daughter, and her feeling towards myself.

Loudoun Castle, April 8, 1839. F. HASTINGS (MURE) LOUDOUN

Loudoun Castle, March 7, 1839.

Madam,—It is hardly to be imagined that your Majesty should feel any surprise in receiving the present letter. The anguish of a mother's heart, under circumstances such as mine, can only be understood by a mother. But no one can be at a loss to know that loyalty to your Majesty, and justice to my innocent child, demand from me an explicit reference to your Majesty on the atrocious calumnies and unblushing falsehoods against my daughter's reputation, which the perpetrators have dared to circulate even in the palace of the Sovereign. I have had the honour of remembering your Majesty in childhood. I am deeply and gratefully attached to your admirable mother; and I have cherished, in distance, absence, bad health, and many sorrows, a deep interest in the real honour and glory of your reign. My husband served his country honourably, and with devoted zeal, and was particularly known to your royal race; and my own family, during a long line, have been distinguished as faithful servants of their Kings. My grandfather lost his life in the service of his Sovereign. With so many claims on my feelings of old—although now unfashionable—aristocracy, it is impossible to suppose me capable of disrespect or want of loyalty towards your Majesty.—A feeling, Madam, not less unbecoming towards you than repugnant to what I feel amiable in myself. But, I trust, a sense of morality is not yet so callous a thing as not to be held in some due respect even in the sight of a thoughtless world, and to justify my appealing directly to your Majesty to refute, by some act, calculated to mark your indignant sense of the slanders which some person or persons have ventured to cast in your Majesty's presence upon my daughter, and betrayed your Majesty to follow up by a course of proceeding, such as was, no doubt, done on their part with a wish to try to degrade the victim of their persecution. It is my duty respectfully to call your Majesty's attention to its being not more important for my daughter, than essentially consonant to your Majesty's honour and justice, not to suffer the criminal inventor of such falsehoods to remain without discovery. To a female Sovereign especially, women of all ranks in Britain look with confidence for protection, and (notwithstanding the difference of their rank) for sympathy. To such honest feelings of respect (for they take their origin in that) I ought not to suppose your Majesty indifferent—far less can I imagine that, as your Majesty increases in years, you will not feel, Madam, more and more the value of that estimate of your high place, which would make no one doubt of your commanding reparation (as far as reparation can be made) for an infamous calumny, as not less incumbent as an act of necessary morality in the case of the public, as it assuredly is to the individual who so severely suffers from such defamation. This is not a matter that can or will be hushed up, and it is all-important that no time should be lost in calling the culpable to account. With this appeal to your Majesty's upright feelings, I have the honour to be, Madam, your Majesty's dutiful subject and servant, F. HASTINGS and (MURE) LOUDOUN.

Loudoun Castle, March 8, 1839.

My Lord,—I trouble your Lordship with the enclosed letter, in order to ensure its immediate and safe delivery, and I have to request you will present it yourself to her Majesty. I have, &c.

To Viscount Melbourne, &c. F. HASTINGS and (MURE) LOUDOUN.

South-street, March 11, 1839.

Madam,—I have this morning received your Ladyship's letter of the 8th instant, together with a letter addressed to the Queen, which letter I will lose no time in laying before her Majesty; and I remain, Madam, your Ladyship's faithful and obedient servant,

MELBOURNE.

The Marchioness of Hastings, &c.

Downing-street, March 12, 1839.

Madam,—According to your Ladyship's desire, I have delivered to her Majesty your letter of the 7th inst.

The allowance which her Majesty is anxious to make for the natural feelings of a mother upon such an occasion, tended to diminish that surprise which could not be otherwise than excited by the tone and substance of your Ladyship's letter.

Her Majesty commands me to convey to your Ladyship the expression of her deep concern at the unfortunate circumstances which have recently taken place. Her Majesty hastened to seize the first opportunity of testifying to Lady Flora Hastings her conviction of the error of the impression which had prevailed; and her Majesty is still most desirous to do everything in her power to soothe the feelings of Lady Flora and her family, which must have been painfully affected by the events which have occurred.—I have the honour to remain, Madam, your Ladyship's obedient and humble servant,

MELBOURNE.

Loudoun Castle, March 10, 1839.

My Lord,—When I observe that no steps are taken to repair, as far as reparation is possible, the indignity offered, three weeks ago, to my daughter, within the precincts of Her Majesty's palace, your Lordship cannot be surprised at receiving this letter from me. I am told that, as the responsible adviser of the Sovereign, your Lordship considers it as your constitutional right to appoint and to dismiss Her Majesty's household. As it is known to be your Lordship's principle, I address myself to you, on whom the sacred trust and heavy responsibility rest, of marking respect for good order, and punishing abuse. The nature and the manner of the course pursued in this atrocious conspiracy (for it admits of no other name) were unexampled, and yet Sir James Clark remains Her Majesty's physician. I claim at your hands, my Lord, as a mark of public justice, the removal of Sir James Clark.—I am, my Lord, your Lordship's most humble servant,

F. HASTINGS and (MURE) LOUDOUN.

To the Right Hon. Lord Viscount Melbourne.

South-street, March 17, 1839.

Madam,—Late yesterday evening, the 16th inst., I had the honour of receiving your ladyship's letter of the 10th inst., from Loudoun Castle. I mark these dates in order to acquit myself of any delay or neglect in replying to your Ladyship's communication. The demand which your Ladyship's letter makes upon me is so unprecedented and objectionable, that even the respect due to your Ladyship's sex, rank, family, and character, would not justify me in more—it, indeed, it authorises so much—than acknowledging that letter, for the sole purpose of acquainting your Ladyship that I have received it. I have the honour to remain, Madam, with the highest respect, your Ladyship's obedient and humble servant,

MELBOURNE.

Loudoun Castle, March 15, 1839.

My Lord,—Any expression of Her Majesty's sorrow for late occurrences is consolatory to me. If the Queen wishes any explanation of any part of my letter, which, from a dubious expression in your Lordship's, I am uncertain of, I am quite ready to give it. If her Majesty had been thoroughly aware of all the circumstances of the case, "the tone and substance" of my letter could not have excited any surprise. Although a woman, the oath of allegiance, which I have taken to Her Majesty, is as dear to me as to any man; and to that, and the true circumstances of the late transactions, I refer your Lordship. I am, my Lord, your Lordship's most humble servant,

F. HASTINGS and (MURE) LOUDOUN.

To the Right Hon. Lord Viscount Melbourne, &c.

South-street, March 18, 1839.

Madam—I have the honour of acknowledging your Ladyship's letter of the 15th inst., which I received yesterday morning. I neither had, nor have, it in command to express a wish for any explanation of your Ladyship's letter addressed to Her Majesty, nor of any part of it. I have the honour to remain, with high respect, your Ladyship's humble and obedient servant,

MELBOURNE.

The Most Noble the Marchioness Dowager of Hastings.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—On Tuesday afternoon the ballot for the Presidency of the Chamber of Deputies came on, when the result was, for M. Passy, 223; O. Barrot, 193; M. Dupin, 9. Leaving a majority of 30 in favour of M. Passy.

RUSSIA.—Count Nesselrode is in disgrace, and has been given to understand that a long journey out of the Russian dominions would tend to the recovery of his health! Baron de Tatischef has been summoned from Vienna, to take the office of Minister of Foreign Affairs. Various rumours prevail as to the cause of this disgrace. The general belief is, that the Emperor is dissatisfied with the diplomacy in Persia and British India, and much mortified at having been compelled to make concessions and asseverations to the British Court, which he feels will throw an impediment in the way of his future proceedings in respect to the East.

SPAIN.—M. Zea Bermudez had not been well received by the Austrian Cabinet. Prince Metternich only granted him one audience, at which he is stated to have told the Spanish diplomatist that his departure from Vienna would be agreeable to the Government. He was, accordingly, to leave Vienna on the 5th inst.

TURKEY.—The last intelligence from Constantinople states that the Sultan is anxious for war, and actively preparing for it. A portion of his army had approached the Syrian frontier, so that the slightest incident might lead to hostilities between the troops of Hafiz Pasha and those of Ibrahim. All the commercial letters written from the Turkish capital represent a rupture as imminent. The Ambassadors of the great powers were doing all they could to prevent it, but hitherto they had failed in persuading the Sultan to suspend his armaments, which were still proceeding on a formidable scale.

Capt. Walker, R.N., was presented to the Sultan on the 22d ult. He had not yet assumed his new duties as Instructor-General to the Turkish fleet, but had put on his Ottoman uniform, and was daily present at the operations in the arsenal. A decoration was preparing for him. The other British Naval officers, Captains Foote, Massie, and Legard, left Constantinople on 22d ult, in the Acheron steamer. The Sultan, in answer to a joint note, presented to him by the English, French, and Russian Ambassadors, on the subject of the warlike preparations proceeding in the capital, assured them of his pacific intentions, but was still continuing his armaments. The fleet, composed of 27 sail, was to be ready for sea in the course of 10 days.

PORTUGAL.—The ministerial embarrassments still continue, and Donna Maria finds as much difficulty in forming an efficient ministry as Louis Philippe.

The illustrious Admiral Jervis, the hero of St. Vincent, who rose to the first rank in the British Navy, and to the peerage, as Earl of St. Vincent, has left on record, under his own hand, a lesson full of instruction and promise for the young Midshipman, or any other youth of limited pecuniary means, and of honourable ambition. His father, he writes, set him afloat in the Navy, with an outfit of 20*l*., a laced hat, a sword, and a coat which fitted him like a sack, being made large, for him to grow up to it. The 20*l*. being expended, he contracted a debt for 20*l*. more, for which he drew upon his father, and the draft was dishonoured. Whereupon the young hero left his mess; drew his rations with the common sailors; made his second pair of trowsers with his own hands, out of the ticking of his hammock; and "ever since then," he said, with emphasis, "I never lived beyond my means." He never afterwards could tolerate an officer's getting in debt, saying they had better much live on rations.—Charleston, S. C., Mercury.

Theatres.

ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE.—Her Majesty on Saturday night honoured this theatre with her presence to witness the performance of La Sonnambula. To offer any notice of an opera which has been so often represented would be unnecessary, except to mention the re-appearance of Rubini as Elvino, and to repeat our unqualified approbation of Persiani's performance. Throughout the whole opera her singing was delightful, but the finale was, without exception, in tone, sweetness, and execution, unrivalled. On Tuesday night the performance of La Gazza Ladra introduced for the first time Mademoiselle Dettmer, in the character of Pippo. She possesses a sweet voice, of moderate compass, and is perfectly acquainted with the business of the stage. Her Majesty was present, and remained until the close of the first act of the ballet.

OLYMPIC.—A smart little burletta in one act, entitled Doctor Dilworth, was produced at this house on Monday night, and was, upon the whole, successful—in as far, at least, as plentiful applause and hearty laughter denote success.

HAYMARKET.—On Monday night was produced a neatly-written new comedy, in two acts, called Touch and Take: or, the Law of the Kiss. It is founded on a certain law, which existed some years ago in Germany (wherein the scene of action is laid). The piece was entirely successful, and was followed by the revival of the farce, Rural Felicity.

Mr. Kollmann's Concert.—Mr. Kollmann gave a concert on Monday evening at the Hanover-square Rooms, for the purpose of exhibiting the superior powers which are stated to belong to a new grand piano-forte, of which he is the inventor, and for which he has obtained a patent. The new qualities may be briefly described as securing better quality and larger quantity of tone than is ordinarily found in other instruments, with greater facility of tuning, and standing much longer in tune, than is the case generally. These advantages result from a novel arrangement of the mechanism of the interior, by means of which the hammers are made to strike downwards upon the strings and towards the sound-board, instead of the reverse, which is the plan adopted in all other instruments. The concert was fashionably attended: the singers were Miss Birch, Miss Fanny Wyndham, Miss Doiby, Begrez, Phillips, and Giubilei. Mori, Puzzi, and Hausman, were among the principal instrumental performers.

Literary Notices.

England in 1839; with particular reference to her Naval and Diplomatic Position. By Henry Headley Parish, Esq. Hatchard.

THE author concentrates his wrath upon the Foreign Secretary, whom he accuses of being in the interest of Russia, and consigns to the block without benefit of Clergy. As regards his reasoning upon Naval matters, it is much of a piece with what we have often confuted; and the author, not having the fear of Sir John Barrow before his eyes, questions the Baronet's statement, whom he accuses of disingenuousness, whilst he himself adopts the very course he deprecates, in reference to the published List of the Navy.

The reader will be amused at the programme of the northern confederacy, which Mr. Parish intimates will be formed for the subjugation of England; and the facility with which he concentrates the Navies of Russia, Sweden, Denmark, and Holland, bringing them to bear upon John Bull, who is supposed to be sound—somniferous—not even with the Bristol man's precaution of keeping one eye open, as our legislators so eloquently express it, but caught napping before he can form a junction of his fleet from Plymouth, Portsmouth, and Sheerness.

His hunt to Jonathan for the capture of our squadrons in the Pacific, Cape of Good Hope, and India stations, appears to us to savour somewhat of selling the bear's skin before the animal is secured. It is an admirable idea, however; and it appears to us a pity that the mind which has the capacity to conceive these mighty projects, should be doomed to the drudgery of diplomatic labours at the desk, instead of controlling events at the head of fleets and armies.

The Barber of Paris: or, Moral Retribution. By Paul De Kock. 3 vols. Whittaker and Co.

HOWEVER popular the writings of this author are in France, we much doubt the success of English translations. Paul De Kock administers to the vitiated taste of the French people: his romances are crammed with intrigues and licentiousness, and withal are extremely piquant and clever. But the English repudiate works of a vicious character, and they are only sought after by roués. The Barber of Paris, one of De Kock's earliest novels, with its "moral retribution," has a most immoral tendency. Most of the characters in the work are, however, masterly sketches; for instance, the following Bobadil:—

"The Chevalier Chaudorellie, who had just arrived at Master Touquet's shop, was four-and-thirty years of age; though, from his wrinkled face and hollow cheeks, he might fairly have been taken for the riper years of forty-five; his sallow complexion was relieved by two small scarlet circles, which shone upon his high cheek bones, and, by their brilliancy and depth of colour, palpably betrayed their origin. His eyes were small but lively, and Monsieur Chaudorellie, who never fixed them on the person he addressed, maintained them in a state of rapid and incessant locomotion; his small pug-nose represented an emphatic contrast with the spacious elongation of his mouth, which was surmounted with immense mustachios of the fiery colour of his hair, while his nether lip was ornamented with a quaint imperial, tapering to the bottom of his chin.

"The Chevalier's stature was somewhat about four feet ten, and the skin-and-bone condition of his body was the more perceptible from the tight and threadbare garment which enclosed it. His doublet had sustained the loss of sundry buttons, and, having been both darned and botched in a variety of places, was evidently on the point of a relapse into its former apertures. On the other hand, his haut-de-chausses, or inexpressibles, ridiculously over-large, displayed a most voluminous protusion round his thighs, and more emphatically showed the thinness of the shanks below; for the tawny funnel boots which fell upon his ancles did not suffice to hide the utter absence of a calf. His heels were full two inches high, and always decorated with a pair of monstrous spurs; his doublet and his inexpressibles, originally of a roseate hue, had sensibly departed from their pristine colour, and were associated with a little cloak as faded as the other parts of his costume, and falling barely to his hip. If to these we add a ruff of most extravagant dimensions; a little hat and old red plume, invariably cocked upon his ear; an old green silken belt, a sword much longer than the weapons carried at that period, so much so, that the hilt was on his chest when the opposite extremity was nearly on the ground, we shall have a pretty faithful portrait of the personage who styled himself the [illegible] knighted, and afterwards elected a Knight of the [illegible]

The Queen has been pleased to confer the hon knighthood upon Major Thomas Livingston Mi Surveyor-General of New South Wales.

GOOD COUNSEL.—BY BLAKE O'BRIEN.

WHAT if Simon does tell thee an angel thou art, While Judas makes no such la de da
'tis in the blood, cadedis! honour above all things!—and these are not the times for trifling!—I am what they call at Court, 'punctilious on the point of honour.' Let me but mark a disrespectful wink—a distant look—but feel another's cloak brush mine—presto!—my sword is bare; I know no other argument, I would fight a child of five years old who treated me with the remotest disrespect!"

Sir Harris Nicolas' History of the Orders of Knighthood of the British Empire. Part 2.—The progress of this very superb and elaborate work is most satisfactory. In the part before us we have the history of the Order of the Garter from 1477 to 1564: it also includes a copy of the statutes made in 1522, and which, with few exceptions, now govern the Order. The copious notes evince the great industry and research of the learned Editor.

Greece: Pictorial, Descriptive, and Historical. By C. Wordsworth, D.D. W. S. Orr and Co.—The third part, like all the preceding, of this very choice work is superbly embellished with three steel and 28 wood engravings, from designs by Capt. Irton, Copley Fielding, Sargent, &c. Many of them are perfect gems.

History of Napoleon. Part 2. R. Tyas.—This publication is carefully compiled from the various French and English Memoirs, and seems to us clear and impartial. The present part brings us to the year 1797. The work is extraordinarily cheap, for there is scarcely a page without illustrations, and some of them are singularly beautiful and spirited.

H.B.—Nos. 585 and 586. The first represents the collision between the Lords and Commons: the Duke of Wellington and Lord John Russell as a bull-dog and mastiff quarrelling "Who's to have the stick;" and the other placing Lord Melbourne as "Giovanni in London," saluted by the "Infernal Chorus"—"Turn out, turn out." Lord M. is surrounded by sundry imps of the nether world, including every shade of radical, who are determined to expel the intruding premier from their domain. Charles Buller, Duncombe, Leader, and Grote, figure on this occasion; but Lord Brougham leads the savage chorus, and points in derision at the fallen Don. Lord M., a middle-aged Giovanni, looks around with dismay, and prepares to turn out according to orders.

THE LATE WAR BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.

"If ever a new war should break out, we trust that Great Britain, at least, will avoid the errors which led to a conclusion of the last, inconsistent with the power and resources of the empire."

ON the 18th June, 1812, the United States of America, after several years of complaints and negotiations, declared war against Great Britain. The moment seemed to be favourable. the great and then deemed invincible enemy of England was preparing to strike the blow which was to lay the continent of Europe at his feet, or render it entirely subservient to his views against the only power which had always resisted him. The British Armies were occupied in a war for the independence of Spain; the treasures of Britain were lavished in support of her allies. Upper Canada was partly peopled by emigrants from the United States, who might be supposed unwilling to shed the blood of their kindred; the people of Lower Canada had but recently been represented by authority as seditious, or so easily turned away from their allegiance as to endanger the Government. There were but about 1000 British troops in both Provinces, scattered along a frontier of 1300 miles; the St. Lawrence, an immense Military highway, open to the United States, and leading into the heart of Canada, undefended, and thus endangering the existence of the British forces stationed on its borders. In the view of keeping up the price of Bills of Exchange, of which the Military Government was the chief vender, the specie of the country had been suffered to be carried in the U. States. Since the war of 1775, there had existed in the Canadas a Militia merely in name, serving chiefly to drain annually a few thousand dollars from the public coppers. Accordingly, on the arrival of the news of the declaration of war, at Montreal and Quebec, the first thought of many individuals in those cities, was that of packing up. The Governor, Sir George Provost, and the people at large, thought differently. It was determined to defend both Provinces; the Legislature was assembled, Government paper, bearing interest and payable in Bills of Exchange on England, was substituted for specie. Two battalions arriving in the country to relieve two others under orders for their departure, added to the regular force. At the instance of the Government, a law had passed during the preceding winter, for drafting the Militia for active service, and four weak battalions had been assembled before the war. Every description of force was now put into activity; the citadel of Quebec was guarded by the inhabitants of the town, proud of the duty and of the confidence of the Government, and extending the same feelings throughout the country. In a month after the declaration of war, the lower province seemed to be prepared to become the assailant.

The Americans had collected, in the summer of 1811, their principal regular force on their N. W. Frontier, against the Indians, whom they attacked. This force, joined by Militia and Volunteers, had set out on its march for Upper Canada, long before the declaration of war. It made roads through immense forests, depending on these roads for its communications and supplies, and arrived at Detroit, on 5th July, about 2500 strong. The British force on that frontier was merely nominal. On 12th July the enemy's General passed over into Upper Canada, and issued a Proclamation to the apparently defenceless inhabitants, inviting them to join his standard, or at least to remain inactive, assuring them of the protection of the United States. After some trifling affairs with the handful of British troops stationed at Amherstburg, and hearing of the surrender of Michilimacinack, on the 17th July, to a few soldiers, voyageurs, and Indians, he became alarmed for his own safety, and returned to Detroit on 7th Aug. Sir George Provost had intrusted the Government and command of Upper Canada to General Brock, a downright politician, an able, active, and spirited soldier; he had infused an excellent spirit into the loyal inhabitants. The command of Lake Erie still remained with the British. On 5th Aug., Brock prorogued his Parliament at York, on 12th he was at Amherstburg, and on the 16th General Hull, and his whole Army, surrendered to a force of 330 regulars, 400 Militia, and 600 Indians.

People could hardly believe their own eyes, when they saw so considerable a part of the American regular force marched captive into Montreal and Quebec, within two months after they heard of the war. This pleasing sight, however, produced some mischievous effects:—the enemy was undervalued. Men who never had heard the whistling of a musket ball, or had a bayonet pointed at their breasts, dared to speak of the Americans as shall excel, compared agreeably to Art or rather excessively the Manufactures', in all its branches, the system upon [illegible] digested and unfounded, as their durability, as no house [illegible] the surrender of Hull—projects and opinions which, however, produced many of our future disasters.

Fort George. His ardour hastened him to its the only Army. He put himself at the head of a small party which was still resisting the enemy, and his country was too soon deprived of his talents and services. The enemy obtained possession of the heights, but was soon dislodged, and in great part made prisoners by General Sheaffe, on whom the command had devolved.—A temporary truce ensued in this quarter, till it was interrupted by a ridiculous gasconade and impotent attempt at invasion, on the 20th and 28th November, near Fort Erie, by the American General Smyth. Another nearly parallel attempt was made about the same time by the British Naval force on Lake Ontario, against Sacket's Harbour. The rest of the winter passed away without any Military event, excepting on 22d January, General Proctor, after a smart action, captured 495 prisoners, with the American General Winchester, on the Detroit frontier, and an attack on Ogdensburg, which, in reality, meant nothing, unless it had been a prelude to an attack on Sacket's Harbour.

From the time of the surrender of Hull, the Americans, however much they choose to blame that officer, seem to have been fully aware of the cause of his disaster; they strained every nerve to obtain the mastery of the lakes. The ice no sooner disappeared on Lake Ontario than they were out with a superior Naval force from Sacket's Harbour. On 27th April they landed and took possession of York, the capital of Upper Canada, destroyed public buildings, wreaked their vengeance on a printing press, and destroyed the frame of a ship, building for the British service on the lake, General Sheaffe retiring, after some resistance, towards Kingston. The enemy's fleet proceeded to Niagara, where it landed troops, and then returned to Sacket's Harbour, from whence it conveyed additional force to the same quarter. On the 26th May, General Vincent was driven from the position of Fort George, and the place captured; the British retiring along the lake, towards Burlington Bay, leaving the whole Niagara Frontier, containing a very large proportion of the whole population of Upper Canada, in the power of the enemy. Gen. Proctor had at this time returned from the rapids of the Miami, where he had captured 467 American soldiers, and killed or wounded as many more; but the enemy was still collecting, and his communications threatened. From Fort George the American Army proceeded in pursuit of General Vincent, depending on the lake for its supplies, and determined to take possession of Burlington heights, which would have left no communication for General Proctor. General Vincent was at Burlington heights. The enemy had advanced to Stony Creek, confiding in his superiority, and his distance from the British. Lieut.-Col. Harvey, Dep. Adj.-Gen., conceived and chiefly executed the project of surprising the enemy in the night. Before day, on 6th June, he entered the enemy's camp, consisting of about 3000 men, with 704 bayonets, killing and wounding a great number of the enemy, and retired, carrying off two Generals and 100 prisoners. This affair so effectually disconcerted the Americans, that they returned hastily to Fort George, opening to the British the communication with part of the Niagara Frontier, and, in fact, saving for the time the whole upper part of the Province. The surrender of 541 of the enemy, under Boerstler, to the Indians and a few British soldiers, confined the enemy to Fort George.

Whilst the American troops and their Naval force were absent at the head of the lake, an attempt was made on Sacket's Harbour Col. Baynes, Adj.-Gen., had nominally the command, but Sir George Prevost, the Commander-in-Chief, was present. He called off the troops, after they had reached the defences of the place, and had sustained considerable loss. This affair, by the opportunity which it afforded to Sir George's political enemies to lessen the estimation in which he was held, and by the misunderstanding of which it laid the foundation between him and the Naval service, proved very unfortunate to the British interest in the Canadas during the remainder of the war.

The campaign continued some time without any event of much moment. On 3d June, two American armed vessels, carrying 22 guns, were gallantly captured by the British troops at Isle aux Noix, under the command of Lt.-Col. George Taylor, Maj. 100th reg., after a well-contested action of three hours, which almost annihilated the enemy's Naval power on Lake Champlain. On 11th July there was an attack on Black Rock, and on the 20th of that month Col. Murray destroyed the American Barracks at Plattsburgh.

On the 10th Sept. Commodore Perry, with a Naval force long blockaded at Erie, captured the whole of the British force on Lake Erie. General Proctor could no longer be supplied on the Detroit frontier; his only remaining communication was by land several hundred miles through forests. His situation was now becoming that of Hull at Detroit: he had one advantage, however, which Hull had not—the friendship of the Indians. He unaccountably delayed his retreat until a fortnight after the loss of the fleet, and till the near approach of a superior force of the enemy. On the 5th October, he was only three days' march (56 miles) from Detroit, pursuing his retreat along the Trenche. His force consisted of less than a thousand British and Militia, and about 1,200 Indians: the Americans were upwards of 5,000. A sudden charge of mounted riflemen broke the British line; the whole was thrown into confusion, and the greater part of the British became prisoners. The Indians, in another part of the field, fought bravely, but the Americans finally prevailed. They returned immediately after the action to Detroit with their prisoners, and Proctor, with a few stragglers and a number of Indians, assembled at Ancaster on the 17th October.

A large proportion of the American forces on the Niagara frontier, proceeded down the Lake early in October, and were followed by land by a part of the British force. The diminished numbers of the remaining part of the British Army, the disaster on Lake Erie, and the state of affairs on the Detroit frontier, again compelled its Commander to fall back on Burlington Heights.

The American forces were gradually collected at the lower ends of Lakes Ontario and Champlain, under Generals Wilkinson and Hampton, with the intention of making a combined attack on Montreal, while the chief part of the British regular force was in Upper Canada. It was evident that if this attack should have succeeded, and the command of that city and the surrounding country been retained by the Americans, Upper Canada was conquered, and every British soldier in it a prisoner, or forced to fight his way to Quebec. There was nothing to prevent Wilkinson, with suitable boats, and able pilots for the rapids, to land on the island of Montreal, with an army completely equipped, in three or four days after leaving Lake Ontario. Hampton was a couple days' march from the St. Lawrence. Sir George Prevost, who had returned to the Lower Province, called upon the people of Lower Canada to defend their country, and never was the call of a Commander, under similar circumstances, more cheerfully obeyed. The fighting, however, fell to the lot of the embodied militia and regular forces. There seemed to have been some misunderstanding or misinformation with respect to time, between the enemy's Commanders. Hampton seems to have employed himself from the 20th Sept. to the 20th Oct. in calling out and collecting the forces of Lower Canada, by the time of Gen. Wilkinson's arrival. On the 21st Oct. the former entered the province with a force variously stated at from 5,000 to 7,000 men, apparently with the intention of penetrating to the St. Lawrence by the River Charteauguay. On the 26th, he came upon Col. De Salaberry's position on that river, about 30 miles from the frontier. This officer, a native of Canada, belonging to one of its old and distinguished families, had served with the British Army in various parts of the world. To great activity and personal intrepidity he united military science and experience, and possessed the entire confidence of his little force, the advance of the army, consisting of about 300 men, almost entirely natives of Lower Canada, and composed of Fencibles, Voltigeurs, Militia, and Indians. The enemy, consisting chiefly of new levies, seemed to think that the battle was to be won by field manœuvring and platoon firing. Col. De Salaberry took advantage of all the protection for his men that time, and the facilities afforded by a wooded country, permit; and poured in a deadly fire, every man making sure of his object: the Colonel setting the example. The enemy's loss was considerable, but has never been correctly ascertained; that of Col. De Salaberry's force was two killed and 16 wounded.—Hampton retired to the frontier, and thence to Plattsburgh, where he remained in a state of inactivity, his army dwindling away by sickness and desertion.

Gen. Wilkinson, with his army, left Grenadier Island on the 8th Nov. in boats and other craft. It consisted of between 8,000 and 9,000 men, completely equipped and provided. He passed the British Fort at Prescott on the night of the 6th. It was a beautiful moon light: he might have been the next evening at the island of Montreal, as soon as Gen. Prevost could receive the account of his approach. The militia called to oppose Hampton had just been sent to their homes. Wilkinson, however, landed part of his troops to pass Prescott; he again landed the greatest part of them on the British side, above the Long Sault, in quest of obstacles which did not exist. These delays gave time to detachments from the garrisons of Kingston and Prescott, to overtake him, and to Sir George Prevost again to call out the militia, about 20,000 of whom were assembling from various parts of the country. On the 11th Nov. the American Gen. Boyd, with about 2,000 men, of the elite of the American army, marched against Col. Morrison, who commanded the forces from Kingston to Prescott which hung on their rear, amounting to 800 men. The Americans were beaten, retired to their boats, and after embarking a force of 2,500 men, under Gen. Brown, which had proceeded to Cornwall, opposed only by the inhabitants of the country, the whole army crossed to Salmon River, took up a position at the French Mills, from which, after destroying their boats, they ultimately proceeded to Plattsburgh, on Lake Champlain, sending 3,000 men to Sacket's Harbour.

The American forces having been chiefly withdrawn from the Niagara Frontier, the British in that quarter prepared to act on the offensive. On the 19th December the enemy evacuated Fort George, and burnt the town of Newark, leaving the inhabitants, to all of whom they had promised protection, and many of them bloodily to the Americans, ruined and houseless, in the midst of winter. On the 19th Col. Murray took Fort Niagara by surprise. On the 30th General Riall retaliated on the enemy, destroying Black Rock and Buffalo.—(To be concluded in our next.)

NELSON AND ST. VINCENT.

No two men in the same professional career, and both of consummate excellence, ever offered more points of marked diversity in all the particulars which distinguish character and signalise the kinds of human genius. Alike in courage, except that the valour of the one was more buoyant, more constitutional—of the other, more the steady result of reflection, and the produce of many great qualities combined, than the mere mode of temperament;—alike without any difference whatever in that far higher quality, moral courage and political, which is the highest pitch of it; alike in perfect nautical skill, the result of talents matured by ample experience, and of the sound judgment which never disdains the most trifling details, but holds nothing trivial connected with an important subject;—yet, even in their professional abilities, these great Captains differed; for the more stern mind of the one made him a severe disciplinarian, while the amiable nature of the other seduced him into an habitual relaxation of rules whose rigorous enforcement wounded, or at least galled his kindlier feelings. Not that either Jervis stooped to the fopperies by which some little minds render the service intrusted to their hands as ridiculous as themselves; or that Nelson failed to exact strict compliance with rules, wherever their infraction would be manifestly hurtful; but the habits of the two men upon ordinary occasions were opposite, and might be plainly seen by an inspection of the ships that bore their flags. So, too, Nelson was less equal to the far-seeing preparation and unshaken steadfastness of purpose required to sustain a long-continued operation; and would, therefore, ill have borne the monotony of a blockade, such as that which kept Collingwood for years on ship-board, or that which Jervis maintained off Brest with the Channel fleet. It is also undeniable, that, although nothing could exceed the beauty and perfect fitness of his dispositions for action when the whole operations were reduced to their ultimate point, yet he could not, like Jervis, have formed the plan of a Naval campaign; or combined all the operations over a large range of coast and sea, making each part support the other, while all conduced to the main purpose. Thus, too, it may be doubted if St. Vincent would have displayed that sudden, almost intuitive promptitude of decision, the result more of an ardent soul than a penetrating sagacity, which led Nelson to his marvellous course from the old world to the new, in 1805, when he in an instant discovered that the French fleet had sailed to the West Indies, and, having crossed the Atlantic in chase of them, again discovered that they had returned, and appeared in Europe almost as soon as the enemy arrived, whom the mere terror of his tremendous name had driven before him from hemisphere to hemisphere. That the movements of his illustrious master would have been as rapid, and his decision as prompt, had the conjecture impressed itself on his mind with the same force, none can doubt: and it may be further admitted, that such a peremptory will as the latter showed—such a fixed resolution to be obeyed—such an obdurate, inflexible, unteachable ignorance of the word "impossible," when any preparation was to be made—formed no part of Nelson's character; although he showed his master's profound and crass ignorance of that word—the mother-tongue of little souls—when any mighty feat was to be done, such as souls like these cannot rise to comprehend. He who fought the great fight with the Foudroyant would have engaged his Spanish first-rates, had his flag off St. Vincent's floated like Nelson's over a seventy-four; but Nelson could not have put to sea in time for intercepting the Spanish fleet, any more than he could have cured or quelled the mutinous contagion which infected and distracted Jervis's crews on the eve of the action.

If, even in a Military view, these great warriors thus differed, in all other respects they are rather to be contrasted than compared. While it was hard to tell whether Jervis excelled most in or out of his profession, Nelson was nothing on shore—nay, had weaknesses, which made the sea air as necessary, if not to his mental condition, at least to his renown, as it is to the bodily health of some invalids. The great mind of the one was the natural ally of pride, the simpler nature of the other became an easy prey to vanity. The latter felt so acutely the delight of being loved and admired by all—for to all he was kind himself—that he could not either indulge in it with moderation, or conceal it from others. Severely great, retiring within himself, occupied with his own reflections, the former disregarded the opinion of those whom he felt destined to command; and only descended to gain men's favour that he might avail himself of their co-operation, which he swiftly converted into service. While Nelson thought aloud, Jervis's words were little apt to betray the feelings that ruled, or the meditations that occupied his mind. The one was great only in action, the other combined in a rare, perhaps an unexampled manner, all the noble qualities which make counsel vigorous and comprehensive, with those which render execution prompt and sure. In the different temper of the men's minds you could easily tell that the one would be generally popular, from the devotion which the multitude always pay to brilliant valour, and the affection which a gentle, kind, innocent nature is calculated to win; while the other, with courage as undaunted, though eclipsed by greater and rarer qualities, stood too far removed from the weaknesses of ordinary men to appear in such an amiable light; and by the extent of his capacity, and his habits of command, secured the respectful submission of others more than he won their love. Yet, while of Nelson it was justly said, that no serious breach of discipline was ever overlooked by him; of Jervis it was as truly observed, that all good officers—all men employed under him, whether in the civil or military service—spoke of him as they felt, with admiration of his genius, approaching to enthusiasm: although the followers of his illustrious friend adored their idol with yet more fervent devotion. In his political opinions this great Commander was liberal and free, ever preferring the humane and enlightened side; and though loyally attached to the constitution of his country, yet careless what offence he might give to existing rulers by the unrestrained openness of his sentiments upon public affairs. Accordingly, he was even a less favourite with George III. and his court than his great master, whose party was always opposed to that narrow-minded and bigoted Prince.

It is truly painful to fling in that shade, without which this comparative sketch would lose all likeness to its original. The conduct of Lord St. Vincent was always high and decorous, and although he had a singular aversion to cant of any kind, nor to any more than that of an overdone and pharisaical morality, he never lowered, in his own person, the standard of private any more than of public virtue; wisely holding all conspicuous men as trustees for the character of the people, and in some sort representatives of the people's virtues. Lord Nelson, in an unhappy moment, suffered himself to fall into the snares laid for his honour by regal craft, and baited with fascinating female charms. But for this he might have defied all the malice of his enemies, whether at sea or on shore—in the Navy or at the Court, because nothing is more true than that great merit is safe from all enemies save one—safe and secure, so its possessors will only not join its foes.—Edinburgh Review.

In order to remove this abuse, and prevent as much as possible the frightful mortality among the trading marine abroad, is an object of anxious and eminent importance to the State. The contrast of deaths which take place on board trading vessels in only the short stay of two or three months in these countries, and with a crew of not more than from eighteen to thirty men, with those which happen on board a ship-of-war with a crew of perhaps 350 men, and during the station of three years, is most remarkable, and goes far to prove the wanton neglect in the former service evinced for the health of the mariner. The proportion of mortality in the Royal Navy on those stations, when compared with that of the trading marine, is in the former, (while on a sickly station for three years in a crew of the above number,) one to every thirty three; and in the former service, while three months in the same climate, with a crew of thirty men, one to every five. The only means for counteracting this fatal evil in these countries is, by instituting an hospital exclusively for the trading marine, to which all masters should be obliged to send their seamen when taken ill, or to appropriate a distinct portion of the government naval hospitals for that purpose, in those ports where there may be such establishments, and to be under the jurisdiction, in either case, of naval surgeons; the trading mariner would soon be sensible of the comforts and solicitude afforded him, when placed in the care of government officers, from which trading seamen certain hospital deductions may be made according to a fixed and proportionate rule. In addition to this, a visiting medical officer should be authorised to examine the health of each ship's company, and report on the cleanliness or neglect, according to the state of the vessel, which should be remedied by a judicious interference of the laws. Hence, again, would become a union of sentiment and feeling between the trading marine and the officers and seamen of the Royal Navy, from the circumstance of the former being placed under the care of the latter, on those occasions when attention and humanity are seldom forgotten, and which would become at once serviceable and of the greatest possible importance to the nation.

The next section of these laws, which demands the most attentive consideration, is the 36th of 5 & 6 Wm. IV., that no master shall permit his apprentice to quit his ship, except in case of joining the Royal Navy, sickness, desertion, death, or other unavoidable causes, without registering the circumstance in the log-book. This prohibition is overcome by the simple act of directing the mate to insert the same in this book, and acquits the master from the imputation of violating the law in more than one instance; no evidence, save the one alluded to, is required or called for. This requires minute scrutiny, and should be obviated as being most injurious to the wise and judicious act of nautical apprenticeship, which is neutralised by vile practices, that arise out of the inefficiency of the former law. How evident this system must appear when we are informed it is no uncommon circumstance for a master of the trading marine to get a premium of from 10*l.* to 15*l.* with an apprentice, and frequently 30*l.* in the free trade to India on the same account; thus it becomes his interest to dispose of as many apprentices as possible, and the greater number he procures, the more profitable to him; the youth having more severity* inflicted on him than the mariner before alluded to, (who, in like manner, his desertion imposed on him,) under the circumstances of designing illtreatment, soon abandons his master, and is seldom sought after. If the former should join a ship of war, with the master's permission, which is seldom refused, and readily granted, from sinister motives the pay he may earn till the period of his apprenticeship shall have expired, is unduly awarded the latter, and the section XXXIX. 5 and 6 W. IV., is found not only to sanction indirectly this conduct, but also countenances those wrongs, so notorious in the service to which he belonged. Such a law neither encourages the youth to enter the Royal Navy, nor to return to his master, but affords the strongest incentive to the latter, under any or every circumstance, to get rid of his apprentice. The voluntary services of the youthful seaman to the Royal Navy ought to be secured and aided by every judicious means the laws could possibly confer, while, at the same time, the violation of his indentures should not be encouraged. This case also would be an important subject for the consideration of a "tribunal," and if the master was found to suffer by the desertion, and the youth not forced to take such a step, by undue severity, one half of the pay should be retained by the apprentice, and the other half given to the master: but if, on the contrary, the apprentice should be driven to forsake his ship, through any conduct of the master, the half which would otherwise have gone to him, ought to be placed at the disposal of a fund (for the general benefit of the trading mariner) to be described in this part of the work: hence would be eradicated an increasing abuse, productive of a fatal consequence to the nursery of our mariners.

By a review of these laws, portions of which have caused the preceding remarks and animadversions, and inspired a desire to enlarge and dwell on those facts, (experience must consider erroneous, we can discover abundant clauses calculated to secure, in every way conceived, except by the encouragement of the mariner, the interest of the ship-owner—enforced by serious penalties and punishment. Yet the fact cannot be otherwise than irreconcilable that all the forfeitures, arising from even apparent disobedience, inattention, or insubordination, should become appropriated to the latter person and the master, as described by sections VII. and IX., 5 and 6 W. IV. It cannot be accounted for in justice, why such confiscated effects (whether large or small, the principle is synonimous) or arrears of pay should be received by those parties. The desertion, neglect, or withdrawal of the mariner from his duty, does not impose on the shipowner the necessity of paying twice over the seaman who is supposed to be guilty of the above offences, or paying, at the same time while the mariner in question is at his vocation, any other person to perform his portion of the work, or assist in his duty. If this were the case, there would, indeed, be a just ground for the pay and effects to be taken into consideration and retained for the above purposes by the shipowner or master. But where the case is otherwise, in equity to the general body of mariners, and for the encouragement of assiduity, zeal, and fidelity, those effects and pay should be at the disposal of the previously named fund, for the benefit of the whole class referred to. This law is still more discouraging than other portions, and even becomes retaliatory in its effect, by holding out benefits to the master and owner arising from desertion, and requires amendment, as in like manner do all those which, by prescribing forfeiture in money and effects, or arising from the pay of the deceased seaman being appropriated to any other funds than those based on general principles of reward and encouragement.

Through the tenor of this treatise, the laws which govern at present the trading marine have been adverted to in general terms, while in the subsequent pages those of them which appear to be either indefinite in spirit or conspicuously inconsistent, are particularised, and such proposals made as are the result of many years' experience, in both the Royal Navy and trading marine; with the humble view of amendment in the latter service, while many sections are passed over as being of so little strength or importance to the interest or benefit of either, that they would readily yield to the general influence of just and prudent arrangements.

Passing now from those active laws which ought to exist for the reciprocal advantage of the shipowner and mariner, to that system which would not fail to prove beneficial, if subsisting between the latter and the government; it founded on principles of just consideration for the mariner's present wants and future provision; in consideration of which important benefit proposed to be secured to him, claim that obligations should exist on his part toward the Government.

With a view to amend the present laws, and for the establishment of the before-mentioned desirable measures, and in order to cement a perfect, equitable, and just understanding between the Legislature and the mariners of Great Britain, and to attach by indissoluble bonds of interest the latter to the former, it will be found expedient to grant and secure to the trading marine the following privileges—The first great and much desired object should be, while giving him laws and stipulations adapted to the peculiar nature of his calling, and the importance of his services, to endeavour to identify him with the nation, to secure his attachment, and to render him satisfied with his condition and employment; hence, it should be deemed prudent as one of the dearest privileges of the British subject, to extend to the mariner a franchise of one vote after having served seven years at sea, and that liberty to be continued to him while serving in the trading marine, and to cease after being on shore during the intermission of six months, except in cases of being disabled by illness or casualties occurring in the performance of his duty. These and even more privileges being enjoyed by other subjects, cannot be withheld from the mariner; for the prudent possession of which he is as fitted as any other member of society. Secondly, a provision for illness and casualties contracted in the trading marine, subject to certain restrictions and conditions dependent on a mutual contract with the Government; and Thirdly, a support in old age in a national asylum, or by out-pension. To deny the first of these rights to the mariner (who, by the unsettled nature of his avocation, is precluded from every hope of ever possessing the usual qualifications) would be ungrateful, and at least ungenerous. Would it be the consideration due to such men? Well might it be said—

> "Is this your country's, this your chill reward,
> For these, your boasted darling, sons prepared!
> Those who so oft your blood-red flag unfurled,
> Who fixed your empire o'er the wat'ry world:
> Those who first checked Napoleon's mighty away,
> First op'd for Wellington his glorious way!—
> This the reward? Alas! too plainly true,
> Yet still thy'll fight, they'll bleed, they'll starve for you."

But by granting which it would prove the principal step to the end desired, and imperceptibly gain on the attachment of the mariner, and secure his voluntary services for the State, when aided by subsequent measures.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND

BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Lower-hill street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which the Establishment is conducted precludes the possability of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wished it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial, they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to, and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract. Her Majesty Queen Victoria, &c. &c.

No. 158, NEW BOND STREET (opposite Stevens's Hotel).

The great superiority of J. Delcroix and Co.'s Perfumery been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz.

BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared expressly for her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY GEORGE IV.'S PERFUME, BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF,

Originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfumer superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street), but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

BUTLER'S COMPOUND CONCENTRATED DECOCTION, or FLUID EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA, is allowed by medical men to be the best (as it is the original) of the now numerous concentrated preparations recommended for making the Compound Decoction of Sarsaparilla A dessert spoonful of it, diluted with water, makes half a pint of the usual strength. It is prescribed as an alterative in scrofula, scurvy, eruptions of the skin, and all cutaneous diseases; also has been found extremely useful in chronic rheumatism, and in secondary symptoms, and after an improper use of mercury.

Prepared and sold in 4s. 6d., 10s., and 20s. bottles, by Thomas Butler, Chemist, 4, Cheapside, corner of St. Paul's Church-yard, London, and 20, Waterloo-place, opposite the Post Office, Edinburgh; and (authenticated by a fac-simile of his signature, with his address, engraved in the accompanying label) may be procured of J. Sanger, 150, Oxford-street, or through any respectable Druggist.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:— "Sheffield, Oct. 13th, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. LOFTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely ineffectious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE

SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading or any other Sauce.

DR. BAGOT'S SPECIFIC SYRUP.—This

certain, safe, and pleasant remedy, which affords relief in a few hours, and a cure in a few days, in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Irritation, Pain in the Loins, Mercurialism, and General Debility, is warranted not to contain any copaiba, mercury, nor opium; requires no constraint nor change of diet, and may be taken without the least fear of catching cold. Prepared only by George Whiskin, No. 7, Oxford-street, London, in Bottles, 4s. and 21s., stamp included. Agent for the City, R. Johnston, No. 68, Cornhill.

FEVER MEDICINE,

NOW FIRST INTRODUCED INTO EUROPE.

This Medicine has been proved by experience in many thousand cases, to be far more efficacious than any Febrifuge hitherto known, and totally free from the unpleasant effects which sometimes follow the use of Bark and Quinine.

It is purely vegetable; the product of Plants discovered by Dr. Warburg in Central America, under the same parallel in which Peruvian Bark is found. It has been extensively used in the West Indies, British Guiana, America, and the East Indies, and has never been known to fail, even in the most malignant Fevers. Its operation is uniform; its effects immediate and certain; and it may be safely administered to infants at the breast.

It is exhibited in the form of a Tincture. Two doses, of two drachms and a half each, being sufficient in any case. The effects of the Medicine are slightly narcotic and highly audoritic; pains in the head, back, and limbs, immediately relieved, and Fever is eradicated in from three to twenty-four hours.

When the universal prevalence of Fevers, and their contingent as well as direct effects are considered, it will be deemed unnecessary to enlarge upon the value of any addition to the resources of the Medical Art, by which the consequences that now ensue may be averted. But even the value of the Medicine now introduced to the Profession and the public may be enhanced by circumstances, as in the case of Travellers, Naval and Military Officers, and Residents in the Colonies From its portability, it is available at all times, and in all climates, and when other Medical aid cannot be obtained; it may be safely taken under any circumstances, without preparation and with but slight restraint, and with a certainty of immediate relief. Those, therefore, who either on business or pleasure, visit the South of France, Italy, Greece, Turkey, Egypt, and the neighbouring countries, and above all, Residents in the East and West Indies, the Mediterranean, African and South American Colonies, will, it is presumed, avail themselves of a remedy, the perfect safety and extraordinary efficacy of which have been proved in many thousand instances, and in various parts of the world.

DR. WARBURG'S FEVER DROPS are prepared only under his own immediate directions, and issued exclusively by Messrs. PARKER and COMPANY, of King William-street, Charing Cross, London; but they may be obtained of Agents in any part of Great Britain, and also in most of the British Colonies, price 8s per bottle. In localities, however, where they cannot be readily procured of a Chemist or Medicine Vender, orders sent direct to the Proprietors, accompanied by a Post-office Order, or by reference to a house in London, for payment, will be immediately attended to.

AN OLD MERITORIOUS OFFICER IN DISTRESS.—A Lieutenant-Colonel, with a Wife and four Children, who has served his country faithfully upwards of Forty Years in almost every part of the world, having sold his Commission when betwixt Sixty and Seventy years of age for the purpose of producing a better income for his family, was advised to invest the proceeds of the sale thereof in some foreign securities, which having proved fallacious, he has thereby lost his all, and is consequently reduced to the greatest poverty. He has applied for employment in every practicable channel, even in the most humble situations, but has not been able to procure any; he is therefore compelled, by sad necessity, to solicit the assistance of the benevolent public, with the idea of raising a small sum of money to begin some retail business, which may enable him to support his Family.

The undermentioned have known him for many years, and will answer any inquiry as to his gallantry as an Officer, his character as a gentleman, and his sober, economical, and moral conduct as a member of general society; also to the truth of the above statement and his present lamentable situation, and they will gladly receive any subscriptions for him.

Mr. Hamilton, 73, Hatton Garden, London.
Wm. Williams Brown, Esq., Banker, Leeds.
Messrs. Joseph, Rodgers, and Sons, Cutlers, Sheffield.

Subscriptions will also be thankfully received by the undermentioned—

Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Smith, Bankers, 1, Lombard-street, London
Messrs. Hopkinson, Barton, and Co., Bankers, 3, Regent-street, London.

Mr. W. Drury, Furnishing Ironmonger, 12, Castle st., Liverpool.

PORTABLE and FIXED FOUNTAINS of every design, Green Houses, Hot Houses, Hand Glasses, Aviaries, and every kind of Wire Work. Green Houses prepared, and sent ready for fixing, to any part of town or country, with workmen, if required. Heating upon the most approved principles. Roe's Patent and Portable Watercloscts, Baths, &c., &c., fixed by experienced workmen, upon the shortest notice.
Green Houses, of various sizes, always ready for fixing.
F. ROE, 69, Strand, opposite the Adelphi Theatre.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.—FAMILIES in WANT of really good SERVANTS, of every description, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, 326, Oxford-street, centre of Regent-circus, (removed from 134, Oxford-street—established in 1830), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as domestics are waiting to be hired from Ten to Five o'clock. Convenient rooms are appropriated to engagements, which prevents unnecessary trouble at home through promiscuous applications. Many persons are prejudiced against an establishment for hiring servants; but if the servants possess good characters, it must certainly be obviously absurd to suppose that they can be injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure situations. Fee for obtaining a servant, 2s. 6d.; as many as may be required in a family per annum, 14s.

East India House, 19th April, 1839.

PORTSMOUTH, April 26.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Adm. the Hon. R. Fleeming hoisted his flag on Saturday as Commander-in-Chief of the Port: the flag was saluted by the Victory. Adm. Fleeming has since gone on leave, and the port duties have been executed by Adm. the Hon. P. P. Bouverie. Pelican went to Sheerness on Monday to be paid off, and Snipe cutter to Ireland for new raised men. Ætna and Waterwitch were towed out of harbour on Monday: next day the Ætna went to Liverpool and on Thursday the Waterwitch to Plymouth, previous to going to the Cape of Good Hope. Powerful sailed on Wednesday for Plymouth. During the fog of Monday, the Henry Davidson and Protector, West Indiamen, got on the rocks off the Isle of Wight, and, in consequence, the Pantaloon, Vulcan, Messenger, and other Government vessels, were sent down to their assistance: both were got off during Tuesday night, and are now in the harbour, to be taken to one of the Queen's docks for inspection. Pantaloon is ordered to Quebec with supernumeraries for the vessels on the Lakes: she will go about Sunday or Monday. Hydra is waiting orders. Quail cutter has been here from Sheerness, and the Cracker from Guernsey, that her people may be paid wages. Benbow has been undocked this day, and the Victor taken in, to have a few sheets of copper put on: she will be hauled out to-morrow, and then go in ordinary. Britannia is to be docked on Monday. Blonde and Cleo are in the basin, ready for commission. Curlew is still in harbour, short of men. Childers fitting in the basin. Orders have been issued for Her Majesty's birth-day to be celebrated on the 23d May, instead of the 24th. Ships in Port—Britannia, Victory, Benbow, Excellent, Royal George yt., Hydra, Childers, Curlew, Pantaloon, Cracker, Vulcan, and Messenger steamer.

PLYMOUTH, April 23.—(From our own Correspondent.)—April 19th, Sailed the Nethy, tender, for Portsmouth, with the luggage of Adm. Lord A. Beauclerk, and returned to this port on the 20th with Adm. Sir Graham Moore's luggage, who will supersede Lord Amelius next Wednesday, as Com.-in-Chief on this station. 20th—Arrived Aid, lighter, with stores for the dock-yard, from Pembroke. Two drafts of Marines embarked on board Belleisle, 72, and Druid, 44, this day, which has left the barracks with a small number fit for duty; indeed, should Government have occasion to commission any more line-of-battle ships, we know not where the Marines are to come from, unless they were to send for those at St. Sebastian. 21st—Arrived Diligence, Navy transport, from Pembroke, with stores, and sailed again on the 24th, with stores for Chatham Dock-yard: also arrived the Braganza, peninsular st.-packet, from Falmouth, having landed the mails at that port: having taken on board coals, dispatches for London. 22d—Arrived Kite, st.-v., from Holyhead, and started again for Woolwich the following day. Sailed the Alonzo, Lieut Simpson, Agent, with victu. ling stores for Deptford. 23d—Arrived Swale, tender to the Astrea, from Falmouth, with old stores, and sailed on her return to that port the 25th, with stores for the packets. Stirling Castle, 74, ordered for the reception of convicts, is to be fitted by contract. Mr. J. Moffatt, Boatswain, and Mr. J. Burnett, Carpenter, belonging to the Ordinary at this port, have been superannuated, the former at 50*l.*, and the latter at 44*l.* per annum. Impregnable, 104, is ordered to be docked to have her copper scrubbed, and afterwards masted, it is rumoured that she is to supply the place of the Royal Adelaide as flag ship, but we give this merely as a rumour. A report has also been in circulation, we believe without foundation, for these last three or four days, that Thunderer, 84, is to be commissioned by Captain Taylor, at present commanding the San Josef, the Thunderer is in the hands of the shipwrights, and will be so for some time; had Government wanted a ship of her class, the Calcutta, 84, is ready to receive men at a moment's notice, being in a most efficient state. Ten caulkers' apprentices are ordered to be entered in this Dock-yard, which will make the number lately entered in the different departments 86: and we hope to see many more entered, as by the time those lads have served their time, the greater part of the men in this establishment will be almost past labour. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Belleisle, Druid, Racehorse.

MILFORD HAVEN, 24th April.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The only arrival for the week has been the Aid, lighter, with stores for the dock-yard up the harbour; and the only sailing, the Diligence, naval transport, for Plymouth. The Aid is loading for Portsmouth. A number of mechanics have been entered at Pembroke, during the week, to perform the works voted for by Parliament as expressed in the Navy Estimates, it being found more economical than letting them out by contract. The preference was given to shipwrights, who were admitted without restriction as to number, and which has left the port almost destitute of that valuable class of artisans. Report states that the Storekeeper at that arsenal has applied for superannuation, but it is not to be granted at present. Another 80-gun ship (designated No. 1, she not being yet named) is forthwith to be laid down there, and a roof erected over her during the ensuing summer. The workmen commenced taking the Windsor Castle to pieces on Monday week; the materials saved therefrom are to be used in the construction of the new reels as much as possible. The Prospero, mail steam-packet, is expected to return to the station in the course of a fortnight, when the old Monkey will proceed to the river, being extra on the establishment of this port, which consists of the Prospero, Advice, Adder, Jasper, and Pigmy.

DARTFORD, 24th April.—The Eleanor Gordon is loading for Valparaiso. Arrived Stakesby, transport, Lieut. Lugg Agent. Sailed Cambrian, for Ascension, to London Docks, and Navarino, emigrant ship, for Cork, Asia for Bermuda, and Blenheim to Woolwich to embark convicts. Remain—Parkfield, convict ship, and Cornwall, emigrant ship. Entered—Vigilant, for Cape of Good Hope, and Stakesby, transport, discharging stores.

We recently mentioned that 23 workmen of Sheerness Yard had quitted their native country, and gone to the service of the Emperor of Russia; we regret now to learn that no less than 27 artisans of the Chatham Dock-yard have since followed the example, and are gone to Cronstadt. —Hants Telegraph.

PORTSMOUTH DOCK-YARD.—Mr. Millaway to be Senior Converter at this dock-yard, vice B. Martell, superannuated; and Mr. J. Brown, Inspector (formerly Sub-Measurer) to be Junior Converter. The two vacant Inspectorships, caused by the promotion of Messrs. Brown and Russell, are not yet filled up.

Orestes was at Monte Video on 29th Jan., as well as the Stag frigate, the Commodore being on his way to visit the Falkland Islands, where he would find the Arrow, Sparrow, Basilisk, Starling, and Wizard; Samarang was at Bahia; Calliope, Rio Janeiro; Actæon at Buenos Ayres. President, Imogene, Sparrowhawk, and Fly, are in the Pacific, from whence Harrier was daily expected with treasure on board for England.

The arrival of the Pelican, 18, Capt. Popham, from the coast of Africa, after having been upwards of four years absent from England, was notified in our Portsmouth Letter of last week. Since October this vessel has captured three slavers, the Magdalen, Octavia, and Dulcina, with (taken together) 800 slaves on board. The Pelican left Sierra Leone on 13th ult., and brings tidings of the station being now quite healthy. The Brisk, however, some time previously, had been sickly, and had proceeded to the Cape de Verd, to recruit the health of the officers and ship's company. Mr. White, the senior Mate of the Brisk, had died from fever [illegible] Lieut. Kellett had been dangerously ill but had recovered, as had all others on board. Brisk fell in and parted company with Melville, 74 (with the flag of the Hon. Adm. Elliot), about 10th Feb., off Cape St. Paul. The Pelican has brought home a small quantity of gold dust, consigned to merchants; she proceeds to Chatham to be paid off.

The Cairan steamer, from Woolwich to Sheerness, struck against the Combet pier of the latter place and smashed the paddle wheel, and carried away the larboard paddle-box. This occurred lately, and shipwrights, &c., are repairing the accident with all speed possible.

Capt. Holcombe, R.A., a Mr. Stuart, and two boatmen, when sailing on Lough Swally Ireland, were upset. Lieut. Lane, Revenue Service, Buncrana, seeing the accident, assisted with his boat in saving all the lives. The boat of Mr. J. Aiken, of Raibmullen, who was on his way to Buncrana, came up in time to assist the strugglers in the waves; and these two officers and crew deserve the highest commendations for their unwearied skill in saving lives and property, and being always on the look-out so to do.

The General Shipwreck Society of all nations in Paris, have, through the Count S. de Bignold, Commissioner-General of England, forwarded a diploma to Mr. John Dennett for his system of saving lives of shipwrecked vessels by means of his rockets, which are now supplied to the Coast Guard stations along the coast.

Lieut. T. Parsons, R.N., Haven House Coast-Guard station, Christchurch, has recently taken 350 kegs of spirits, and 6 cwt. of tobacco, in addition to 134 kegs of brandy. The crew of the boat having the latter on board has been committed: Bishop, an old offender, of Poole, nine months' hard labour, the three Frenchmen, each three months'.

It is confidently reported that the Coast-Guard Officers will be placed under the Admiralty, in a manner some way similar to the late "Coast Blockade" establishment.

VOYAGE OF DISCOVERY.—During the past week the Dock-yards at Chatham have presented a scene of unusual bustle, in consequence of the fitting out of two bomb-ships, intended for scientific discoveries in a high southern latitude, under the command of Capt. James C. Ross, R.N. The project was started by the Royal Society, and Government have for that purpose commissioned H.M.'s ships Terror and Hecla. The vessels will not be ready for the voyage till the commencement of the month of August ensuing.

It is reported that H.M.S. Revenge will shortly be commissioned by Captain Basil Hall. The Blonde is also expected to be commissioned forthwith.

ADMIRAL SIR PULTENEY MALCOLM.—It is with sincere ...esure we find that a tribute of national justice is about ...be rendered to the memory of this distinguished officer ...id estimable man. At a meeting held on Tuesday it was ...termined, by a public subscription, to erect a monument ...his memory, and that the object will be effected in every ...spect as it ought to be we have the best guarantee in the ...mes of the gentlemen who were at the meeting. Among ...ose present we observed Lord Clive, Adm. White, Adm. ...r P. Durham, Adm. Sir P. Campbell, Sir W. H. Greg, ...r J. Paul, the Hon. M. Elphinstone, Captains Thornton, ...raham, Willoughby, J. W. D. Dundas, Randolph, and ...any others. Admiral Sir P. Durham was in the chair.

ROYAL NAVAL BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—On the 15th ...st. this society held their quarterly meeting at the ...hatched-house Tavern, St. James's-street. Admiral Sir ...Cockburn took the chair, and was supported by Adm. ...r J. Rowley, Vice-Admiral R. D. Oliver, and other dis...guished members. The solicitor stated, that the claim ...the society to participate in Perton's fund was heard be...re the Master in Chancery on the 11th ult., and was ably ...pported by Mr. G. Richards, who urged the superiority of ...charity, which contributed to the relief of the widows and ...phans of Naval men, who, by the dangers and habits of ...eir life, and the inadequacy of their pay, were rendered ...s able than others to provide for their families. He re...arked that the battle of Algiers, which extinguished white ...very, was the severest on record. It had been fought in ...time of profound peace, in the cause of humanity—not to ...ake captives, but to release them; that 121 members of ...e society were present at that glorious achievement, many ...whom were volunteers, and that a charity, which em...aced among its objects many of these who assisted in ...complishing even more than the testator ventured to anti...pate, was the charity which had the greatest claim on the ...w unappropriated fund. Several resolutions were then ...ssed, and the sum of 50*l.* was voted to 56 applicants, ...veral of whom had suffered the loss of husbands and sons, ...brothers, who had been lost together in the same vessel.

COMPENSATION FOR WRITING A MEMORIAL.—A demand ...as made in the Court of Common Pleas, on Wednesday, ...a Mr. Edwards, against Lieut. Harris, on the Green...ich Out-pension. The Lieutenant had received a pension ...r the loss of an eye, and on being called into active ser...ce the pension was suspended, but restored upon his again ...tting from service. The memorial was written to obtain ...e arrears, and which, to the amount of 57*8l*, were granted ...the Admiralty. The plaintiff claimed 5*l.* per cent., but ...e Lieutenant refused to give more than three sovereigns. ...he jury found a verdict of 28*l.*

Lalande's flag, at Smyrna; ...Breton, at Smyrna; Santi Petri, at Toulon, in quarantine; ...ena and Jupiter, at Toulon: Trident, in Toulon harbour, ...der repair; corvette Favourite, in the Levant; brigs ...Talinaire and Bougainville, and the schooner Mesange, in ...e Levant—total, 10. Division in reserve at Toulon, ...ips-of-the-line, Montebello, Genereux, and Diademe; ...gate Thetis, corvettes Diligence and Brillante—total 6, ...his last division is expected to be put under the command ...Capt. Duval D'Ailly, of the Montebello. In a few ...onths the squadron will probably be reinforced by the ...Iger and Marengo, which are now fitting out.

A steam-boat of very superior speed has, we learn, lately ...en built on the plan of the proprietor, T. A. Smith, Esq., ...rmerly a member of the Royal Yacht Club. She is called ...e Fire King—is 172 feet long, 22 feet broad, and 240 ...rse-power. We congratulate the public-spirited pro...etor on the success of his experiment, and he deserves ...eat credit for the liberal and judicious manner in which he ...s effected—as report states—a very considerable improve...ent in this class of vessels, particularly in superior buoy...cy, when impelled at high speed. The vessel was built ...Scotland, but we have not heard for what purpose she is ...tended.

Koniarski, a Pole, who participated in the Polish in...rrection of 1830, was recently shot at Wilna, on which ...casion 4,000 men were put under arms at the place of ...ecution. He had retired to France after the fall of ...Faraw, and having secretly returned to Poland without ...pplying for permission, he was seized and tried as being an emissary of the revolutionary propaganda. He died with great fortitude, smiled and joked on beholding the grave which had been prepared for the reception of his corpse, and refused to say anything that would compromise any of his countrymen. His request that he might not be blindfolded preparatory to being shot was rejected.

INFANTRY.

Scots Fusilier Guards—The club of this corps gave their annual grand dinner at the Clarendon Hotel, on Tuesday evening. There were present Col. Sir Seymour Blane, Bart., the Hon. Col. C. B. Phipps (brother to the Marquis of Normanby), Col. Digby, Mr. Alston, M.P., Col. Aitchison, commanding the regiment, Col. Berkeley Drummond, the Hon. Col. Montagu, Mr. Cox, Mr. Agar, Col. Hawkins, Col. Standen, Capt. Rushbrooke, and Captain Seymour Davies.

2d—[From the Bombay Gazette]—"The sad intelligence has been communicated to us by a take-letter correspondent, in an extract of a letter from Scinde, of the death of three officers of the Queen's. At the time the letter was written it was unknown in what manner Lieut Sparke, Lieut. Nixon, and Dr. Hebbert had met with their melancholy fate, and, as it was suspected that they had fallen by the hands of a dastard enemy, who was known to be hovering round the camp, we can well imagine that a strong feeling pervaded their brethren in arms. We find, however, that the three unfortunate individuals perished in an awful way while shooting in a 'shikar caith,' or game preserve, where they were suddenly overwhelmed and destroyed by the flames. The accident has been thus reported to us:—A jungle had caught fire, and, it being anticipated that the flames would force numbers of wild animals from their coverts, the officers of the Queen's posted themselves in a tree, and, as they supposed, in a secure position with reference to the wind, waiting for the escape of deer, &c., when, the wind suddenly changing, the trees and jungle surrounding the officers took fire, and precluded all escape."

6th—A detachment from the depot, consisting of Ensigns Finlay and Croker, Quartermaster Sheehan, and 135 privates, embarked on Tuesday last at Gravesend on board the Bombay, for Bombay.

7th—Detachment of 1 Off., 2 Serj., and 30 r. and f., from Kilkenny to Callan, on 25th April. 1 comp., 50 r. and f., from Dublin to Castlecomer, 17th to 19th. 1 comp., 40 r. and f., from Dublin to Carrick-on-Sieur, 17th to 24th. Detach., 1 Off., 2 Serj., 30 r. and f., from do. to New Ross, 20th to 25th. Detach. 1 Off., 1 Serj., 20 r. and f., from do. to Newtownbarry, 20th to 24th. 2 cos. from do. to Kilkenny, 19th to 24th. Remaining 2 cos. and head-qrs., from do. to do., 22d to 26th.

10th—Every testimony of respect was paid the corps when marching out of Limerick garrison on Saturday last for Dublin. Sir W. Macbean, Commanding the district, and his A.D.C., with Capt. Macquarie's troop Rl. Scots Greys, accompanied the 10th from the barracks, the cavalry flanking the infantry in single files, as they passed through the crowded streets, the band of the regt. playing popular tunes throughout the line of march, and surrounded by a multitude of spectators. When the Military approached Athlunkard bridge, the musicians struck up "Should auld acquaintance be forgot," and the cavalry bugle sounding an advance, the whole troop dashed forward, and formed at each side of the road, and when the 10th marched up, the cavalry gave them the usual salute, the infantry also carrying arms. Sir W. Macbean now took a kind farewell of the 10th, and shook hands with Col. Custance; the regt. halted and presented arms for the General as he rode by on his return, the band playing "God save the Queen." The 10th then grounded arms, the officers and soldiers uncovered, and while the colours of the regt. floated proudly in the breeze, gave three hearty cheers for their military and civil friends, followed by one loud cheer more, in which the populace also participated. The Greys joined in the general enthusiasm by flourishing their swords, and the interesting spectacle concluded by the 10th resuming their march to Dublin, the General and the Greys returning to quarters. —The company from Tipperary to Dublin, 24th April to 3d May. The remaining 2 cos. from Limerick to Dublin, 23d April to 1st May. On the road from Killaloe, after the first day's march, Major Power dropped a purse of 24 sovereigns.

GARRISON ORDER.—The 10th reg being ordered to Dublin duty, Major-Gen Sir Wm Macbean feels that he is called upon to do an act of justice to this highly respectable corps, by stating thus publicly, that during the period it has served in this district, he has had every reason to be satisfied with the state of its discipline and interior economy. The duties required of it have been performed in the most soldier like manner, and with an alacrity and precision that reflects much credit upon all classes of which the regiment is composed. The behaviour of the men in barracks and quarters has been exemplary; the exceptions, in fact, to its general good conduct have been so rare, that the Major Gen will not allow them to take away in any degree from his estimate of the merits of the corps. The appearance of the reg. under arms has upon all occasions been complete, and highly creditable to the officers and men. The Maj. Gen has, therefore, to express the high opinion he entertains of the efficiency of the reg., with a full knowledge of the portion of merit that attaches to the Lieut.-Col. commanding, and the officers and non commissioned officers under him. The high reputation that Lieut Col Custance has obtained in the field, places him far above the reach of any commendation that the Major-Gen. might venture to apply to him. The 10th reg., on leaving the district, will carry with them the Major-General's regrets that they should be so soon removed from his command. These regrets, however, will be accompanied by his most unqualified respect for them as a corps; and he trusts that they will further accept from him an assurance that he will continue to take the warmest interest in their prosperity and welfare; moreover, the reg. will leave him with the fullest impression on his part, that should the time come when they may have to take part in more active service, that the result of their exertions will be a credit and reputation to themselves, with honour and advantage to their Sovereign and country.

R. C. MANSEL, A.A.G.

11th—Fredericton, March 13.—Lieut. Boyd of the 11th, who arrived express yesterday, reports the arrival of Col. Goldie and that gallant corps at the Madawaska. The whole are in high spirits, and appear to have gained fresh vigour from the rapid marches and countermarches to which they have this winter been exposed. Royal Gazette.

12th Depot—The destination of this depot is at length decided on. They will relieve the 82d Depot at Sheerness early next month.

16th—Lieut. Ximenes, eldest son of Major-Gen. Sir David Ximenes (late Lieut.-Col. of this corps) recently died at Purneeah, Bengal, most deeply lamented, not only by his afflicted family, but by his brother officers, who have put on mourning for him as a mark of their esteem and attachment. This promising young officer was carried off by jungle fever when employed with Major-Gen. Oglander, who selected him to accompany him on a particular service.

17th—Ens. Fitzmayer and 55 privates embarked for India on Tuesday last in the Bombay.

19th—The comp. from Carrick-on-Suir to Dublin, 24th to 1st May. The detachment from Callan to Dublin, 25th April to 1st May. The detachment from Newtownbarry to Dublin, 24th to 27th April. The detachment from New Ross to Dublin, 24th to 29th. An address was presented on Monday, from the Mayor and inhabitants of Kilkenny, to Lieut.-Col. Hamilton, and the officers of the 19th, previous to their departure from that city for Dublin.

23d—Halifax, March 12.—One company proceeded this morning to Annapolis. There was a most creditable warmth of feeling displayed on the occasion, which shows the spirit of the Hallgonians in a conspicuous light More than 30 sleighs were volunteered to assist the gallant fellows on their journey. The start was made from the North Barracks at nine o'clock, amidst such huzzas as only true British hearts know how to raise. The sleighs formed a line; Mr. Rodgers, with the officers, taking the lead in a sleigh. The band followed, and played through Dutch Town; and the truckmen, who mounted their coronation flag, came after, three soldiers on each sled. They proceeded this day as far as Hamilton's, on the Windsor road.

Rl. Artillery—Major Locke's company embarked from Spike Island, on board the Prince George freight ship on the 16th, and sailed on the 18th for Halifax.—On Sunday evening Charles Chiddy, a gunner and driver in the Royal Artillery, committed suicide while labouring under temporary mental derangement. The man was in bed, and had concealed his musket under a coat which was wrapped round him. Three or four of his comrades were sitting in the room with their backs to the deceased, when they suddenly heard him exclaim, "Good bye, my lads,—I must leave you now." Upon which they instantly turned round and saw a bayonet placed across the trigger of a musket, with the deceased's feet resting on either end of it, and the muzzle of the piece pointed towards his head. Before they had time to advance a step he discharged the musket by pressing the bayonet, and compl[illegible]ly shivering his face and head to pieces. A portion of his skull was forced through the window into the [illegible] and his brains were scattered over the bed and [illegible].

A vacancy on the full-pay by retirement has occasioned by the death of Capt. Smith, and for which there are several competitors. It is conjectured that either Capts. Charlton or Gillespie will obtain it. At all events, it is anxiously hoped that it will not be conferred on any officer on half-pay, which would be a bar to promotion in the corps. It is nearly a twelvemonth since there has been a step of promotion among the Captains. The detachment at the Tower of London was relieved on Thursday by Capt. Schalch's company.

Regimental Order, 17th April, 1839.

With reference to the General Order of yesterday (see N. & M. Gazette of 20th inst.) to ensure uniformity throughout the regiment at head-quarters, His Lordship the Commandant directs that Commanding Officers of battalions and corps will, in detailing in orders the names of the non-commissioned officers and men who have established their claims to this honourable distinction, explain that the badge is to be placed on the clothing for 1839 (which will be taken into wear next month) at the public expense; but that those men who wish to have it on the clothing now in wear, the expense of doing it will become a charge to themselves.

G. O., 16th April, 1839.—The Master General and Board having approved of a revised copy of directions for the guidance of Farriers of the Royal Artillery, in the treatment of sick horses, being printed, copies will be issued for distribution as follows, viz.—Horse Artillery, 20; Field Batteries, 20, Do., Ireland, 20; Do, Canada, 20; Do., Northern District, 3; Do., Weedon, 2; Do., North Britain, 5. J. E. Jones, A.A Gen.

G. O., 22d April, 1839.—The regiment will take into wear the new clothing for the present year, at head-quarters, on Sunday, 5th May next, and at the outposts as soon as it is ready.

J. E Jones, A. A.-Gen.

G. O., 23d April, 1839.—It appearing that Commanding Officers at out-stations have, in some instances, in making up the Quarterly Return of Defaulters, continued to act on the instructions issued in General Orders, 24th Dec., 1830, which authorised them to extract such cases as they may deem sufficiently grave for insertion in the General Regimental Defaulters' Book, whereas, by Item 15 of the Good Conduct Instructions, every offence committed by a soldier, which subjects him to any punishment awarded by the Commanding Officer, beyond admonition, is to be recorded; and with this view it is therein directed, that the Regimental and Troop and Company Defaulters' Books should exactly correspond. The attention, therefore, of Commanding Officers is particularly drawn to this subject, it being indispensable that the regulations for rewarding soldiers of good conduct (the benefit of which the men are now entering upon) should be duly regarded. They will, therefore, in all future Quarterly Returns of Defaulters, insert the whole of the crimes accordingly. A. Dickson, D. A.-Gen.

Horse Guards, 9th April, 1839.

The General Commanding-in-Chief having reason to believe that uniformity of practice has not hitherto existed as to the reception by Courts Martial of evidence of provisions of the 21st clause of the Mutiny Act, and the 54th Article of War; and thinking it of importance that such uniformity should be established, desires that in future, in conformity with what appears to be the now prevailing practice, the evidences of previous convictions adduced against the prisoner under the above-mentioned Clause and Articles of War should be limited to convictions by Courts-Martial, or a Court of Ordinary Jurisdiction.—By Command of the Rt. Hon. Gen. Lord Hill, Commanding-in-Chief.

John Macdonald, Adjutant-General.

War-Office, 16th April, 1839.

Sir,—It having been represented that soldiers, who are conveyed by steam-packets, canal-boats, and railways, from one part of the United Kingdom to another, frequently arrived at the place of their destination, or disembarkation, much exhausted from the length of the voyage and inclemency of the weather; or at so late an hour of the day as to make it very inconvenient for them to obtain the necessary provisions for their support immediately upon their arrival, I have the honour to acquaint you, that under any of the circumstances above specified, I shall not object to extend, in such cases, the allowance to innkeepers in South Britain, of 10*d.* a-day for the usual hot meal for each man billetted upon them, and actually and necessarily supplied therewith on the day of arrival.

For soldiers disembarking from steam packets, or canal-boats, or arriving at their destination by rail road conveyance, in Scotland or Ireland, under similar circumstances, an allowance equal to one day's marching-money, at the rates fixed for those countries respectively, will, in like manner, be granted

These allowances, however, are not to be granted in cases of short voyages, or journeys by land, or when rations in kind shall have been issued at the public expense for the day of disembarkation from a steam boat or other vessel.

The charges in the public accounts made under this Letter, are to be vouched by a certificate from the Commanding Officer of the Regiment, or the Inspecting Field Officer of the District, by whose directions the allowance has been in each instance paid, showing what circumstances induced him to sanction the payment. I have, &c. Howick.

Four millions of musket cartridges have been ordered for Canada. A new method of moulding musket ball by hydraulic pressure, it is reported, will shortly be introduced instead of casting, as is now done.

The King of Hanover has been pleased to allow Lieut.-Colonel Fancourt, at his own request, to retire from his service.

War-Office, 16th April, 1839. Howick.

Military Bridges.—It has very frequently happened during great military operations that the passage of rivers by bodies of troops has been found impossible, at moments when it would have led to the most important results, owing to the roads leading up to their banks being unfit for wheel carriages over the points where it has been desired to cross. The carriages now in use for the conveyance of the pontoons or portable boats generally employed in constructing temporary military bridges are necessarily so large, and so heavy and cumbersome when loaded, as to require as many as eight or ten horses to each carriage, unless on the smoothest roads, and may be seen and heard from such a distance as to make it impossible to perform any movement with them concealed from an enemy watching, as is usual, the principal roads leading to rivers in their vicinity. On Monday morning an experiment was made by Col. Macintosh on the Serpentine river, in presence of the Duke of Wellington, Lord Hill, the General Commanding in Chief, Generals Lord F. Somerset, Sir G. Murray, the Adjutant-General Sir J. Macdonald, Sir J. Gardiner, and many other distinguished officers, which holds out the promise of the complete attainment of the object in view. Two pontoons composed of very portable materials, supporting a wooden platform (and although constituting only a small portion of a bridge, sufficient to judge of results from), having been placed upon the water, forty men of the Foot Guards were directed to occupy it. Their weight may be calculated at about a ton more than that of a piece of heavy ordnance, but, as the pontoons were not immersed to quite half their depth, it is obvious that they could have supported a much greater weight. The raft thus formed was then towed out to some distance in the Serpentine. It sailed admirably, and the men appeared to be at perfect ease in it, for, by command of the Duke of Wellington, the soldiers first stood up, then sat down, and finally laid down. After the curiosity of the distinguished witnesses had been sufficiently gratified, the raft was towed to shore, and, the planks being removed, the vessels which had sustained them, and which were composed of a preparation of India rubber, and inflated with air, were deprived of the air, and the weight of each was then not more than one horse was fully capable of carrying. From eight to twelve of these vessels would form a bridge of sufficient length to cross most of the continental rivers. Another experiment followed, which was as important in its nature as the preceding. This vessel was also formed of India rubber, and presented the appearance of a great ball, with a couple of legs attached to the bottom and the top cut off. It was set floating on the river and a man, by means of a boat, got into it; his legs went into the places assigned them, and the ball enclosed the major part of his body, the legs and part of the latter lay under water. The man, having provided himself with two small paddles, then proceeded to work his way out into the river, at the same time keeping his legs in active motion. Having reached the middle with great care, he waded back, and landed in the midst of enthusiastic cheers. The object of this invention is to enable a man to ford a river, and at the same time convey a rope, or something of a like nature, from one shore to the other.

On Tuesday the members of the Naval and Military Commission had a meeting at the official residence of Viscount Melbourne in Downing-st. The Duke of Wellington, Earl of Minto, Lord Hill, Sir Hussey Vivian, Sir Thomas Hardy, Sir Henry Hardinge, and other Commissioners, were present.

The East India Company have obtained permission to augment their European troops 600 men. Hence, probably, arose the rumour that three regiments were to be immediately raised for India.

We believe that the Army is to be further increased: that the 12th, 35th, and 90th Regts. go on to India; and that four regiments from this country go to America.

Reports are prevalent that a great change is to be effected in the depot system of the Army: any change must be beneficial that breaks up the present one—"all officers and no soldiers."

The Buffalo, now at Chatham, will take out drafts of the Dragoons for Canada, and a convict guard of 51st Regt., under Lieut. Andrews, 28th Regt. The vessel will take in Canadian convicts at Quebec, and proceed thence to New South Wales.

HISTORY OF THE FRENCH ARMY.—The French Government is about to order a history of every regiment of the army to be drawn up and continued from year to year. These annals are to be deposited in the archives of the respective corps.

The period for the North American Drafts embarking for that country, as fixed by the Queen's regulations, is April, and very judiciously so, as the prevalence of the east wind during that month in the Atlantic, may be counted on as next to a certainty, whilst from the beginning of June to the end of Oct. the westerly wind becomes, almost without intermission, the trade-wind of the Atlantic. The truth of this confirmed by navigators, and was proved by what occurred last April, in which month both the Coldstream Guards and 71st Light Inf. embarked for Quebec, where they landed within 21 days respectively, whilst the regs. and drafts that sailed from England and Ireland late in May or June, did not effect their passages under periods varying from 48 to 78 days. Now, with all these facts recurring yearly, is it not a strange fatuity in the authorities at the Horse Guards to persist in the baneful system of delaying the embarkation of the N. American drafts till the end of May, or even later, entailing on those embarked the prolonged misery of a sixty days' passage, (and we know a case in 1829, when some drafts that sailed from Portsmouth on 4th June, did not reach Quebec till 12th August,) besides rendering ineffectual to the service so large a body of troops, for a space of time two thirds longer than is necessary? One is really at a loss to account for such a reprehensible neglect of the good of the service, on this head, in those who watch over the interests and comfort of the Army.—Limerick Chronicle.

East India Intelligence.

The North Western Coalition.—H.M. 3d Light Dragoons, and the 7th L.C., are under orders immediately to march to Meerut. The cause of this sudden and unexpected movement is attributed to the reports of the large Affghan force collected in Candahar, composed chiefly of horse, in which arm the army of the Indus is weak, and is further explained by the following extract of a letter, dated Tatta, banks of the Indus, 7th Jan., 1839. "I break open my letter to give you the following very important information. The western countries have coalesced against us. Lieut. Pottinger is ordered out of Herat, and is making his way, as fast as he can, to India. Major Leech the same. Not a camel or a seer of grain was to be given them. They say that we shall not dictate to them who is to be their ruler. Russia has been called in by them to assist. Thank God, we are all so well advanced into Scinde, for this, after all, is the most important country, and which we shall now, doubtless, permanently occupy. The whole of the Bengal Army advances, as was at first contemplated, with the addition of a reserve.—P.S. A despatch has just arrived from Sir A. Burnes, giving the news of the coalition of the western powers."

Col. Spiers has relieved Col. Sutherland as resident at the Court of Scinde. The former has been stationed there for a long period.

Juepoor.—The disturbance at Seekur has not yet been adjusted, though Major Ross is himself on the spot and exerting himself to the utmost. The affair, however, is a fair way of being finally disposed of. A subordinate Rajah or two have refused to pay their quota of revenue, which gives some employment to the Juepoor Government.

Captain Wroughton, of the Revenue Survey Department, has met with a severe accident, by which we fear he will lose three fingers and the thumb of his right hand. It was occasioned by the accidental discharge of his fowling-piece.—Agra Ukbar, Jan. 19.

Candahar.—The Candahar chiefs have now determined to espouse the cause of Shah Soojah and the British, whose army they will join on its appearance in this district.

Sir Alexander Burnes has negociated successfully, and has secured the Bolan or Gundava pass, a few marches from Shikarpore, and which we believe commands the grand route to Candahar, through the Hala mountains, and Major Leach had, according to report, succeeded in securing to the British interests the Khan of Khelat, through whose mountainous teritory the army must march on Candahar. Sir A. Burnes had also collected a body of 500 Afghauns, and enrolled them in the British service.—Calcutta Courier, Jan. 30.

We are happy to be able to represent that the state of affairs at Herat is not so unfavourable as many at this moment suppose. No breach of friendship has occurred between the ruler of Herat and the British Government. The intended departure of Lieut. Pottinger from Herat originated in a misunderstanding entirely of a personal nature, which unfortunately occurred between that officer and Shah Kamran.

The Governor-General has appointed Lieut.-Colonel Bagnold to the command of the Aurungabad division of H. H. the Nizam's army.—Bombay Times, Feb. 2.

We regret to state that the melancholy intelligence of the murder of Col. White, in Upper Assam, turns out to be too true. We have since been favoured with the following particulars, upon which our readers may rely:—The extraordinary fearlessness of Col. White always, perhaps, made him too regardless of all risks. He appears to have been sleeping in an unguarded bungalow at Suddeah, when the post was attacked before daylight on the 28th Jan., by a large party of about 500, composed, it is believed, of discontented Kukoos and Kamptees (with whose habits and usages, especially in the matter of slavery, our power in some degree clashes), by whom he was killed, in all probability, as he was making his way to the lines. The assailants succeeded in setting fire to the buildings (most of which are demolished), but were briskly repulsed with a considerable loss of killed and wounded (two of the former being Kamptee chiefs) when they approached the lines. Several of our sepoys have suffered, but to what extent is not yet accurately ascertained.

The frontier chiefs are, we hear, forwarding men, &c., to assist the British Government authorities.—Calcutta Courier, Feb. 13.

The 5th Brigade of Infantry of the army of the Indus is dissolved from the 1st Feb., when all appointments connected with it will cease.—Calcutta Courier, Jan. 30.

The following despatch received from Com. Haines, Indian Navy, reporting the capture of Aden, has not yet appeared:—

To J. P. Willoughby, Esq., Secretary to Government.

SIR,—I have the honour to inform you, for the information of Government, that during the many skirmishes which have taken place between the boats of the Hon. Company's sloop of war Coote and the shore, the crew of that vessel, assisted by Lieut. Evans, of the Bombay European Regt., Lieut. Western, of the Bombay Engineers, and the detachment of the former officer's regiment, have behaved with great gallantry in every instance, and it is wonderful that only two men of the Coote were wounded.

In the last skirmish of 11th Jan., under the command of Lieut. Johnstone, they were assisted by the Hubi schooner and the mortar-boat Chiki. The action lasted for three or four hours, doing the enemy considerable damage by destroying twelve feet of their battery, without injury to themselves. I have, &c.,

S. B. HAINES.

Twenty-five soldiers of the Madras 3d L.C. have been tried for mutiny; 24 were sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and to be discharged, and one to six months', and discharge. The Commander-in-Chief of Madras was, however, pleased to remit the sentence in the case of fourteen.

Orders have been issued to Captain Murray to commence enlisting with all speed young men for the service. Twenty thousand muskets on a new principle, besides bayonets, and swords and pistols for the Cavalry, have been contracted for, which will be forwarded to India immediately, when completed.

The PARSEE, McKellar, sailed from Hobart Town 2d Nov., for South Australia,—got on shore upon the South Australian Coast, and was expected to become a total wreck.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

TRISTRAM RE-ARGUFYING UPON THE NECESSITY OF INCREASING THE MARINE CORPS TO GARRISON FOREIGN ARSENALS, AND SHEWS THE EFFECT OF THE ADMIRALTY-SPUNGE IN THE NAVY LIST.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—To fight the battles of the Navy and the Marines in the press is a most unthankful task. If I seriously submit a dissent from an Admiralty measure or arrangement—or the proposition of any official personage against the Navy's or Marines' interest, then your correspondents and readers back me up and encourage me as they would a well-trained bull-dog, with the cry of "Well-done, Tristram! at 'em, boy!" If I humorously dissent from the wanderings of a pamphleteer against the Admiralty, or a civil functionary of that office, without cause or reason, then they metamorphose their pens and tongues into porcupines, and dart their shafts into my very heart,—laugh to hear me squeal with pain and torment, and charitably "wish it may be Tristram's last gasp in the Naval and Military Gazette."

To attack the Navy's wrongs with the heavy metal of argufication, I have hoisted my FLAG in your Gazette, and there "nailed it to the mast,"—it flies yet untouched—untarnished, though for more than five years unfurled. My argufication may be censured, or criticised by the interested or envious; but am I to cease my advocacy for the Navy's general rights? Am I to strike at the volley of the dissentient few, when supported by the broadsides of the approving many? I am aware that I am not popular among the Royal Marines, because I approved of the reduction in the Marine Artillery, to establish, with the expense saved thereby, a NAVAL GUNNERY, so indispensable in the British fleet. Whilst the pay of our seamen Gunners was, and the pay of our sea Artillery officers, Lieutenants, Mates, and Midshipmen is, about half that of their equals of the Marine Artillery Captains, First and Second Lieutenants, it is an injustice and degradation to the Navy to embark the two corps in one ship for sea-service—especially in peace. Whilst the Marine Artillery officers slumber, with their bombs and guns housed, upon double the pay of the sea officers, who, besides being Artillerymen, possess the qualities of seamen and navigators—are daily and nightly on watch at sea or in harbour, and in their watch below occupied with the various duties of discipline, order, documents, and navigation, which continually claim their time and attention, there will ever be a justifiable dissatisfaction throughout the Navy. I am, however, a great advocate for an increase of the Marine corps generally for the defence of our Naval stations abroad; and if Ministers garrison Gibraltar, St. Helena, and Bermuda,* with Marines, the thousands of sovereigns remaining in the Exchequer would be an inducement to garrison Malta also; leaving India, New S. Wales, the Canadas, and the larger colonies to the Army; but turning over to the charge of the Marines the small island colonies which are now guarded by regimental detachments,—Antigua and its dependencies for instance, and why not Port Royal Harbour, Jamaica? Where the British fleet finds a dock-yard,— abroad, there it should find a Marine barrack. The fraternal association and friendship of the Navy and Marines thus renewed at sea and on shore, in all parts, must tend to benefit the interests of both services. The occasional change of scene and station, land and sea duty, would greatly check the mortality in tropical climates—to the nation of so great an importance in finance, strength, and policy. Foreign garrison duty must at once bestow upon the Marine officers the full pay of the Infantry or Ordnance officers, together with the many extra allowances for themselves, wives, and children. I regret to add that my name is erased from the good books of the now Messieurs of the Naval offices, because I from the title of a knight's attendant undubbed every clerk in office, whom Murray had so Quixotically dubbed esquire. But it was rather outré for the clerk at his desk to so Sancho-style himself, who sported no badge of chivalry but a quill behind his ear, when the Naval Centurion in charge, as officer of the watch, of the St. Vincent capering on the ocean, is but a mister, though bedecked with martial emblems, and invested with the Sovereign's Commission of a Sea-Lieutenant—equal to the Marine Centurion, who is the Queen's "true and trusty friend," and an "esquire" in her realm. The Admiralty has exalted the Naval executives by this purification of the self-appellatives of the untitled. Two or three years ago, no person was an esquire in the Navy List but an Admiral and a clerk; and this OFFICE-SQUIRE to this day is, in many instances, retired upon a greater remuneration for past services than the Knight of the Bath—a title won in battle on the high seas—the Admiral who carries his honoured flag at the main in his country's defence! In Whitehall, in Somerset House, in Greenwich Hospital—what a consumption of the Queen's ink—red, blue, and black, by the civilians, deluging the name of "that d——d fellow, Tristram!!"*

Yes, Sir, I will maintain that the Marine officers on foreign service on land, are entitled to the full pay and allowances of the Infantry or Ordnance officers, and as soon as the illustrious Commission, charged with the sacred duty to do equal justice to the Navy and Marines, presents its report† and recommendation to the legislature for so generous and grateful a purpose, I am assured that, from the moment the Woolwich division embarks for "Gibraltar," its officers will be remunerated as their equals in the Army. The increase of the seamen (working hands), and the decrease of the Marines afloat—a wise measure under consideration of Her Majesty's Ministers, to shew there is wisdom in their wigs (these Whigs!)—will accelerate the manning and the evolution of the fleet, whilst, with that decrease and the Woolwich division, the rock of sunshine and luxury, garrisoned with the Marine forces and blazoned with their standard, planted upon its own site, "Gibraltar"—the Government will be enabled, after the Canadian constrtems, to save 100,000*l.* per annum, by marching eight regiments "to the right about." Chloe's boudoir also will be adorned with a Marine bouquet, of diversely coloured coral; and my sanctum sanctorum with the table en mosaïque (on which to sport my wine and walnuts) to be presented by the Marine officers of the "Gibraltar Division," to their much-beloved, and thy friend,

Senior United Service, 15th April. TRISTRAM.

P.S.—By your last Gazette, I find that I over-figured the picture of the mourning groups of widows, &c. Withdraw the mother and sisters from the grave of the Capt. of Dragoons—the whole picture is to the life!! The Naval and Military Gazette of the 19th October, 1833, gives the regulations under which the mothers and sisters of Military officers are pensioned, and my Tristrams and the Navy List inform the public, that under no circumstances whatever can the mothers and sisters of the Naval officer be similarly pensioned. A happy mistake, which provokes discussion to elicit truth, is the true science of argufication.—T.

THE MONMOUTHSHIRE YEOMANRY, ANORCHYGOL.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The audacity of the Chartist insurgents of Monmouth and Glamorgan has of late caused in South Wales no small degree of alarm. Their numbers are estimated at near twenty-five thousand, many of whom are old soldiers, and not a few supposed to be deserters or escaped felons, worked upon by wicked intriguers: these are believed to drill openly, and not a few have procured weapons, for the avowed purpose of revolt.

To watch this dangerous body, to suppress possible insurrection, to secure Bristol from attack, the Government possesses one troop of Yeomanry, the Castle Haven, and four depot companies of Foot. In 1831 this force was found far too weak for meeting the mob of Merthyr alone, though wholly unarmed and unprepared for attack. The fact that those fierce miners remained ten minutes unflinchingly under the incessant fire of eighty muskets, twice attempting to carry the Castle Inn by storm, and charging up to the bayonets, and at last carrying off with them forty muskets and bayonets captured in fair fight, showed them no contemptible enemy, and very different from a mere cockney mob. The Methodist preachers at length pacified them; but the influence of those preachers has been of late supplanted by the fiercer sectarians, now mad with wrath.

Under these circumstances, the respectable portion of the inhabitants wish to embody themselves, either as Yeomanry or Rifles. With great respect for their desire, I do not think either description of force adapted for the district. Every mile presents a fresh position impracticable for Yeomanry, whose want of carbines prevents their skirmishing on foot; whilst the Rifles, compelled to act in extended order, cannot hope to fire fast enough to repel the rush of a multitude lying down amidst the heath on top of a hill, and careful not to expose themselves till their assailants are so close that a second volley becomes impossible. Now, allowing every rifle-ball to strike, yet nine-tenths of the assailants would remain unscathed. Besides, if powder falls short, or if called out at night, or required to force a village or a series of barricades, the rifle, in hands untrained to bayonet-fencing, is no more than an awkward bludgeon; and as a fire-arm it requires more practice than most volunteers will afford. I would therefore recommend a mixed mounted and dismounted corps, resembling the (misnamed) Cape Rifles. Each farmer to provide himself with a foraging cap, artificial leek, blouse, and trousers of Welch plaid; his arms to consist simply of a good brass half basket-handled cutlass, about thirty inches in the blade, which he may procure, belt included, for about twenty shillings, and the double-barrelled gun he is accustomed to use, with a pouch to hold two dozen of "Eley's Patent Buck-shot Cartridges" attached to his girdle. If wished, a dagger-bayonet may be made to fix underneath the double fowling-pieces of the dismounted men, in the way adopted at the Cape, and by the Serjeants of the Guards in Canada. I consider a gun thus filled up far preferable to the Infantry musket as an arm of close fight, yet in the abstract prefer the sword. The horses of the mounted men must be deemed merely means of conveyance, as against an armed mob they should dismount and blaze away.

I need not point out the advantage of a double gun for outpost duty, or for resisting a rush of pikes, as one round might always be kept in reserve; and I believe the probability of knocking over a foe by a quick shot within a hundred yards to be five times greater with cartridges of buck-shot than with a single rifle ball. Even with the latter, a greased patch renders a smooth bore almost equal to the rifle at a decent range, and the superior rapidity of its fire makes up amply for the slight diminution of correctness. Besides, it is so important that men should use the guns they have been accustomed to wield: he who can drop a flying snipe will surely singe a scoundrel revolutionist.

ARTHUR.

THE NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS OF THE ROYAL ARTILLERY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The delay in promulgating the talked of augmentation of a Bombardier per company to the Artillery, leads the Non-Commissioned Officers to hope that the authorities are doing something to ameliorate their condition, and place them on a footing with other corps in regard to the number of Serjeants.

It is not only hurtful to the feelings of the Non-Commissioned Officers, but must be to those of the Officers, when they see them placed alongside of other troops, and the preference taken by young Serjeants of the Line, over old Corporals of Artillery. Why the Artillery Non-Commissioned Officers, who have nothing but their pensions to look up to, should be kept so much to the rear of other troops in this respect, is hard to imagine; for, as I have already shewn (in a former letter), that only one man out of 25 can attain a Serjeant's pension, whereas one of every 12 in the Cavalry, and one out of every 17 in the Infantry may attain it. In no corps whatever—nay, not even with the other branch of the Ordnance service (the Sappers) can a comparison be drawn; for who ever heard of such a disproportion as 25 Serjeants to 675 rank and file, which is the present establishment of an Artillery battalion? What a sad blank to aspiring youth! Well might the old saying be repeated, viz., When a Corporal gets old, and performs his orderly duty in a blundering manner, he is usually told that, "He is stupid enough for a Serjeant," and this cannot but too plainly shew the stage at which men often arrive when promoted to that rank. If any corps needs a greater proportion of Serjeants, it is surely the Artillery, in consideration of their detached situations, and the trust often devolving on Non-Commissioned Officers in charge of stores with small detachments, as well as the number of employed Serjeants at head-quarters, where they remain in office, upwards of 30 years in that rank, during which they are borne on the strength of their companies abroad. Surely they ought to be placed on the staff, if no augmentation should take place. The Infantry, according to numbers, have one Serjeant per section, the Artillery not one per gun-detachment: the latter is surely of more importance, and consists of equally as many men. To be convinced of the scantiness of Serjeants in the Artillery, it is only necessary to look to the Guards in this garrison, where Corporals mount the guards which would be taken by Serjeants if mounted by other corps.

After all, what would the augmentation be? Why, a mere trifle in amount, considering that to a first-class Corporal it would only give him a penny farthing extra per day, and to a third-class Corporal threepence farthing. The difference in rank and pension would be the greatest benefit. If economy trample not on justice, we may expect, and hope to realise the belief, that the subject will get a fair consideration. The great economist, Mr. Hume himself, would not object to a measure so consistent with justice; on the contrary, I am of opinion, he would second it. The Queen was graciously pleased, to a certain extent, to give the Non-Commissioned Officers of the Line Commissions; surely it would not be too much to grant an additional Serjeant per company to the Artillery a measure which is not only necessary to encourage the Non-Commissioned Officers in the performance of their duty, but to infuse something of the remembrance and kindness of our young Sovereign into the minds of the soldiers generally.

Thinking it quite time to draw to a close, I shall sound a "Halt—General Salute;" in doing which I beg to return you many thanks, and in this I am sure I shall be joined by many, for your devotedness to the welfare of the Non-Commissioned Officers. H. M. J.

COAST GUARD SERVICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Not having observed in any of your late columns complaints from officers in the Coast Guard service, I am sanguine that the worthy Comptroller-General has done much towards ameliorating the condition of that corps. I trust that the proceedings which usually marked their Courts of Inquiry are revised, and that close courts are for ever abolished, as also the unjust practice of the President and members thereof being instructed (previous to the trial) to examine and discuss all the official, ex-official, and confidential letters of the prosecutor on the subject of the charges. Considering that these documents are the materials intended by the prosecutor for crushing the accused, I contend that they ought to be confined to him, and not suffered to meet the eyes of men about to act as judge and jury; by which a prejudice may be created against the party about to be tried. I am also in hopes, Mr. Editor, that the deputy (not usher of the black rod, but he of the red pole) has succeeded in abolishing pluralities of office, and that Presidents of Courts of Inquiry will not be suffered to make charges against the accused, and thus be constituted (by self-election) judges and prosecutors in the same cause. If these things be not already amended, I can only account for the silence of its officers by supposing their hopes of relief to be fixed on the "Commission," which it is to be desired will do much to revise the Coast Guard service. MILITARY AND NAVAL WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' FUND.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Carlton Chambers, 6, Regent-street, 23d April, 1833.

SIR,—At the meeting held this day in Carlton Chambers, 8, Regent-street, Major-General Wright, Royal Engineers, in the chair, it was unanimously agreed that the thanks of this meeting be given to you, for the very ready and able manner in which you have advocated the proposition for a fund which this meeting have this day instituted, under the name of "The Military and Naval Fund," for the benefit of widows and orphans of all officers in "Her Majesty's Army and Navy."

I have great pleasure in conveying the sense of the meeting to you on this occasion, as I am well aware of the great interest you have taken on the subject, and the pleasure it will afford you on hearing that the use of your columns and remarks have been mainly instrumental in accomplishing such a benevolent object. I have the honour to be, your obedient humble servant,

HENRY KERR, Honorary Secretary

BAYONET FENCING AND RIFLE DUTY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Since your gallant correspondent Arthur (in courtesy) has called for my humble aid, many will agree with me when I say, that few persons, and myself least of all, can hope to add to the instructive information which that dashing officer (and in a double sense) may be said always to have "at his fingers' ends!" After Chevron's and the Young Ensign's able letters, in favour of bayonet-fencing, can I do better than to leave it to them to point out the "cases where it might become most valuable?" It strikes me to be important against Cavalry in ALL cases, and especially since they have taken to attacking batteries, to strengthen individual confidence ALWAYS; and equally so resistance against sorties, dashes made upon advance or rear-guards, escorts, foraging-parties, or on being trapped by ambuscades, or when routing them, or where the passage of a river in boats is disputed to the first boats, containing either reconnoitring or advanced guard, similarly in disembarking; but especially when piquets or posts of ANY kind, after having been SURPRISED, must be subdued with the cold steel to prevent alarm. Continental troops generally perform surprises with muskets slung and briquets drawn, EXCEPT they are bayonet-fencers. Large breaches, or the sides of squares in the field, will also be defended best by the latter. Troops in line, charged DOWN HILL by another, may resist even SUCH a charge, by opposing bayonet-fencing to those who are ignorant of it. Part of a line, thrown back to meet an attack in flank, would receive more firmly the charge generally following such a resisting flank movement. My feeble fancy would be, to lead bayonet-fencers, properly drilled, to break lines by a charge shaped like a very obtuse angle, having a supporting company in rear of the apex. More confidently still could I suggest a NEW and truly simple attack, insuring success to bayonet-fencers, although the enemy should exceed their number by two-thirds—nay, to double it, the latter being ignorant of the art; but since British soldiers, AS YET, have to acquire it, my publishing so important a hint to those who enjoy already what, unless speedily rivalled, WILL TELL AGAINST us, would be reprehensible! Permit me now to resume, "in earnest," the defence of my cloth, began "in play;" for my last *, nevertheless, shows that Riflemen are mere pretenders, unless they keep, not only at arm's or pike's-length, but at a truly respectful distance, and by well "riddling" their ranks, those who show ambition for a closer acquaintance, thus to afford double the desideratum which my rifle-green disliking, yet liberal opponent, despairs to find in other troops; for does he not say—"If the bullet always told, the result would be otherwise†?" Arthur surely cannot mean to include the bullets of Riflemen! for, although amorous skirmishers, as, I may say, they uniformly are, they scorn to waste their fire upon MISSES, those of drawing and ball-rooms ALWAYS excepted; and for all that Arthur denies their being preferable to Yeomanry, whose shocking bad taste he confirms, by saying that, even FROM drawing and other rooms, they look for RUFIN Misses in the streets!—to form them into imposing harems, I suppose, even after "discharging each 120 shots in succession‡"—no joke, except with the enemy. Per contra, a Rifleman's "love for his Queen" would have made him dispense with Misses of EVERY class after the bugle had bid him to "commence firing;" and should the scythemen manage to balk the reloading of rifles (and I am at a loss as to any other "means of rendering Riflemen totally harmless§"), the third rank's pikes (proposed, as well as life-pistols, in my former ||) will amuse the scythemen quite long enough to be knocked over by the life-pistols of the other ranks. The proper sphere for a Rifleman is in forests, hedge bank and ditch parallels, and angles, and rugged and broken ground of any kind, with plenty of scope for long shots (I mean hits), and also for partisan warfare, where he can bring to good account an overflowing share of penetration, seasoned with cunning; for such, with superior activity, ought to be the leading inducements for putting a rifle in his hands. Prussian Riflemen are not barely enlisted, but, what is better, carefully selected, since most of the confidential communications and duties are entrusted to the sagacity and fidelity of German Feldjæger. Frederick the Great, who never hesitated when force was wanted, still said, "la ruse réussit ou la force échoue," and as every file of Rifles should prefer stratagems, where practicable, a fox might become their chacus as suitably, and to Generals' eyes more agreeably than the skull and bones. I shall beg leave to resume the defence of rifles still more in earnest; for I shall not again take to the "red-herring trail" which Arthur, as cunningly as flatteringly, has drawn across me to "take me off the scent;" but "it lays breast high" still, only my poor nag (time) has broken down, and your readers' patience too, I fear; wherefore permit me, in few words only, to show that, even in streets, Rifles are of service. Troops clearing streets of an enemy are fired upon from the windows: a few Rifles, one single file close to each row of houses, would stop it, for their crossing fire would skilfully pick off every bust trying for an aim, deterring them at any rate. If the street is occupied by Cavalry, although Rifles might defy a charge against men sheltered by door-ways, &c., or with their backs placed against the wall, they would do better, first to force open houses, and then communications from house to house, or over the roofs—for few climb better—till they can reach a position likely to be made secure, or where reinforcement can reach them, keeping up a very destructive fire upon the officers all the way, and against fantasins, or all daring to approach them by way of staircases, or by ladders, &c. Requesting to be indulged with your permission to renew my rifle-fire shortly, I have the honour to remain, Sir, yours, &c. DE BERENGER.

THE BRITISH MILITARY SYSTEM.—(RECRUITS.)

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Perceiving in a Military periodical a few days since some observations on the frequency of the crime of desertion, and especially in regiments stationed in Canada, in which the writer threw great blame upon Commanding Officers of regiments, accusing them of "using unnecessary harshness and annoyance towards their men;" I feel it to be my duty to take the subject up, and I will, in few words, show that the men have other and stronger reasons for deserting from the service, than that which has been assigned for it by the author of the article above mentioned. In the first place, Sir, a recruit, on joining his regiment, is generally about one pound in debt, in consequence of the bounty not being sufficient to pay for such articles as he is, by regulation, obliged to be provided with; and, to clear off this debt, he is put under stoppages, and (independent of his messing) receives only three half-pence per diem. Now, during the period he is at drill (two months) he wears out at least one pound's worth of clothes, and, during that time, were there no other expenses for him than his daily messing, he could not clear more than 30 shillings; but, as there are many other expenses, such as washing, barrack damages, &c., he will only be about five shillings less in debt than when he was first put under stoppages; and, it is not improbable, that he will not have cleared off anything. The period a soldier is being instructed in his drill is the most disagreeable part of his military life, and, instead of his being in the receipt of his daily pay, to reconcile him to it, it is obliged to be stopped from him, and he takes an early disgust for the service he has entered. It is generally four months before a recruit is out of debt, and often longer. The soldier is next put upon guard, where, perhaps, from exposure to the weather, he takes a severe illness, and is obliged to be sent to the hospital: here, to give him an idea of the liberality of the service, he has ten pence a day stopped from his pay. He is now sent upon foreign service, where no extra allowance is made him, and, as he is, one third of the time of his being on board ship, on deck, and exposed to the wet, and having to pull ropes, wash decks, &c., &c., he wears out a good deal of his necessaries, and, on his arrival at his destination, he is provided with new ones, and generally finds himself in debt. Men going to North America are obliged to get warm clothing to preserve them from the inclemency of the winter; and as these are very expensive (the flannels alone amount to 16 or 18 shillings) they are thrown heavily into debt, and take an early opportunity of deserting into the States, where wages are high. I am glad to find that in future an allowance of 30 shillings is to be given to every soldier on his arrival in British North America, and 1*l.* per year, to compensate him for the extra expense to which he is put: but, Sir, I cannot help thinking that this boon has been granted rather from the unsettled state of affairs in that part of the British dominions rendering the fidelity of every soldier of the greatest importance, than from any regard for his comfort and welfare. There are many circumstances I could mention in which no allowance is made to the soldier for any damage his kit may have received. There is one, however, which particularly strikes me, and that is, accidents from severe weather at sea, not actually terminating in shipwreck; and by way of example, I cannot do better than cite the case of a draft of the 36th Regiment, stationed in this garrison. The circumstances, as told me by one of the officers, are as follow:—They sailed from Cove in the beginning of last November, in the Arab transport, which I am assured was leaky before she sailed; they were exposed to very severe gales for about three weeks, and the ship made about a foot an hour, so as to require the men to pump the vessel day and night until the arrival of the ship at this port in December last; in consequence of this, the men's black trowsers and boots were rotted as well as other less expensive parts of their necessaries, and upon their landing at this place they were furnished, at their own expense (no allowance being granted), with new ones, so that each man was about 15 shillings or one pound in debt. It may be said that there was an advance of pay to the men on their going on board; but their flannels, and the necessary articles with which they were "required" to be furnished, amounted to more than that. The Board of Ordnance has, within the last two or three years, taken away several comforts from the soldier. I fear that I have been trespassing on your valuable time, but I have been as concise as the subject permitted. If the remarks contained in this letter meet with your approbation, I shall feel obliged by your giving them a space in your excellent publication; and should they be the means of procuring any advantage, however small, for the British soldier, it will gratify the sincere wish of PATRIOT.

CAPTAIN BRENTON.—THE SHANNON AND HER LIEUTENANT.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I fearlessly address this letter to you, knowing your truly impartial course in the conduct of your valuable paper, and feeling a deep debt of gratitude due to you for your great and talented exertions in favour of the widows and orphans of Naval officers. Having read in your Naval and Military Gazette of April 13, a memoir of the late Captain E. P. Brenton, in which it is stated that "in December, 1803, Captain Brenton was sent by Captain Oliver to destroy the Shannon, 36, which frigate had run on shore under the strong batteries of Tulihon Island, near La Hogue, from whence the enemy were about to remove her, as she had sustained but little damage," I beg to point out that there is a mistake in saying that the Shannon was but little injured; the circumstance was as follows:—The ship struck on a reef of rocks, the sea was then receding, and they lay exposed to the fire from the batteries nearly 12 hours, in the hope that, on the return of the tide, they should be enabled to get her off. After they had taken every means to lighten the vessel, they found that she had received so much injury, that she could not float; there was, therefore, no alternative—they were obliged to surrender; but before doing so, the Captain desired the First Lieutenant would see him destroy his private instructions, and which he threw overboard: unfortunately the box was not sufficiently loaded, and it floated towards the batteries. The Captain was in the utmost distress, as he said that the box contained instructions of the greatest importance: the First Lieutenant immediately volunteered to go and sink them, which he happily effected, but at the imminent risk of his life, a life which he held cheap in comparison with breach of honour or duty. On his return to the ship, and finding that the Shannon was in a sinking state, they lowered the British colours. The enemy were so exasperated that they continued firing for some time, and killed two men after they had surrendered. They had the delight to hear, the morning after their capture, that Captain Brenton had, during the preceeding night, completed the destruction of the Shannon. Captain Brenton has gone down to the grave loaded with honours which were well and honourably earned; the Lieutenant above named sunk into his honoured grave lamented by all who were able to appreciate his worth, but without one honour bestowed by a country to whose glory "all his best days, and morning of his life," had been devoted, and now his sorrowing widow and four orphans have to lament that his energies had not been directed to some more grateful profession, that they might have been secured from the sorrows attendant on the case of a

COMMANDER'S WIDOW.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE CURTAILMENT, OF CORPORAL PUNISHMENT.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Various modes of punishment, without having recourse to the lash, have of late been proposed for the maintenance of discipline in the Army; and it has been urged (very justly, I am inclined to believe) that were corporal punishment abolished, our ranks would soon be filled by a superior class of recruits to the present. It is, however, generally admitted that it is utterly impossible to entirely do away with it. I beg, therefore, to offer the following suggestions for its curtailment, which I think might safely be adopted.

I propose to distribute the men into two classes. The first, or well-behaved class, to be composed of all men on first joining, and those of good character now in the service; that Courts-Martial alone have the power of displacing them from their class; that no man serving in it be liable to corporal punishment, and that they be as much as possible exempted from the ordinary barrack fatigue duties, and that, when it is at all practicable, they be selected for duties of honour, &c.

The second, or ill-behaved class, to be formed into a separate company or companies, wear no lace or ornaments, and the officers be allowed to resort to severer punishments to maintain discipline than that used to the others; in fact, that they be allowed the powers delegated to the Provost on service, and that Courts-Martial might award flogging to a greater extent even than now sanctioned. As the duty of this company will necessarily be more harassing than that of the others, I suggest that the officers and non-commissioned officers of it be allowed extra pay;—the latter to be selected from the well-behaved companies. I should also recommend that men be sentenced to serve in this class for a certain period, and that unless an amendment take place in their conduct, they be not permitted, even at the expiration of the prescribed time to return to their former class; and that a sentence to serve in this class should also convey a forfeiture of increase of pay while serving, and all claims to pension on discharge, unless redeemed by subsequent good conduct.

The foregoing is somewhat in accordance with the suggestions of a late Commander-in-Chief in India, now no more; and indeed his late Royal Highness the Duke of York adopted a system corresponding in part with these suggestions, by the formation of the Royal African Colonial Corps, as well as some West India regiments; this plan, however, did not succeed, owing to the corps being wholly composed of men of bad character, and, consequently, the absence of those good men caused a deficiency of that salutary example which at all times it is desirable should be maintained. I am, therefore, inclined to think that the adoption of the company I propose might safely be tried, and that the men still continuing to serve in their own corps, and among their former comrades, would endeavour to regain their former standing, and wipe off the stain on their character as speedily as possible, while those in the well-behaved class would hesitate to commit a crime which would cause them to lose caste, and carry with it the liability of being subjected to a most degrading punishment, which, to the minds of civilians and young soldiers, is very revolting.

I fear I have already trespassed too much on your indulgence, so conclude by subscribing myself, A SOLDIER.

To Readers and Correspondents.

"Britannicus" is mistaken: the report respecting a Baltic fleet did not appear in this Paper. Such a step would be tantamount to a declaration of war against Russia. The ships are probably intended for the purpose stated in our last, and to relieve Rodney, Vanguard, Asia, and Pembroke, whose term of service has expired. We carefully avoid giving circulation to rumours without due inquiry.

We hope to publish the letter of "Justitia" next week, by which time we shall have prepared some tables which will set at rest the matter in dispute.

With all respect for "G. G." we cannot add to our onerous duties the task of correcting his manuscripts. Many of his suggestions are certainly good, but they should be put into the hands of some one who would condense and prepare them for publication. Our friend should consider the limited space of this Paper, and the numerous demands for it from members of every branch of the service.

"A Serjeant of Infantry" shall have attention.

The overland mail from India of the 25th Feb. has not yet arrived. The Braganza (steamer), which arrived at Falmouth on Sunday last, waited two days at Gibraltar for it; it will not now arrive till the 30th inst., 17 days after the Company has received her despatches.

Thanks to "Candour:" our reflections were meant to apply to "officers" making exaggerated statements. The end desired may be a good one, but it does not justify the unworthy means that have been used, and this our correspondent will admit, if he knows anything about the state of our own and foreign navies. Does a mere correction, in a second edition, of a monstrous error, justify the Flag Officer's statement of the French Navy, after his first edition had been circulated through the world in the columns of the Times journal? There the error has never been corrected. As regards the general raveing which "Candour" recommends, we believe cutting down a "thief" into a frigate costs nearly as much as building a new one, and, after all, she is but an old ship. The blame of multiplying inferior ships must rest with those under whose control it was done, spite of all the experience of last war, and reiterated remonstrances at the time it was going on. "Candour" admits this to be now at an end. We have no wish to reflect on by-gone proceedings —"What is done can't be undone"—our practice has always been to laud and encourage good intentions when we perceive them to exist, rather than to reflect on former incapacity, or errors in the conduct of Naval affairs.

Continual complaints reach us of the irregular delivery through the Post-Office of this Paper; but parties aggrieved, instead of subjecting our Publisher (as in the case this week by a Purser) to the expense of heavy postage should address themselves to the Agents through whom they have ordered the paper. We would at any time readily give 10l. to punish a person substituting another paper for the N. and M. Gazette, or fraudulently withholding it.

SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1839.

The policy of the Government of India is a subject of interest so important to the nation, that no apology we trust is required for this week again reverting to it. Opinion respecting this policy varies less than regarding other matters of national consequence—and few are found to condemn the active measures adopted by Lord Auckland, since the publication of the official documents on which his acts rested. The circumstances which led his Lordship to call into the field the energies of the Indian Empire, and the results which will probably follow from their being put forth, are clearly and impartially stated in a pamphlet, entitled "The Policy of the Government of British India, as exhibited in Official Documents," lately published by Allen and Co. We conceive that the necessity, justice, and humanity of Lord Auckland's policy are amply proved in this pamphlet,—and if we had ever entertained a doubt regarding the accuracy of the private documents received from India, on which we had previously, in this Journal, expressed our opinions on the acts of the Indian Government, a perusal of these public papers must have removed them. The intrigues of Russia —the attacks of Persia—the duplicity of the former and the infidelity of the latter—the designs of St. Petersburgh and the aggressions of Tehran—are all exposed to public gaze. True it is, that Count Nesselrode has disclaimed, on the part of his master, all intention of invading India as unjust and impossible.

Now, as to the justice of the invasion, there is only one opinion, but of the possibility there are many and various opinions. We are of those who believe in the practicability of the invasion, and also are of those who believe that the injustice of the attack on our dominions would weigh very lightly in the political scale of the Emperor Nicholas. We take a John Bull view of the question —we ask how is Great Britain to judge of Russian intentions? Is it by her acts and by her agents, or by her words and by her Ministers? Count Simonich may be displaced, and General Duhamel appointed,—the treaty with Candahar may be abandoned and M. Vichovitch recalled,—but what security has Britain that Russia and her agents, either with or without public instructions, may not and will not attempt to injure our interests in Central Asia, and intrigue even in the very heart of India? We see safety only in the policy lately adopted—in having an army in the field ready to check aggression—in re-establishing the Affghan kingdom, and in coercing the petty but petulant chieftains on the west and north-west frontiers of our Indian possessions. We see peace, security, and commercial prosperity as the certain results of this policy of Lord Auckland—and we congratulate England and India on his able Government.

Very erroneous notions have been instilled into the public, respecting the ability of the men raised for the Navy in the present day, as compared with the crews of our ships during the last and preceding wars.

With that spirit of detraction which has been so incessantly displayed, by those who are compelled to admit that ships are manned in spite of their predictions to the contrary, they fail not to assert, that the crews procured are every way inferior, not only in professional but in physical ability; and some go so far as to affirm that they are principally composed of outcasts who can obtain no work on shore.

This is one reason which induces us to suppose that, with the exception of one or two officers whose professional merits are not held in the same esteem by the Board of Admiralty as by themselves, and some others blinded by party prejudices—with these exceptions, we say—we think the persons, who make disparaging comparisons between the crews of the present day and those of last war in particular, are on this, like many other Naval subjects on which they treat, utterly misinformed.

We have been assured, that a considerable portion of men serving in the fleet, from 1793 to 1814, were sent there by the civil authorities as irreclaimable vagabonds, upon whom all the house of correction punishments on shore had been exhausted in vain, and the choice left them between transportation or volunteering into the Navy; that it was the daily practice of the magistrates to commute punishments for this purpose, and that the sweepings of jails were invariably and periodically consigned to the fleet. This was one cause of the great severity of discipline necessary to be adopted, which severity had its appalling effects upon persons who witnessed or heard of the daily floggings that occurred on board almost every ship; but the scarcity of men made it necessary to receive these characters, which is the only excuse for their admission, in association with men who had been impressed into the service. To assert that any such persons are now received, or that men of known bad characters, even supposing them to be seamen, are entered, is most false and libellous; for it is notorious, that a strict scrutiny is exercised in this respect, and one reason for the time occupied in manning a newly-commissioned ship is the precaution adopted by the officers, lest they should enter persons whose conduct would call for frequent corporal punishment.

We have been referred to Admiral Ekins's book on "Naval Battles" for some statements relating to the ships which bore a principal share in the battle of Trafalgar, and we have been also assured that even Nelson's ship was indifferently manned on that occasion. Amongst many other instances of the inferiority of the drafts of men received, in appearance and muscular strength, the gallant author relates the following:—Fifty convicts being sent on board Bellona, 74, they were called aft and addressed by the Captain, who appears to have had some experience as to the nature of the materials, for he told them at starting, that every one of them reported for punishment should receive double allowance. The Conqueror had not more than twenty seamen on board in 1804, and in the battle of Trafalgar, in the following year (after manning her prize) she had only eight men on board who could knot a shroud. The Donegal and Belleisle, ordered to the Mediterranean in 1803, had not twenty men each capable of taking the wheel. But the most remarkable case occurred later in the war to Sir Home Popham, when he fitted out the Sterling Castle, for he actually weighed his crew of 600 men, and the average was only jockey-weight. On representing this to the Admiralty, 200 of them were exchanged for heavier men. The circumstance was mentioned in Parliament by the late Mr. Whitbread.

But the system of sending bad characters to the fleet was, in fact, of very old date; and it is preposterous, now that it is abandoned, and a ship-of-war no longer considered a prison (for the practice of sending smugglers on board for punishment has been discontinued within these few years) to be drawing comparisons between periods when the reverse was notoriously the case. Pepys, in his interesting "Diary," has the following passage, from which we may gather the quality of the materials sent to the fleet in his time:—"Up betimes, and forced to go to my Lord Mayor about the business of the press-men; I find him a mean man of understanding, and dispatch of any public business. Thence out of curiosity to Bridewell to see the pressed men, where there are about 500, but so unruly that I durst not go among them. I found one of the vessels loaded with the Bridewell birds in a great mutiny, and they would not sail, not they; but with good words, and cajoling the ringleader into the Tower (where, when he was come he was clapped up in the hole), they were got away quietly; but I think it is much if they do not run the vessel on ground."

The fact of the matter is this,—that although some few ships, by the interest or management of their Captains, retained good crews during the war, after they had been at great pains to cull them by pressing seamen, and sending on board these worthless characters in exchange, the majority were by no means so well manned, as regards the quality or character of the men, as those in commission at present. When a ship had been brought into tolerable condition, it was certain that, on her arrival in port, orders would be received to discharge one-third, and sometimes one-half, of her crew into the vessels fitting, and this hiatus was made up of "Lord Mayor's men,"—that is, thieves who had commuted their sentence, or foreigners induced to enter from the prison ships; and this practice induced Captains to rate incompetent persons able seamen, for the purpose of discharging them as such, when they were required to part with a portion of their crews.

Since the above article was in type, we have read with great attention the debate in Parliament of Tuesday night, when Sir Edward Codrington brought forward his motion respecting the peace complements employed in the Navy (see Parliamentary Intelligence).

As our readers are already in possession of our frequently-expressed opinion on this point, we have only to observe, that in the course of the present year a considerable increase has already been accomplished, and that our impression is—and it appears to have been also the opinion of the gallant Admiral, his Seconder, and those officers who spoke during the debate—that no good can result to the Naval service by bringing forward substantive motions calculated to control or interfere with the duties of the Board of Admiralty.

The proper occasion for officers to deliver opinions, either in approbation or at variance with the practice adopted, is when the House is in committee of supply; and, therefore, whilst we are fully aware of the anxiety of Sir E. Codrington for the honour and welfare of that service of which he is one of the most distinguished ornaments, we certainly cannot concur in the propriety of his motion, which was, of course, defeated by a large majority.

Mr. Charles Wood, with his usual acumen, set the matter clearly before the House, and showed that the practice of reducing ships' establishments in peace was a very ancient one, adopted and approved by every succeeding Board of Admiralty—by Hawke, Anson, Howe, St. Vincent, and, in fact, every distinguished Commander who has presided thereat. The general Government resolves upon asking Parliament for a vote to a certain amount, and to employ a certain number of men. When the vote is confirmed, the executive duty of applying the means placed at their disposal devolves upon the Board of Admiralty. The Board undoubtedly have a difficult duty to perform. It must be the wish of each member, that every ship should be, not only perfect in all respects, but equal or superior to the ships of rival nations. But they owe a duty to the country, as well as the profession; and the question that arises, and for the proper elucidation of which they are responsible, is, how can these means be employed with the greatest benefit to the service and the country generally? Now, although, as we have frequently stated, we should wish to see every ship manned up to the full war complement, we must admit, that it is more beneficial to employ a greater number of ships—if, as it appears, a choice must be determined on—because by such means a greater number of officers are in active employment, acquiring a knowledge of their profession.

In war, the amount of a crew should certainly be greater, on many accounts, than in peace, particularly in the case of British ships, because the portion required to make up the war establishment can be obtained abroad, as well as at home, from our merchant vessels, and the ship made efficient in a single day, which could not be the case with ships newly commissioned, even supposing them to receive the half of the crews of those employed, and thus destroy the efficiency of both for a season.

To say nothing of the casualties that may be anticipated by conflict with the enemy, there is seldom a period during war when vessels are not minus some portion of their men in prizes; neither can ships be made up to their full complements, even in the midst of war. We do not believe there is an instance of a fleet, and hardly of a single ship, going into action so provided: and we appeal to Sir Edward Codrington, who commanded Orion, one of the best-manned ships at Trafalgar, what was the quality and number of his crew on that memorable day? The Board of Admiralty have not only their own experience, and the opinions of the officers in command to appeal to, but the records of their department; and it would be an interesting document, a Table, showing the quality (ratings) and number of men on board the ships engaged with the enemy during the last eventful war.

Our attention has been directed to a paragraph in a contemporary publication, the Athenæum, of April 13th, in which the reviewer of Capt. Harris's Notes, on the Emigration of the Cape Colonists, steps out of his way to heap disgrace on the British troops employed in the late Caffre war, by stating,—

"Whatever may have been the sufferings of the border colonists during the irruption of the Caffres, their losses (in property at least) were trebled by the protracted operations of a campaign, the achievements of which were the slaughter of women and children, the burning of villages, and other needless devastation. The vaunting tone in which these several exploits were officially recounted, served only to blazon their inglorious nature."

It is well known to all engaged in the late most necessary and unavoidable war with the Caffres, that the above statements are utterly destitute of foundation; and in any faithful narrative of the war, nothing of the sort will be found. From the various communications that have reached us, we can positively assert, that not a single woman or child was injured during the nine months the war lasted; on the contrary, they were in the habit of coming to the various encampments for food, or perhaps, also, for the purpose of spying when the men were in arms in the bush. Food was always liberally supplied to the women and children, and never the slightest molestation offered to them.—The grass huts on the borders of the colony were burnt, it is true, for the purpose of intimidating the enemy, who had previously destroyed 500 houses of the colonists, and murdered forty farmers on their thresholds. The Caffre huts are put up in one day, but no villages, such as a reader in England would infer from the paragraph, were destroyed. Lastly, as to the war being needlessly protracted, it was not continued one hour after that in which the enemy sued for peace. To have made peace with them after their irruption (without declaration of war), previous to their acknowledgment of their desire to treat, would have been the height of weakness and folly.

We are extremely glad to hear that Government have under their consideration the defenceless state of the Channel Islands, owing to the absence of any port in Guernsey or Jersey capable of sheltering and protecting vessels of war or war steamers. As both islands possess every facility and plenty of material for the formation of rough break-waters, harbours sufficiently secure may be made at a trifling expense, compared to their immense utility, should the necessity for maintaining a Naval force in that quarter arise. All this leads us to suppose that the necessary steps will soon be taken to accomplish an object so desirable on all accounts.

We recommend to notice the following letter, from "A Veteran of more than 40 Years' Service," and we think that his suggestion is in some respects good. We have been informed that the 7th Fusiliers, which regiment has no Ensigns, experiences this advantage in having Lieutenants only—that an appointment to that corps is sought with avidity; for all Subalterns in it find themselves on an equality in rank and pay, except in the case of being a Lieutenant of seven years' standing. The only objection that can be urged against the Veteran's suggestion is the increased expense—and we fear it is vital in these economical days. As for the duties of the junior Lieutenants in the Royal Fusiliers, of Second Lieutenants in other corps, and of Ensigns—they are identical. We are, however, of opinion, that without the pay, the mere rank of Lieutenant, on first entry into the service, is of very little ultimate consequence.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—It appears to me that it would be a considerable boon to non-purchasing do away entirely the rank of Ensign, and assimilate all regiments of the Line with the 7th Royal Fusiliers. The advantages would be, that officers doing the same duty (for, except as to carrying the colours, where is the difference?) would have the same rank. That the pay of an Ensign is insufficient to support him in the rank of a gentleman is a matter of notoriety; or, if a very prudent young man can make both ends meet at the end of the year, he deserves well of his country. The military taxes on joining, viz. band and mess, added to the kit-out, run very hard upon an Ensign; some alteration, or rather improvement, is much called for in this respect.

The extra shilling now given to a Lieutenant of seven years' standing, would, by the above, fall in its proper place, instead of going to the purchasing Ensign, of altogether nine years' service (two Ensign, seven Lieutenant), while the non-purchasing Ensign of eleven (five Ensign, six Lieutenant) has to see his more fortunate junior brother officer in the receipt of this additional shilling, contrary to length of service, and frequently to merit. This shilling, it is to be presumed, was meant as a reward for long service, and to assist those much requiring it, not as the interest of purchase-money, and for those whose friends were probably able to assist them. Seven years, after doing the duty of a Subaltern, would not be at all too soon to give the additional shilling; but if, in these days of parsimony to the Army—extravagance in other respects—it is cried out, it cannot be done on account of the additional expense it would cause, this increase ought to be altered (if Ensigns are to remain) to giving it to the Subaltern of ten years' standing the non-purchasing Ensign would benefit by this, and the purchasing lose little.

I am not an advocate for abolishing purchase altogether in the British Army, on the contrary, I think the effect would be bad: but to see two officers doing the same duty, and the one with money commanding, and being better paid than him of greater length of service, perhaps of more merit, without it, merely because the latter is unable to purchase, requires revision. It appears to me, that it is quite soon enough for the moneyed man to derive advantage from this, when he is promoted to the rank of Captain, and a different duty.

Perhaps you, or some of your correspondents, would tell how the being without Ensigns works in the 7th; at all events, I hope you will give this insertion, that it may bring the subject under notice. I have not forgotten the day when I was myself a Subaltern, though now

A Veteran of more than Forty Years' Service.

The Weekly Dispatch lately filled a whole column with "Advice to the Officers of the Army and Navy" on Flogging. In our vocation we are often doomed to read a deal of nonsense, but we have seldom been dosed with such a quantum as the Dispatch inflicted on us. The opinions and sentiments of the Dispatch are utterly at variance with those of the military on most topics, and we can assure the Editor that his hebdomadal effusions on the Lash are utterly disgusting to the very men he purposes to please. The soldier has many grievances to complain of, but certainly not, in these days, of "Flogging"—that is a punishment reserved for thieves and incorrigible blackguards only. We trust that the power to inflict this punishment may never be taken out of the hands of Courts-Martial, but we shall rejoice to learn that the power is seldom required to be exercised. Our sympathies are not so extensive as those of the Dispatch—indeed, we rejoice that rascals cannot escape unscathed—and on rascals alone is Corporal Punishment now inflicted.

Having laid before our readers the principal facts and results contained in Major Tulloch's Report on the "Sickness, &c. &c. &c. of the Troops in the United Kingdom," we now proceed to condense, in a similar manner, from his Report on the Mediterranean stations. These are considered under the three distinct commands of Gibraltar, Malta, and the Ionian Isles

Gibraltar.—After describing generally the rock itself, its geological structure and climate, Major Tulloch proceeds with the usual details. The troops here usually consist of the six service companies each, of five regiments of Infantry, with five companies of Artillery, and one of Sappers and Miners. The barracks are ample at this station, and the hospital accommodation excellent. The rations and diet here consist of one pound of meat (fresh or salt) and one pound of bread. Salt meat is issued four days in the week during winter, and two days in the week during summer;—one pint of wine is issued daily to each man. The duties are, in such an extensive fortress, necessarily severe; but they are proved not to have been such as to injure their health. From 1818 to 1836 it appears that for every 1000 men, 966 have been admitted to hospital yearly; thus, every man may be said to undergo treatment once in twelve months, which is about the proportion in the United Kingdom. Exclusive of the mortality by yellow fever in 1828, and by cholera in 1834, the average deaths have been thirteen per 1000 annually. This and the low mortality among the civil inhabitants, prove the general salubrity of Gibraltar. Still Gibraltar, though a mere rock, is not exempt from intermittent fever—for about five per 1000 have been annually admitted under this head. Yellow fever was first noticed at Gibraltar in specific detail in 1801, when about one-quarter of the troops and more than one-half of the civil inhabitants were cut off by it; and only twenty-eight adults of the whole garrison escaped without having been attacked. The total deaths were, 54 officers, 864 soldiers, 164 soldiers' wives and children, and 1864 of the civil inhabitants.

In 1810, 1813, 1814, and 1828, yellow fever broke out; in the latter year the disease was general. The following Table will show its prevalence:—

	Strength.	Admitted for Treatment.	Died
Commissioned Officers	138	53	10
N. C. Officers and Soldiers	1964	1144	422
Women and Children		447	83
Civil Inhabitants	17,000	1701	1961

It seems to have been most severe among the Artillery and 42d Foot—for in these corps about one-half of those attacked died—and to have been most fatal along the line-wall facing the sea. That exposure at night did not render men more liable to this disease, is proved by the fact, that of the Serjeants there died ten per cent.—of Corporals, twelve of Drummers, seven and of Privates, eleven, that is, the Privates are exactly a mean between the Serjeants and Corporals, who are not exposed to a similar extent. The ratio among the Drummers is least, as they are the youngest. In 1828 and 1813 the mortality was highest on Oct. 16th, and in 1804 about a week earlier. The same has been observed in other parts of Spain and at New York. The origin of this disease is still a mystery. The unhealthy character of autumn seems to be established in the northern hemisphere; and we may yet hope that this may lead to the discovery of some atmospheric peculiarity at that period. Of diseases of the lungs at Gibraltar, we find the ratio to be 141 to 148 in the United Kingdom, and liver complaint is very little more prevalent than in this country. Diseases of the stomach and bowels are twice as prevalent, and thrice as fatal; the cause of which may be partly an increased temperature, and partly salt provision. In 1834 cholera attacked the garrison,—459 were admitted to hospital, 131 died; i. e., one in three and a half. The 5th, 23d, 60th, 70th, 92d, and Ordnance, suffered very unequally;—the 5th lost forty-one men, three women, and four children, out of 588 individuals, while the 92d lost only nine men and four women, out of 687. Males and females were attacked in nearly the same proportion; but of the latter more died. Children were nearly exempt from attack; but when attacked rapidly sunk. Few about the age of puberty died; and soldiers under thirty-three appear to have been more exempt than those older. Of civilians, the old, infirm, and dissipated, principally suffered; but among the troops, particularly in the 5th and 60th, the finest and best-conducted men were cut off, while those long addicted to intemperance escaped, or rapidly recovered. The medical officers seem unanimous that the disease was not contagious. The proportion of men admitted here for diseases of the brain is the same as among the Dragoons at home; and the ratio of deaths is even lower. Cases of delirium tremens are rare, yet intemperance is not uncommon; but it seems not to be attended with the same evil effects—moral and physical—as in tropical climates. Dropsies are by no means prevalent, and almost all the deaths from this class of disease were among old men, worn out by dissipation and long service. Other diseases rarely prove fatal; and the police regulations of Gibraltar save the soldier from suffering the consequences of promiscuous intercourse. We notice, with great satisfaction, that corporal punishment has been found less necessary at Gibraltar than at any other foreign station. We shall, in our next, proceed to examine the Report on Malta.

The Queen honoured the Marquess and Marchioness of Lansdowne with her company at dinner on Wednesday evening, at Lansdowne House.

It is stated to be the Queen's intention to give two balls at Buckingham Palace, one on the 10th, the other on the 24th, of May. Her Majesty will have a concert on the 13th of May.

Sir Robert Peel having been induced to alter his intention with respect to the Jamaica Bill, and to make it a party question, Lord John Russell last night announced, that the Government not being able to find that they had come to an erroneous conclusion, it was necessary that they should press on the House the adoption of this Bill. He added that Sir Robert having given notice of so decided a course, before the propositions of the Government had been fully debated, and as he did not think that the members of that House had had their attention sufficiently called, either to the papers or to the measures founded upon the proceedings in the West India Islands, Jamaica particularly, he did not propose to bring on the bill on Monday, but to move the consideration of it on Friday next. Sir R. is determined to join issue on the question of superseding the constitution for any term of years—deeming it important to permit another appeal to be made to the Assembly of Jamaica. He was ready, however, if Her Majesty's Government were of opinion that, in consequence of the refusal of the Government of Jamaica to perform its functions, any practical difficulty had arisen, to provide for that practical difficulty, limiting the remedy to the necessity. So Jamaica is to be the field of party battle.

On Tuesday, the meeting for which we had prepared our readers, took place at Carlton Chambers, Regent-st., for the purpose of raising a fund for the benefit of the widows and orphans of Naval and Military officers; Major-General Wright, Royal Engineers, was in the chair. A code of laws and regulations was adopted. The object is to raise a fund, from which, after the lapse of three years, the widows of the subscribers will derive a benefit by pensions. As soon as a capital fund of 500,000*l.* is raised, the surplus will be applied to the erection of male and female schools. Capt. Talbot informed the meeting that a gentleman of fortune had declared his determination of bequeathing his property to the Institution.—The meeting was not so numerously attended as we could have wished; but those present were very warm in the cause. The next meeting will be on the 1st of May, when we hope every officer who may be in London will make it a point to attend. Zealous co-operation may effect an object of incalculable advantage to the Services.

Despatches were received on Saturday at the Colonial Department, from Col. Doherty, the Governor of Sierra Leone; also despatches, dated Nov. 25, at the India Board, from the Governor of Singapore; and, dated Jan. 3d, from the officer administering Her Majesty's Government at the Presidency of Bombay; on Sunday despatches were received from Major-Gen. Sir George Napier, Governor of the Cape of Good Hope; and on Monday from the Right Hon. S. Mackenzie, Gov. of Ceylon, and from Gov. Light, at British Guiana. On Thursday despatches were received at the India Board from Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India, and from the officers administering Her Majesty's Government at the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay.

The Queen has granted the office of Her Majesty's Advocate for Scotland to Andrew Rutherfurd, Esq.; and of Her Majesty's Solicitor-General for Scotland to James Ivory, Esq.

The Duke of Wellington, as Director of the Ancient Concerts, gave a sumptuous dinner at Apsley House, on Wednesday evening, to a select party.

We rejoice to state that the Duke of Richmond has recovered from his late severe illness. The cause was the moving of the musket-ball by which his grace was wounded at the battle of Orthez, and which—it never having been extracted—has been a constant source of pain and uneasiness. For upwards of a fortnight the Duke was unable to leave his bed.

Tournament.—Preparations are making for the grand tournament at Eglintoun Castle, to be given by the Earl of Eglintoun in September. No pains or expense are being spared to render the affair the most imposing that has taken place in Scotland for many centuries.

The Duke of Lucca, who left Dover by the Queen's packet Widgeon, at the end of last week, presented the Captain with a very curious and ingeniously-contrived gold watch and chain, worth 100*l.*; to each of the officers he gave a gold piece of the value of 8*l.*, and 8 guineas to the crew;—besides the above, His Royal Highness paid 25*l.* for the hire of the vessel—rather dear payment for a two hours' voyage!

Cornet Bradford, of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), eldest son of Sir T. Bradford, Bart., is pronounced the affianced husband of the daughter of Mrs. Russell Ellice. The marriage is not to be solemnised until after Christmas, by which period the Cornet will have assumed the name of Atkinson, and succeeded to a large property.

The Earl of Listowel is to be the new Knight of St. Patrick, in the room of the late Earl of Caledon.

On Tuesday, as Major-General Peter Fyers, C.B., of the Royal Artillery, Woolwich Garrison, was driving his carriage towards the seat of Viscount Sidney, at Frogmal, on turning a corner rather sharply round, the wheels became locked, which immediately overturned the carriage. Mrs. Fyers was thrown a considerable distance, where she lay in an insensible state. The General received some very severe contusions. Mrs. Fyers was immediately conveyed home, and we are happy to state that she is not dangerously injured.

The Earl of Essex died on the 23d inst., at his house in Belgrave-square. His Lordship was in the 82d year of his age, and is succeeded in his titles by his nephew, Arthur Algernon Capel, the eldest son of his late brother, the Hon. J. T. Capel.

Before Lord Clarendon's departure from Madrid, the Queen made inquiries if his Lordship would accept of the order of the Golden Fleece, the highest in Spain, when there should be a vacancy. The answer was in the negative, British diplomatists being specially prohibited from accepting any foreign orders.

Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum.—The twelfth anniversary dinner of this institution took place on Thursday at the London Tavern. Mr. Robinson, the chairman of Lloyd's, presided, supported by about 150 gentlemen connected with the commerce and shipping interests of the city.

The English chartists have formed a resolution not to enlist in the Army or Navy.

COVENT-GARDEN.—A new dramatic romance, called Agnes Bernauer, the Maid of Augsburg; or the Secret Tribunal, was produced at this theatre on Saturday night, and has since been repeated with great applause. It is understood to be by the author of Joan of Arc, and though it has not—as what other subject could have?—all the deep interest of that first of theatrical romances, it is yet conceived in the same spirit, and executed, both as to dialogue and stage effect, with similar taste and skill. The genuine tone of the old romance pervades it. Every scene is effective; most of them grandly so. They form a succession of superb tableaux.

Anatomical Exhibition.—The fame of the Florentine Museum of anatomical figures and objects in wax, presenting fac-similes of nature, has already reached all parts of Europe; but until the exhibition of the two beautiful figures in Margaret-street, Cavendish-square, few persons could form any distinct idea of the astonishing correctness of those representations, and the admirable manner in which they are adapted to the acquirement of that knowledge of the human frame and its functions which ought to form part of the education of every one. No description can convey an adequate notion of these beautiful works; we therefore earnestly recommend a visit to them to all classes of our readers, promising them a degree of interest and information which they can obtain with equal facility by no other possible means.

The Diorama.—On Thursday the private view of the two pictures which form this exhibition was opened to a select number of persons. Both are painted by the Chevalier Bouton. The one is the interior of the church of Santa Croce at Florence, and its great merit is the effect of the light and shade, and the alterations to which the effect is subjected, from the church being seen from noonday till midnight. The other picture is the coronation of her present Majesty, and has considerable merit, as giving a general view of the ceremony. The Abbey is finely painted, and the general effect is good. This will be, no doubt, a popular picture.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THURSDAY, April 25.—Lord MELBOURNE stated, in answer to Lord Brougham, that a number of British officers had gone to Constantinople, with a view to engage in the service of the Porte, but without the sanction of Ministers. The policy of this Government, in observing a strict neutrality, remained unchanged, and they would do all in their power to prevent any breach between the Sultan and Mehemet Ali.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 22.—Mr. LABOUCHERE moved the second reading of the Jamaica Government Bill, proposing that it should be discussed in the next stage.—Sir R. PEEL did not object to the proposal, and was willing to delay discussion until after counsel had been heard, and even until the bill should be recommitted if necessity were shown, he would be ready to support the Government in this bill; but he thought further time should be given to the local legislature.—Counsel were then heard at the bar, and Mr. Burge, agent for Jamaica, addressed the House at great length against the bill. Mr. Burge's address occupied till 12 o'clock. Mr Sergeant Merewether appeared to follow up the argument against the bill; but the further hearing of counsel was deferred.

TUESDAY, April 23.—Lord ELIOT moved for "a Select Committee to inquire into the statements contained in the petition of Wm. Snow Harris, Esq., F.R.S., relating to the protection of ships from the effects of lightning."—Sir E. CODRINGTON seconded the motion.—Mr C. WOOD would not oppose the motion.—Mr WARBURTON was only surprised that it should be necessary, in the present state of science, to appoint a committee on the subject.—Sir R. PEEL could not support a committee of the House of Commons to inquire into a matter which belonged to the province of the executive government. He suggested the appointment of a commission by the Admiralty.—Mr. WOOD stated that the course suggested by the Right Hon. Baronet was that which he should prefer. It was one that had been already adopted with respect to Ryan's Patent.—Lord ELIOT acceded to the suggestion of the Right Hon. Baronet.—Motion withdrawn.

Manning the Navy.—Sir E. CODRINGTON submitted the following resolution to the House:—"That the system of reducing the crews of Her Majesty's ships, in time of peace, below the number required to make them efficient in time of war, is injurious to the best interests of the service; and that it is the opinion of this House that all H.M.'s ships, when actively employed or about to quit the British Channel, should in future have but one complement of men, whether in peace or war." This, he observed, was no party question but he found in recent discussions upon the state of the Navy that both sides attributed to their opponents the neglect of the Navy, and he must say that he believed what each had said of the other. He could assure them that the officers were discontented with the present system. The efficiency of the Navy did not depend upon ships or stores. He would rather take the worst ships, manned as they ought to be manned, than the best ships that were now built and manned according to the present system. He was quite sure that the latter would not be able to fight the former for one minute. More reform was wanted in the Navy than in any other part of the public service. There was no department in the public service which was not doubly rewarded in comparison with what the Navy had been. The great point was, the necessity of the ships being efficiently manned. Looking to the past war, they would find an illustration of the question by his observations. There were to be found the names of two Captains who were rewarded as distinguished officers—these had been engaged in actions in which they had been captured. He did not object to their being rewarded; for when they fought, the ships they commanded were only half-manned, while the American ships they fought against were more than doubly manned. Good seamen objected to enter into their fine ships, because they were inefficiently manned. They did this because they knew they could not compete with other ships, or gain any credit by them; that they would not perform their evolutions, and that they themselves would be overworked. There could be no better situation in life than that of a seaman on board of a man-of-war when it was properly manned, and proper indulgence was given to him. But what was the case at present? That the men preferred going in "a jackass frigate" to the finest ships that could be built. The manning of the Navy was controlled by a landsman, who, being a First Lord of the Admiralty, had controlled the Board and compelled them to make the Navy inefficient, by making the reduction, instead of being one-eighth, to be one fifth. On one occasion, such was the condition of the ship Super commanded, that the officers had to go aloft to show the men how to perform what was one of the simplest duties of seamen. As to the expense to be incurred in properly manning their ships, it was ridiculous to talk about it. This he was sure of, that ten ships properly manned would be far more advantageous and serviceable than twenty ships manned as they were at present. The Army was not governed in this way. The Army had too much influence. The Navy had not so much influence, if it had, it would not be governed in the way it was at present. He had conviction, and he was sure he might add that of the great majority of the Naval profession, was, that no ship should be sent upon a foreign service without being fully manned up to what was considered the war complement.—Lord INGESTRIE, in seconding the motion, said that about six weeks ago the question of the Navy was very much discussed, since then it had become what sailors called a lull (a laugh). He hoped the hon and gallant Admiral would blow up a breeze again about it (a laugh). He thought the statement of the hon. and gallant member satisfactorily proved, that our ships were sent to sea insufficiently manned. It had been said, on the other hand, that our ships were as well manned now as at any former period during peace. That might be true; but they all knew that at present our political affairs were not in a state of harmony. On a former occasion he had stated that the difference that had existed in the pay and allowance to the officers of the Navy, in contradistinction to those of other countries, had caused great discontent (hear). The officers were not the only persons dissatisfied. The men were also justly discontented. When the men found that a ship was undermanned, they found that the work was necessarily much more heavy, and that their natural rest was repeatedly broken by being called upon to perform duties which, if the ship were properly manned, would be performed by the watch on deck. But in addition to the ships being undermanned, the men found that, as compared with other countries, they were not adequately paid; so that, notwithstanding they got pensions, provisions, and justice, their natural love of change induced them to go into foreign service. It was impossible, whilst on the subject of the Navy, not to refer to the subject of impressment. Unless a perfectly adequate substitute were formed, he could never consent to relinquish the power of the Crown with regard to impressment. He conceived it was actually necessary that the power should remain; but at the same time he wished, and he was sure every person of common feeling wished, to see it mitigated as much as possible (hear). Those who took the trouble to think on the subject saw that our maritime Navy was very much reduced, in consequence of having steam boats all round the coast. It was perfectly well known by all Naval men that a sailor could not get that education which he ought to have on board a steam-boat, and his own opinion was, that it would be a good thing to introduce a system of apprenticeship for H.M.'s Navy, receiving boys as apprentices for seven years, with liberty to them at the end of five years if approved of, and they wished to volunteer, to be admitted into the Navy. He thought this hint was worthy of attention. They might in time by this means do away with the necessity of impressment, and render the service popular. Among seamen it was necessary that they should understand that they would be well paid and well treated, and that inviolable faith should be kept with them (hear). Mr. C. WOOD said, that after the strong opinion that was expressed on the last occasion when this matter was introduced, against the practice which had grown up of late, of introducing into discussions questions of Naval and Military Administration, he hoped that it would have prevented a repetition of that course. The hon. and gallant Admiral did not call upon the House to say that the present Government was wrong, he called upon the House of Commons to pronounce an opinion that Lord Howe, Lord St Vincent, Sir F. Trowbridge, and all the other distinguished officers who had sat at the Board of Admiralty, had all been wrong, both in practice and in their opinions, on this subject. No person could feel more how improper it would be in him to give an opinion upon a professional question of this nature, and he was far from presuming to do anything so indecorous, but when he stated what was the practice of officers not less distinguished than the hon and gallant Admiral, he hoped the House would not be altogether led away by the opinion of the hon. and gallant Admiral. The hon and gallant Admiral said, that almost all Captains in the Navy agreed in opinion with him. Now it was perfectly well known that a spirit animated the Captains of the Navy which made them anxious to have their ships in the highest order, and to have as many men as they could possibly get, but he must say, that the opinions of the many distinguished officers to whom he had referred, who had all commanded ships, and who knew what was right and necessary, who were not seeking to get men for themselves, and who knew from experience what was necessary to provide for the efficiency of the Navy, had very great weight with him. The hon. and gallant member had referred to the amount of the peace complement. Now he must say that the peace complement was at this moment higher than at any period since the war. The peace complement of a first rate was actually at this moment 220 men higher than was established in 1815. The complement of a second rate was 95 men higher than was established in 1816, that of a third rate was 40 men higher, and that of a fifth-rate—for the four-rates were a new class of vessels, with which it would not be fair to make comparison—that of the fifth-rates and he might instance the Macedonia, had a peace complement actually higher by one man than they had as their war complement. As he had mentioned on a former occasion, he thought it was exceedingly wise and in time of peace to maintain our establishments on a war footing. War did not break out so suddenly as to leave no time for preparation, and he understood from gallant officers on foreign stations that there never was any difficulty in filling up the complement of a ship in a foreign port, but that there was more frequently more difficulty in refusing than in seeking for hands. The hon and gallant officer had referred to the battle of Navarin, in which he had so ably distinguished himself, and which was certainly a contingency somewhat unlooked for, previous to its occurrence. But it was worthy of remark, that this victory was obtained by our fleet with a peace complement, and at the battle of Algiers, also, there were a considerable number of ships with peace complements. He sincerely believed that it was more advantageous to the service of the country, and a better protection to our flag, to employ a larger number of ships with reduced peace complements, than to crowd all the hands raised by Parliament into fewer ships. As a school for officers, it was of essential importance to have a certain number of ships in commission, because although we might obtain men from the merchant service, we could not get officers. The hon. and gallant gentleman and the noble Lord complained of the inferior quality of the crews at the present time. Now these complaints were groundless. In the time of the war the complements of the ships in the Navy consisted, on an average, of one-third able bodied seamen, one third ordinary seamen, and one-third landsmen. In 1814, 1830, and 1838, it appeared in the returns of a very large number of ships that there were 64 per cent of able-bodied seamen, 32 per cent of ordinary seamen, and 4 per cent of landsmen. He was aware that it was imputed to some officers, that they were often disposed to rate men as able bodied seamen who were not so, in order to induce them to join the ship. But he would instance the case of the Rodney, commanded by Captain Hyde Parker, whom he was quite sure every gentleman in the House would acquit of resorting to such an expedient, and in this ship it appeared, in 1835, that of the crew 81 per cent. were able seamen, and that there was not one landsman in her. In 1838, her crew consisted of 77 per cent. of able bodied seamen, and 23 per cent. of ordinary men [hear]. The hon. and gallant gentleman had complained of the difficulty of manning the larger ships in the service; but he would refer to the instance of the Vanguard, which was certainly not longer than usual in taking in her hands. But the longest time that had been taken by any ship in manning, since he had been in office, was a small 28 gun brig, which had actually been a longer time in shipping her hands than the largest vessel in the service. With regard to the want of smartness on the part of our ships' crews at present, which had been lamented, he was of opinion that it did not arise from the want of a proper number of hands on board, but from other circumstances, and he would beg, in corroboration of this opinion, to read a passage from a letter published in the form of a pamphlet, by that gallant officer, Captain Napier:—"In the latter years of the war, when the ships had full war complements, all the zeal and energy of the crew seemed to be at an end, and all that pride which had formerly been felt by the men, in finding themselves excel others in evolutions, seemed to have disappeared. The Mediterranean fleet, commanded by a highly distinguished officer, was, to look at, the tidyest, but in evolutions the most lubberly I ever beheld. I served on that station for three years, and the officers complained that it required something like tyranny on their parts to keep any order in the service." It would be seen from this that there was one very high authority for the fact, that a want of smartness could be shown by a full as well as by a reduced complement of hands, and therefore upon this ground he could see no argument for adopting the war complement in time of peace.—Capt. Pechell thought that there could not be a doubt that our ships were inefficiently manned, but at the same time he was quite ready to admit that the fault did not altogether rest with the present Board of Admiralty. It was not fair to refer back to the example of the latter end of the last century in this matter. In 1783 and 1784 circumstances were very different from those of the present day. There were then no French double-banked ships, and no Russian sail of the line to compete with, and it was notorious, that whilst, since the war, France, Russia, and America, had been making long and rapid strides in their Naval service, England had made little or no comparative progress. But when the Hon. Secretary referred to authorities of by gone time, why did he omit that of Lord Collingwood, who even in his day complained that "not only had he insufficient ships, but inefficient officers also—young gentlemen being appointed merely on account of their Parliamentary connexion and interest." As an instance of the practical inefficiency of our present service, he would refer to the case of the vessels stationed on the coast of Africa to look after pirates and slavers, and who, on undertaking a prize, were obliged to accompany it into port, because they had not hands enough to spare to man her. Mr. F. H. Fleetwood said that, as a Naval man, he felt bound to say that, so far as his experience extended, the present system tended to create disgust in the service, and to destroy that esprit de corps which was so essential to it, he very much feared that, in the event of a collision with a foreign power, our flag would be—not disgraced, for that it could never be under British officers, but humiliated. The American frigates, which gave us such a lesson in the last war, were aptly termed line of-battle ships in disguise. They carried 56 guns, but of a less calibre than our guns, and requiring fewer hands to work them, whereas, with a peace complement, one of our gun brigs of 16 guns had eight guns mute for want of hands to work them. The reverses which we suffered under George IV., arising as they did from the ignorance and imbecility of the Admiralty, should be a beacon to warn us against the neglect of the Navy. If this motion had been made in the time of William IV., his firm belief was that that monarch's advice would have been to accede to it, and though he hoped the reign of Her Majesty would be distinguished for the solid glories of peace and the lasting triumphs of literature, still it should be care of that House that if she did draw the sword of this country in a just quarrel, she should be enabled to vindicate the character of the nation over which she presided [cheers].—Sir C. Adam. To hear the complaint of the Hon. Gentleman who last addressed them, one would suppose that our Navy was in the lowest state of degradation. Sir R. Stopford, however, was of a very different opinion, for he considered the ships under his command as well qualified to bear the British flag in triumph as any of our men-of-war did in former times. Nobody could deny that foreign powers had lately taken the greatest pains to put their ships in the best order, but it should be borne in mind, that there were very few French men-of war afloat, and that all those sent to Mexico were experimental ships. It was true that the French and the Russians had introduced guns of a larger calibre than those which were formerly used. We were of course obliged to follow their example, and to have our guns on a larger scale; but we had the authority of officers in command for saying that our ships were more quickly and efficiently yarked than those which belonged to foreign nations. Much had been said of the necessity of keeping up a sufficient number of men. He admitted that in 1836 such was the demand for seamen, that many of our ships were obliged to remain in port for a considerable time though want of hands. But the men-of war which were sent on service were by no means ill manned. When British ships carried on commerce with all the ports of the world, he thought it was obvious we could get men from these ships if we wanted them. The gallant Admiral (Codrington) had asserted that there was a difference of opinion between the Noble Lord at the head of the Admiralty and the Naval members of the Board as to the proportion which our peace should bear to our war complement. To this statement he gave the most distinct denial.—Mr. Plumptre thought that, through false economy and false patriotism, our present establishment was too low for the honour and safety of the country.—Mr. Hume. They were extremely warlike in that house; but, though he had taken considerable pains to ascertain whether there was any ground for the apprehensions which were entertained on this subject by many honourable members, he could find, out of doors, no foundation for them. They were told, in a late debate, that there was not one ship too many afloat, and it was now proposed to man them according to the war complement. This he thought was a most unnecessary expense, particularly when it was reflected that there were afloat one-third more ships than they had any occasion for [hear] and a cry of "oh!"]. It was, in his opinion, most unfortunate that the Naval members in that house should be perpetually proclaiming that our Navy was unfit to compete with foreigners. He must oppose this motion.—Sir E. Codrington replied. The house then divided—For the resolution, 27; Against it, 90; Majority, 63.

On the motion of Mr. Hume, returns were ordered respecting the number of corporal punishments or imprisonments inflicted on the Royal Marines, classifying the offences, also with reference to the Artillery and to the Army. Also returns of sums received and paid by commissioners of the national debt on account of savings banks and friendly societies. Also returns of an account of Bank Annuities, Long Annuities, and other terminable annuities, and of deficiency bills; and other returns relating to the Exchequer-bills and the issues of the Bank of England.—The House was occupied during the remainder of the sitting with the further hearing of Counsel on the Jamaica Bill. Mr. Sergeant Merewether having concluded his argument, the Committee on the Bill was fixed for Monday next.

THURSDAY, April 25.—Sir F. Burdett's name was called by the Speaker, and the Hon. Baronet (who had a notice on the paper to call the attention of the House to the petition of Mr. Dillon) not being present, Mr. Rice said, that this was the third time that this notice had stood upon the paper in the Hon. Baronet's name without being brought on. The Government were charged very freely in the newspapers with having unfairly neglected an individual. He trusted, therefore, that the Hon. Baronet would bring this matter forward for discussion at an early period, when he would be quite prepared to meet him.

FRIDAY, April 26.—A long discussion took place on the subject of the Jamaica Bill, and which we have elsewhere noticed.

Knights Templars.—There is now at 18, rue Notre Dames des Victoires, an apartment which presents a strange appearance. The windows of several of the principal rooms are hermetically closed and internally covered with a rich white woollen hanging, upon which are large red crosses. In two of the rooms there are thrones ornamented with the same colours; all the floors are covered with rich carpets, and here and there are deposited sacerdotal ornaments, collars, swords, and golden spurs. From the number of chandeliers the place must be well lighted. It is in these immense rooms, thus ornamented, that for several days past the Grand Master and dignitaries of the Temple have received new Knights. Since the year 1314, when the last Grand Master, James Molai, was burnt alive, in pursuance of a decree of the Parliament, on the spot where now stands the statue of Henry IV., that religious and military order had been forgotten, condemned as it was by various decrees, royal ordinances, and papal briefs. It re-appeared in 1830, since which period the police, which is so rigorous towards other worshippers and new religions, has tolerated it, no doubt, because among its members is one of the personages most influential at court. The Count de ——, whom we allude to, is, indeed, said to be the present Grand Master of the Temple. The Grand Master who revived the order in 1830, was, we believe, an obscure member of the medical faculty, if not a coin-cutter. The late Emperor, Don Pedro, entered the Knighthood when he was at Paris, and, if the lists of its members were published, names stranger still would probably be found in it. The national appetite for crosses and ribands must be voracious indeed, when it cannot be satisfied with his Majesty's liberal admissions into the Legion of Honour; and a quack can restore an Order extinct five centuries ago.—Paris Paper.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

France.—The effective force of the garrison of Paris, according to the National, is shortly to be increased by a regiment of cavalry. This reinforcement is urgent. Its necessity has been shown, we are told, not by the official administration of the War Department, which is forbidden to interfere in any but matters connected with accounts and correspondence, but by the grand Military Council sitting at the chateau. "All the barracks of the capital, adds the National, are crammed with soldiers from top to bottom; the old ones, as well as those constructed since 1830, and the extensive fabrics lately purchased for the same purpose, are already inadequate for the accommodation of the garrison. It would be in consequence difficult to provide lodgings for this reinforcement of cavalry. But the Pavillon Marsan cavalierly solves difficulties of this kind, and decided that Paris should be blessed with a new barrack. "At this rate," continues the National, "Paris will shortly absorb the whole army of the interior. Every year the effective force of the troops charged with its safe keeping augments in an incredible proportion. There are at present within its walls 23 battalions of infantry, three entire regiments of cavalry, four batteries of artillery, two companies of veterans, and the horse and foot municipal guards; that is to say, at least 17,000 bayonets, 2,000 cavalry, and 24 pieces of artillery. Round Paris we find a similar accumulation of military force. There are eight batteries of artillery at Vincennes, two regiments of cavalry at Versailles, one at Rambouillet, one at St. Germain, one at Compiegne, one at Melun, one at Fontainebleau, one at Meaux, &c., and regiments of infantry at Versailles, Ruel, Courbevoie, St. Denis, Vincennes, &c. This is nearly incredible; in less than twelve hours 35,000 men can be assembled on the Boulevards and quays, and in 24 hours upwards of 50,000. And this army, more numerous than the one with which Napoleon twice conquered Italy, is not deemed sufficient, but must still be increased!"

Cape of Good Hope.—It is stated in the papers of 23d Feb., that the disease called the measles, which has been known to exist in this colony for 32 years, had made its appearance at Cape Town and its neighbourhood, and that it would very probably extend over the whole colony.

Whatever modes may in future be adopted for manning our Navy, in the room of impressment, none can be effective which does not make the Naval a desirable and coveted service. It needs no reasoning to prove that there can be no comparison between the merchant service and the Navy as to toil, comfort, and food, the balance of advantages being incalculably in favour of the Navy little, therefore, or no improvement can take place on those points. The first measure which, I think, ought to be adopted is to recur to the system, but altered and extended, of pensions for long services.

Admitting all the thoughtlessness that characterises the British sailor with regard to the every-day expenditure of his money, I have always found them very sensitive as to some snug moorings in their old age, which their improvidence in their hard-working days may not endanger. Let these be not niggardly supplied; increase the sum in the ratio of long service, and never, as has been done, unjustly and unwisely deprive them of their pensions when they are actually employed in the Navy. It is a reward for past services as well as a retaining fee. Considering how precarious a seaman's life is, there can be but few who will be able to claim the higher rate of pensions, but the conduct and exertions of thousands will be influenced by the stimulus. The hope held out, of ultimately attaining to the required length of service, is in many cases quite illusory. A man enters into the service at 25 or 30; very few ships will take him at 40, if they can procure younger men: there can be no temptation, therefore, under the present arrangement, to induce so numerous a class to volunteer as may be comprised from 30 to 40.

The registration of seamen is a measure which I do not think, from the nature and character of our maritime population, and their ever-shifting home, and with the United States to resort to if discontented, is likely to produce much practical good singly. If some regulation could obtain the sanction of the Legislature, to the effect that no young sailor could be a Mate in a merchant-vessel, or obtain other advantages connected with sea service, without having previously served a stated time in the Navy.—I see no more hardship or injustice in such a regulation, than in compelling service in the Militia, or in obliging persons to serve an apprenticeship five or seven years before they can practise a trade. Independently of the advantages already alluded to, which may be derived from such a plan, it would tend also to have, throughout our commercial marine, men competent to form warlike and disciplined crews, ready to enter into the Royal service, in cases of emergency, and who would then require no training. Every ship, on paying off, should send a list of the best-conducted men to the Admiralty; copies of this list to be publicly exposed in all the great commercial ports, and with it a table of the various employments, under the Government, which such sailor could be eligible to in the various dock-yards, and all other departments under Government, abroad or at home, with the respective rates of pay, &c., to which these men alone should be appointed in their turns, and only ought to be removed, on proofs of bad conduct, before a Court of Inquiry composed of the most respectable officers of his more immediate establishment. The effect would be electric upon our sailor population. A small deduction might be made from the wages of each person to aid government in forming comfortable asylums for their old age. Such a system, I think, would have a very important result in improving the tone of our seamen, and manning rapidly our Navy.

It will also be necessary to improve even upon the very important improvements which are every day taking place in the internal regulations and government of the Navy. I have been for many years of opinion that corporal punishment ought never to be inflicted but by a Court Martial, and only for crimes which disgrace the man. I include under that denomination of crimes, thieving, skulking from duty, filthiness of all kinds, &c.: no sympathy is felt by the men themselves for such offences, and it is only by corporal pain that such criminals can be corrected, and those having a similar tendency can be terrified from the commission of them. And although, upon the bold, thoughtless, yet gallant and right-minded, and active fellow, the breaches of Military discipline must certainly be visited with more or less severity, and of a character fully to answer the present purpose of example, yet it ought not to be such as to brand with infamy, for life, a noble fellow, who, but for a fault, and such, perhaps, only in Military point of view, may be worth his weight in gold. I feel satisfied also, that the power of inflicting the severer punishments ought not to be left to the arbitrary will of the Commander. Take for example, a young man, when first made a Lieutenant, at nineteen, or a Commander, at twenty-one, put into the command of a schooner, or a cutter, or sloop-of-war, and this is not an extreme case. What must be the feelings of the crew to see one of their finest comrades, for an offence, trifling perhaps but in the estimation of their young Commander,—without any trial or examination,—a man whose head may have grown grizzled in the service of his country, his arms seized up to the gratings, and and his back lashed with a cat-o'-nine-tails! It is one or two scenes of this description that have tended materially to render the Royal Navy unpopular. I think that the form and ceremony which attend a Court-Martial, or Court of Honour and Justice as it may be called, add incalculably to the good effects which attend the infliction of punishments so awarded, both from the solemnity of the trial, and the assent to the justice of the sentence, which, under such circumstances, will seldom be withheld. With these opinions, it may be easily seen that I am an advocate for inferior Courts-Martial, composed of the officers of the ship, acting under oath, where all crimes supposed to merit corporal punishment to the extent now permitted to be inflicted by Commanders, should be tried. the Captain or Commander to have the power of mitigating punishment. It is more than probable, that with such and similar improvements, the Navy would become a popular service, and then prison-like confinement on board of their ships will also become necessary. There are also various necessary modes easy of accomplishment, of certain application and of the highest importance, which ought also to be put into execution, as contributing effective aid, in replacing impressment, with a more congenial and just system. I allude to the suggestions often made by others, and which Captain Lihou, I think, has put in the most practicable form, but which I would push further still A number of boys should be received, and bound apprentice to the Navy, on board of hulks stationed at the different great commercial ports, and where, under the care and inspection of officers of the Navy, they should be clothed and instructed for one or two years in the duties of their profession, and then be distributed among the ships, or they may be even lent out to merchant vessels at some certain rate of remuneration, which would aid towards defraying the expenses of their education and support; and the time so employed, to be considered and allowed for to the apprentices, in the long-service pension claims. The last two or three years of the apprentices' servitude will repay amply, by their work in the Navy, the expenses that have been laid out upon them.

A most mischievous effect in detracting from the popularity of the Navy has arisen from the system pursued during the war, of sending scoundrels and vagabonds, and even convicted thieves, by "transporting" the criminals on board of a man-of-war. The actual amount of physical force thus added to the Navy was contemptibly small, but the baneful influence of the plague spot has not yet been washed away from the fair reputation of our Navy, and the mixture of the felon and the honest sailor is yet held in remembrance as a stigma upon a profession which ought ever to have been held up as the coveted resort of the honest, the gallant, and the brave lovers and defenders of their country.

I must again, in conclusion, repeat, that whatever subordinate measures may be resorted to for a quick and efficient manning of our Navy, none can be, in my humble opinion, effective, unless the national service is made a popular one. Liberal wages and liberal pensions for long services and good conduct on one hand, and punishment for crime, inflicted with unyielding and unflinching severity, on the other. The administration of justice in individual ships must be rendered independent of all caprice, and corporal punishments to be inflicted by the sanction of an oath. The Navy to be in future the channel through which men wishing to be made Masters and Mates of merchantmen, or to possess other lucrative situations connected with maritime service, whether under government or otherwise, must pass by a limited period of service, which, if it were unavoidably required to be extended for the public good, should be allowed as double service in the computation for pensions. Such are some of the means which it appears to me would render the Royal Navy a service popular and eagerly sought after by our maritime population.

That England ought at least to keep pace with the most enterprising nations in steam navigation, is a point too clear to need any argument. The system of Naval tactics is already much altered, and will be much more so by the use of steam-vessels in a future war. The fate of a battle, or of some most important enterprise, may frequently depend upon the use of steamers, and a common uneducated engineer has it thus in his power, if the Commanding Officer has no knowledge of steam machinery, to render abortive the best-laid plans, or the most brilliant prospects, by his want of zeal or courage. Some ten years ago I wrote to the Admiralty, observing upon the importance of steam-vessels in all future wars, and how vitally necessary it was that Naval officers in general should make themselves well acquainted with the power and mechanism of the steam engine, so that they should be entirely independent of the working engineer, or rather that they should have such a degree of practical acquaintance with the power and working of the machinery as to enable them easily to detect the falsehood or flimsiness of the excuse which a cowardly or ill-intentioned man might oppose to the execution of a service that he felt an unwillingness to perform or encounter.

The employment of powerful steamers in peace as packets is a matter of vital importance, the comparatively small additional expense (if any at all) would be the saving of millions in war.

In the communication to which I refer, I strongly urged upon the Admiralty the necessity of attention to this matter, and I offered myself to study the whole subject from the workshop to the engine in action and at sea. My only answer was the laconic one—"Your letter has been received!"

It is a matter of unceasing astonishment to me, considering the innumerable inventions and propositions of all kinds that are continually pouring upon the Admiralty, that some mode has not been adopted to secure many good from sharing the fate of the many bad. Now it is quite clear that three or four Lords of the Admiralty, harassed by the innumerable professional and official calls upon their time, fretted and out of humour from the abuse and discontent of disappointed inventors, and claimants of all kinds, cannot possibly find time, or all have the requisite knowledge, or be in the right temper to enter upon the examination of such varied subjects as are submitted for their inspection. Surely, from the number of known intelligent officers of all classes that are generally in London, a number may be selected to insure a standing committee of at least five or six, to whom all these propositions and inventions should be submitted in the first instance, and who would then call the attention of the Admiralty to such as merited that distinction. The time of the Admiralty would thus be saved, a meritorious inventor would not be discouraged and disheartened, and the country would not lose a useful invention.

It would be a very advantageous plan to permit Marines, after one or two years' drill as such, to enter as sailors; they would soon combine the characters.

I believe no one will deny that, equal-handed, we are more than a match for any flag that floats. Such being the case, I regret to see building so many intermediate classes of vessels, which cannot be matched against an enemy's vessel, for I believe no other first-rate maritime nation have them; they are too weak against large vessels nominally of their own classes. The finest class of two and three-deckers, the finest class of large frigates, of corvettes, and of schooners and cutters, would in the long run be more effective, and certainly more economical, and would effectually secure us against similar mortifications to those that we experienced in the last American war. The diameter of the masts is also a most important consideration. Many more shots would be required to knock down a mast of a large diameter than of a small one. I cannot at all agree in the system lately adopted in some of our new frigates of the largest tonnage having a few, although very heavy guns. No one can for a moment deny the immense advantage of heavy calibre; but why heavy frigates, that would have carried, according to the old tried and successful system, some 50 or 54 guns, 24-pounders, should now have but 36 32-pounders, I cannot see. Very little more space is required for working a 32 than a 24-pounder gun; and when we consider what must be obvious to every sailor, how often one or two guns, bearing in a good position, may, and have settled the fortune of the fight, I would rather take the chance of some slight inconvenience in working the guns, than be deprived of the undeniable advantage that two more guns of a side would give on account of that possible inconvenience.

Chelsea Pensioners.—At the general scrutiny of the Chelsea pensioners, which is at present going on in the Excise-office, a most extraordinary case of fraud was detected on Monday last. An old blind man appeared before the examinators, accompanied by his better half, when it appeared, from his inability to answer any question put to him, that he was not the real Simon Pure, but a counterfeit; and, on further examination, it came out that the person whom he represented had been dead for 18 years, and that his companion, by substituting in her blind husband's place another person subject to a like infirmity, had succeeded in imposing upon those who had been called upon to sign the certificates, and the different collectors who had paid the pensions for that time. On the examinators reprimanding the dame, and telling her that she was liable to be transported for the imposition, she responded in a strong Hibernian accent in the following terms, richly garnished with oaths:—"Sure," she said, "is not one blind man as good as another? It is I who deserve the pension, your honours—I have lost an eye in the service too. I have followed Lord Wellington through Spain and Portugal, and, barring a few gold watches and a trifle of doubloons from dead Frenchmen, who had no further need of them, devil a hap'orth have I got for my services; but you are not to be after tazing me about losing my pension and all that, for I will go to the Queen myself, and on my own legs too, so I will, and that's Irish pluck for you."—Glasgow Chronicle.

THE LATE WAR BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.—(Concluded from p. 253)

Although many projects of hostilities were entertained on both sides, during the remainder of the winter nothing was done of any importance till 30th March, when Wilkinson, at the head of 8000 men, entered Lake Champlain, and attacked, unsuccessfully, La Colle Mill, defended by Major Handcock, of 13th reg., and about 180 men. The General then retired, unmolested, to the United States, and closed his Military career.

The failure of the enemy's attempts against Lower Canada, and the course of events in Europe, began to give a new character to the war. Instead of having for its object the wresting of Canada from Great Britain, it became, on the part of the United States, a war more of a defensive nature, or, at least, their offensive measures were confined to a part of the Upper Province.

Although the British Naval force on Lake Ontario had ventured out of port during the preceding campaign, all the advantages of Naval superiority were on the side of the Americans.—Early in the season of 1814, Sir James L Yeo, who, with Naval officers, seamen, and shipwrights, had arrived from England early in 1813, laid claim to the command of the lake. Sir Gordon Drummond, with troops from Kingston, accordingly embarked in the fleet, and captured Oswego on 6th May. The American fleet, however, soon seemed to have regained its former superiority.

The American Army, now commanded by Gen. Brown, well known in Lower Canada before the war as a plain farmer, and dealer in lumber and potash, the same who commanded at Sacket's Harbour when attacked by Sir Geo. Prevost, assembled on the Niagara frontier. On 3d July this officer, at the head of between three and four thousand men, crossed over into Upper Canada, at Black Rock, and obtained possession of Fort Erie, by capitulation. On the 5th he was met by Gen. Riall, with about 2000 regulars, Militia, and Indians, at Chippewa. The British loss, in killed, wounded, and missing, was 515, that of the Americans, 822. On the 8th Gen. Riall fell back on Fort George, and on the 9th to the twenty-mile creek, where he received reinforcements. The enemy proceeded to invest Fort George, and committed indiscriminate plunder on the inhabitants of the frontier. The thriving village of St. David was entirely destroyed. On 23d General Brown fell back to Queenston, and General Riall advanced. On 25th, in the afternoon, the two Armies again met, near the Falls. General Riall, after sustaining a great loss, ordered a retreat. Gen. Drummond, who arrived at Fort George that morning, from York, with reinforcements, ordered an advance. The field was gallantly contested till midnight, when the enemy retired to his camp, and thence towards Fort Erie. The American force in this action was about 4000, that of the British, as stated by General Drummond, 2800. The total loss of the latter was 878—of the Americans, 854.

The British Army arrived before Fort Erie on the 3rd August, and invested the place. On the 11th, the American armed schooners Ohio and Somers, aiding in the defence of the place, were carried by 75 British seamen, under Capt. Dobbs, in boats, some of which had been carried on men's shoulders from Queenston. On the night of the 15th, the British assaulted the fort and were repulsed with heavy loss, the gallant and amiable Col. Scott, of the 103rd, and the intrepid Col. Drummond, of the 104th, being among the killed. The total loss was 905; that of the enemy only 84. After this unfortunate affair, Gen. Drummond converted the siege into a blockade.

On the 26th of June, transports arrived at Quebec from Bordeaux with the 6th and 82nd Regts. They were ordered to the Niagara frontier, where they arrived late in August, having had to march round Lake Ontario. The principal part of the remainder of the troops, which arrived from France, were assembled on the Richelieu River, where they were brigaded with the forces already in that quarter, under Gen. De Rottenburgh, for the purpose of carrying into effect instructions from England for offensive operations against the United States. Great exertions had for some time previous been making on both sides, to ensure a superiority on Lake Champlain. On the 3rd Sept. the British Army, amounting to 11,000 men, under Sir George Prevost, passed the frontier by Odelltown, and reached Plattsburg with trifling opposition on the 6th, where the American General Macomb occupied a fortified position with 1,500 regulars, and as many of the inhabitants, all trained to arms, as could be collected from both sides of the lake. From the 6th to the 11th, battering cannon were brought up from the rear, and batteries erected by the British. On the 11th, the British flotilla, from Isle aux Noix, came up and attacked the American Naval force in the bay: the land batteries opened at the same time, and the troops moved to the assault. When they had reached the heights on which the American works were situated, victory declared itself in favour of the American Naval force. Sir George Prevost countermanded the orders for the attack: the next morning the whole army retreated, and on the 13th re-entered the Province, with a total loss of 235 men, exclusive of deserters, which on this, as on every other occasion when the British soldiers entered the enemy's country, was considerable.

On the 17th Sept the American forces made a sortie from Fort Erie, which was repulsed, but with severe loss. On the 21st, the British broke up, and retired upon Chippewa, Fort George, and Burlington Heights. On the 17th Oct Sir James Yeo appeared on the lake, and brought reinforcements and supplies to General Drummond: the American squadron, under Chauncey, remaining in Sacket's Harbour. On the 5th Nov the Americans evacuated Fort Erie, the only military post which they held in the Canadas; a predatory party which proceeded from Detroit, and penetrated more than a hundred miles into Upper Canada, plundering the property and destroying the dwellings of the loyal inhabitants, having also retired on the approach of a British detachment from Burlington Heights.

Michillimacinack, which the American superiority on Lake Erie and Lake Huron enabled them to attack, had been gallantly defended by Col. M'Donall. The enemy burnt the establishment of the North West Company at Sault St. Marie The Colonel had, however, managed to send parties of Voyageurs and Indians to the head of the Mississippi, and captured the post of Prairie du Chien. British Naval officers and seamen, sent overland from York, had also captured, in open boats, two American armed schooners on Lake Huron, and preparations were making to secure the command of that lake, and even recover that of Lake Erie, with which the former communicates by Detroit.

On the 24th Dec 1814, a treaty of peace between the United States and Great Britain was signed at Ghent, on the 18th Feb. 1815, it was ratified and proclaimed at Washington, and on the 9th March made known at Quebec by Sir George Prevost.

Neither the close of the war nor the treaty was considered in Canada as befitting the character of Great Britain, a nation which had so recently acted the principal part in reducing the most formidable power that had been known in modern Europe. Men who had beaten the most celebrated troops in the world, in a series of battles from Gibraltar to Bordeaux, were restrained from acting against an inferior force at Plattsburgh, and defeated and destroyed in an attack on mud breast works at New Orleans, defended by peasantry and raw levies. The whole conduct of the war, on the part of Great Britain, was considered as extraordinary. When Canada was to be defended, there was a deficiency of the force in which England abounded, notwithstanding the zeal and loyalty of the people, the many instances of distinguished military, and the general gallantry and persevering endurance of the army. When Britain could dispose of a force to act offensively against the United States, a few thousand soldiers were sent to an open and populous country, where an European army could operate to advantage, and a large force was sent against distant frontiers, where a regular force could neither act nor subsist itself, where, in fact, it was inferior to an equal number of militiamen and sharp-shooters, of which description all the inhabitants of these frontiers consisted On the ocean, Great Britain exposed the bravest of her sons to be butchered, or apparently disgraced, from an unpardonable ignorance of the superiority of the enemy's ships over those which were sent to contend against them; and to complete the whole, the officer who had been chiefly instrumental in preserving two of her finest provinces, was disgraced, and only a scanty reparation offered to his memory after he had died broken-hearted.

The impartial and enlightened historian is, however, alone competent to pronounce on these topics. It is from his judgment that there is no appeal. Its validity has no limit but that of the duration of civilised society.

In order to protect the interest of the mariner, and encourage those who may enter the service of the marine, it would be wise and judicious to allow that body an exclusive representation in the senate; to urge those essential claims, and promote the interest which so great and useful a class of society must always possess, conformable to the rights of citizens, with power to make choice and select from not only the former service, but also the Royal Navy, such zealous and patriotic representatives as would ultimately identify the trading mariner with his country's rights, and interest in his behalf: these men* whose sincerity is already attested for their country's good, by the unremitting zeal which they invariably manifest in behalf of the honourable profession to which they belong. By citing the names of the beforementioned gallant members, let it not be construed as intimating an exclusion of the intelligent and wealthy portion of the Masters in the trading marine; but so, for however intimate an officer of the Royal Navy may be with his own profession, yet it is, nevertheless, impossible that he can be thoroughly informed on every minute point connected with the interest of the trading marine, without possessing practical experience; therefore a free opening ought to be allowed the former men, as it would be the very greatest stimulus to the educated portion of that service To this end the qualification should be limited in its present extent when applied to Masters of the trading marine who should, as an important point, prove that they had commanded a ship for at least two years in addition to the beforementioned rules, relative to examination. And that every principal trading seaport of Great Britain into which a certain number of vessels shall annually enter, with cargo intended to be unladen, shall return one member to Parliament, by the seamen then and there present, for their exclusive representation. We see every profession and trade in this enlightened period returning members of their individual calling to represent their rights in the Government of the nation. Why then should that service, of all others, whose merits are attested, whose deeds are recorded, and whose interests ought to be interwoven with those of the country at large, be prohibited from this enfranchise? The sooner we see the seamen of Great Britain peculiarly emancipated in this instance, the earlier will be felt its beneficial results.

* If such gallant and disinterested men as Sir Thomas Troubridge, Member for Sandwich, and Sir Edward Codrington, and several other officers of the Royal Navy, were to represent exclusively the interest of the trading marine, and become intimate with the internal arrangements of that service, it would soon feel the benefit, and abuses would ere long be eradicated from it.

The second and third privileges, or rather benefits, mentioned in the preceding chapters, which it was considered expedient to extend to the mariners in the progress of this work, so closely assimilate and in reality depend on the same measures, that in treating of one the other becomes elucidated, and admits alone of proposal, together with the enumeration of those means by which they collectively may be accomplished; therefore, to afford our mariner, in the first place, provision in the event of any casualties at sea, or sickness contracted in the performance of his arduous duties; and, secondly, to afford him an asylum in worn-out old age, can alone be achieved, and should only be contributed to, in honour, honesty, and justice, by his employers, by those who are enriched and protected by the mariners' daily exertions. In order to accomplish this, a small portion of the hundredfold profits of the shipowner, and those equally supported by maritime commerce, should (as a matter of course of the most vital importance to our nation) be demanded by Government, for the purpose of placing in operation measures so momentous; and if contributed on certain principles it would be imperceptible, as more than an equivalent of security would be afforded.

Thus ought the interference of our Legislature, be solicited to use its due prerogative and wisdom for the protection of our valuable trading marine, for the cherishing of our Naval nursery, and the security by these means of the dignity and welfare of our nation; and to enact such laws as will prescribe that graduated scale of taxation which will secure the above end, and not press unduly on the shipowner or underwriter but alone, in proportion to the wealth they may derive from and the interest they may hold in the trading marine. These funds, which will be hereafter described in probable amount, and those already enumerated should be placed at the disposal of government, for the purpose of establishing a national institution, and to afford the trading marine the advantages before adverted to. Such an establishment would at once do honour to the realm, and immortalise the illustrious name of that gracious Sovereign in whose happy and auspicious reign an institution so much calculated not only to increase the mariners of our country (but to secure irrevocably their ardent and meritorious services in the time of need) was formed. The Legislature may (in the fullness of wisdom and caution) ponder before levying an exclusive tax on so influential a portion of the community as the shipowners and underwriters. But time—even a short lapse—may prove the indispensable importance of such a step; and let the latter, in their turn, reflect, while objecting to such measures, on the vital services they have and will again require to receive from the Royal Navy—the protection it has afforded to the treasure, the convoys, without which their vessels might lay and rot—the immense expense caused by these circumstances—the helpless and more circumscribed state of commercial intercourse in the absence of such aid,—let the shipowner and the underwriter, who receive equal means and protection from the above sources, consider well and duly weigh in every portion the balance of this question and its inevitable result; if so, they must readily perceive the right which expects them to contribute to the support of the trading mariner, and the securing of his valuable services for the before-mentioned circumstances.—(To be Continued.)

THE MILITARY COVE in salore on the times.—"It must be understood that this is a very different person and character to the 'military man.' We respect the Army, and advance the dignity of its members, in holding those up to ridicule and reproach who bring discredit upon a distinguished and honourable profession by grossly counterfeiting the dress, manners, and appearance of those attached to it. Military coves are mere pretenders to the military character, a horrid libel upon soldier-like appearance and dress, and are prompted to these vile forgeries solely by vanity and idleness. Many a fellow struts Regent-st. with a flaming pair of moustaches, and villanously attempts to ape the military man, who would have made an excellent tailor, shoemaker, or undertaker, had not starving genius seized his soul and made him a lean, spindle-shanked imitative military abortion. Military coves abound in the vicinity of barracks, particularly cavalry barracks; their minds are besotted and their eyes dazzled in their boyhood by the martial appearance of the soldiers, the sound of fife and drum, and the gorgeous trappings of the trumpeters and band. Lisson Grove, St. John's Wood, and the Regent's Park, are localities where military coves abound. Some years ago a great gathering of them was to be met at the Yorkshire Stingo, and seeing that their finances seldom permitted them to get beyond pipes of tobacco and pots of beavy, it is not at all remarkable that the then landlord of that house, Mr. Lind, was not over anxious for their patronage. The wars in Portugal and Spain carried a vast number of military coves from the little village of London, some of them signalised themselves most gloriously by standing up to be shot down for tenpence a day, others, more fortunate, escaped, obtained promotion, and returned to their father-land covered with honours, scars, and rags. These same legion coves are all Lieutenants, Captains, Majors, and Colonels, according to their own account from this circumstance we may presume that all Subalterns and Privates were cut off in battle, and that the interference of a kind Providence 'prescribed the stuff.' There is another sort of military coves who generally take the rank of Captain, having obtained it by a year or two's servitude in the Queen's Bench, Fleet, or Whitecross-street prison. To our thinking it would be more in accordance with the regulations of the Army if these honours were alone attainable by the Marshalsea; custom, however, has ordered it otherwise. Another species of the military cove are those empty-headed donkeys who think to purchase rank and station by getting into the Militia or Yeomanry. These chaps are Captains to a man, and their assumption of the character, to the regular trooper, must indeed be amusing. Happily the noble and soldier-like bearing of our Army cannot be imitated successfully, artistes on the stage invariably fail in giving effect to assumptions of this kind how, then, can a linendraper, a tailor, a butterman, or a grocer, expect to achieve it? Faugh!"—Weekly Paper.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament—Being the Manufacturers', in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wished it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive bracked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Habiraishers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial, they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45*s.* each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13*s.* 9*d.*; Trafalgar, ditto, 71*s.* 6*d.*; ditto mahogany sofas, 90*s.*; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21*s.*; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60*s.*; tent ditto, 20*s* furniture for ditto, 20*s.*; japanned chairs, 2*s.* each; cane seat ditto, 3*s.* 6*d.*; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6*s* each; japanned drawers, 34*s.* each, mahogany ditto, 44*s.*; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25*s.* each; ditto couches, 6*l.* 10*s.*; ditto loo-tables, from 4*l.* 10*s.*; mahogany ditto, 70*s.*, fancy chairs, 7*s.* 6*d.* each. The great superiority of J. Delcroix and Co.'s Perfumery been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfumer superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance or respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Duffield, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3*s.* 6*d.*, 7*s.*, and 15*s* each.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove — "Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent. I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable ironmanufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years: hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear sir, yours truly, T. LOVEHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1*s.* 1½*d.*, 1*s.* 9*d.*, and 4*s.* 6*d.* each, and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

WHITE'S ESSENCE of EGLANTINE.—A highly fashionable and peculiar HANDKERCHIEF SCENT, possessing extracts from the most fragrant flowers, and forming a perfume at once sweet, agreeable, and refreshing. In Bottles at 2*s.* 6*d* and 4*s.* 6*d.* each.

Also, WHITE'S AROMATIC PUNGENT ESSENCE, so exceedingly useful in Head-aches, Fainting, &c., and particularly reviving in crowded rooms. In neat stoppered bottles at 2*s* 6*d.* each.

The above prepared only by Thomas White, Chemist, 24, Cornhill, London, and sold by all respectable Chemists and Perfumers in the Kingdom.

DR BAGOT'S SPECIFIC SYRUP.—This certain, safe, and pleasant remedy, which affords relief in a few hours, and a cure in a few days, in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Irritation, Pain in the Loins, Mercurialism, and General Debility, is warranted not to contain any copaiba, mercury, nor opium; requires no constraint nor change of diet, and may be taken without the least fear of catching cold. Prepared only by George Whiskin, No. 7, Oxford-street, London, in Bottles, 8*s.* and 21*s.*, stamp included. Agent for the City, R. Johnston, No. 98, Cornhill.

FEVER MEDICINE, NOW FIRST INTRODUCED INTO EUROPE

This Medicine has been proved by experience in many thousand cases, to be far more efficacious than any Febrifuge hitherto known, and totally free from the unpleasant effects which sometimes follow the use of Bark and Quinine.

It is purely vegetable; the product of Plants discovered by Dr. Warburg in Central America, under the same parallel in which Peruvian Bark is found. It has been extensively used in the West Indies, British Guiana, America, and the East Indies, and has never been known to fail, even in the most malignant Fevers. Its operation is uniform, its effects immediate and certain; and it may be safely administered to infants at the breast.

It is exhibited in the form of a Tincture. Two doses, of two drachms and a half each, being sufficient in any case. The effects of the Medicine are slightly narcotic and highly sudorific; pains in the head, back, and limbs, immediately relieved, and Fever is eradicated in from three to twenty-four hours.

When the universal prevalence of Fevers, and their contingent as well as direct effects are considered, it will be deemed unnecessary to enlarge upon the value of any addition to the resources of the Medical Art, by which the consequences that now ensue may be averted. But even the value of the Medicine now introduced to the Profession and the public may be enhanced by circumstances, as in the case of Travellers, Naval and Military Officers, and Residents in the Colonies. From its portability, it is available at all times, and in all climates, and when other Medical aid cannot be obtained, it may be safely taken under any circumstances, without preparation and with but slight restraint, and with a certainty of immediate relief. Those, therefore, who either on business or pleasure, visit the South of France, Italy, Greece, Turkey, Egypt, and the neighbouring countries, and above all, Residents in the East and West Indies, the Mediterranean, African and South American Colonies, will, it is presumed, avail themselves of a remedy, the perfect safety and extraordinary efficacy of which have been proved in many thousand instances, and in various parts of the world.

DR. WARBURG'S FEVER DROPS are prepared only under his own immediate directions, and issued exclusively by Messrs. At a Meeting, held in Carlton Chambers, No. 8, Regent street, on Tuesday, the 23rd April, 1839,

A resolution, establishing a private Fund for the benefit of the Widows and Orphans of all Officers in Her Majesty's Army and Navy, was passed unanimously, and several other resolutions relating thereto.

The meeting was then adjourned until Wednesday the 1st day of May next, at One o'Clock, for the purpose of electing Directors, &c. &c. The presence of all Officers, advocating the principle, is urgently requested, and it is hoped that every Officer, who may be in town, will make it a point of attending.

Carlton Chambers, 8, Regent street, 24th April, 1839.

BARGAIN-HUNTING.—This mania, more perhaps than most other causes, has been a prolific source of the hollow and factitious system of chance business at the present day so much in vogue. An entirely different line of proceeding—one in which especial regard is had to permanency of connexion—is the basis on which JOHN COWIE lays claim to the notice of the considerate portion of the Public. The whole of his splendid and varied Stock in SILVER, SHEFFIELD PLATE, and JEWELLERY, being manufactured with the express view of doing real service to the purchaser by their sterling qualities, he reckons equally on the estimation of the economist and man of taste.—John Cowie's establishment for the sale of Silver, Sheffield Plate, and Jewellery, 11, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, opposite Bull's Library.

BARRACKS IN THE WEST INDIES.—In 1836, the Royal York Rangers occupied Fort Matilda, and a barrack on the Camp de Mars, near the Fort. Here they became attacked with frightful sickness, which could not be ascribed to the climate, as other Europeans in the island were not unhealthy; but obviously to their position on the bank of a deep ravine, to a preposterous form of barrack construction, to the crowding of men as within the narrow precincts of a work which was not properly ventilated, nor secured from the impulses of gusts of comparatively cold winds which struck injuriously on the heated bodies of the soldiers, while at other times the closeness of the rooms was almost insupportable. The extent of the sickness was so alarming, and so destructive, that the Governor of the Island, Admiral Sir A. Cochrane, a man of an active mind and benevolent character, ordered the erection of new barracks, in another situation, for their reception. Instead of one large building, a series of small barracks, as for half companies, was erected, by which disposition the soldiers had comparative quiet, and the air was not heated or contaminated by such a great mass of persons under the same roof, and the site of the buildings being on a declivity had no receptacle for stagnant water near to them.

These barracks were only of a flimsy structure, being built in a hurry under pressing exigence, but they were on good principles, and flimsy as they were, they were of more value than if they had been built of marble in a bad style of architecture; for, through their instrumentality, the York Rangers may be said to have been saved from annihilation. During 11 months, which that corps inhabited Fort Matilda, 416 men died of sickness; the proportion of deaths to recovery among those who were entered in the hospital books, as one to four one sixth. During the first 11 months after occupation of the new barracks, the number of deaths sunk to 92; and the proportion of death to recovery among those who entered the hospital was one to eleven.

Nothing can be more important than this fact, (taken from official returns,) as it proves distinctly that, if the saving of military life be desirable, the end is to be attained by attending to the properties of locality, and the mode of constructing quarters for the accommodation of the troops. The York Rangers were under the same military discipline and the same medical superintendence in both the periods referred to.

After this, the Com. of the Forces got another well-planned barrack built on the same elevation in an eligible site, and the work was on the whole well executed as one done by contract The 25th Regt. first occupied it, and Lt.-Col Light, the officer commanding, by the occasional labour of the men, rendered it one of the most comfortable and desirable quarters in the West Indies; and the effect on the health, morals, and happiness of the men was equally conspicuous, as in the new barracks of the Rangers. The bad effect of exposure to chilling winds in Gaudaloupe is strongly exemplified at the Government House, which stands in an embrence near the town, so notoriously unhealthy, that no white person now ventures to dwell in it, though it is in other respects a desirable quarter.—Madras U. S. Gazette.

A detachment of recruits for Her Majesty's regiments in Bengal, embarked yesterday (Friday) at Gravesend, on board the Anna Maria, under the command of Capt. Reynolds, 49th Regt.

A detachment of the 2d, 17th, and 40th Regts., under Capt. Blackburne, 17th, arrived in Feb. last at Bombay after a most disastrous voyage, having been twice dismasted, and having been seven months from England. The Medea is a wretched sailer, and has twice made voyages of extraordinary length. It should be alike the object of Government and of ship-owners that "tubs" should not be used for the conveyance of troops.

Dublin Garrison during the summer will consist, in addition to the Artillery and Dragoons, of the 10th, 19th, 22d, and 97th regts. The two former will be stationed in the Royal, and the latter in Richmond Barracks.

Rumours are again current that a portion of the Militia will be called out, and that the late visits of the Military Authorities to the Home Office are connected with this measure.

Government have agreed to relinquish all claims, amounting to more than 350,000*l.*, against Colonels of regiments, on account of the failures of Agents in Ireland many years since.

Major Warburton and Col. McGregor, of the Irish constabulary, have been examined before Lord Roden's Irish committee of the House of Lords.

PORTSMOUTH, May 3.—(From our own Correspondent).—The Admiralty having permitted two merchant vessels, bound to the West Indies, the Protector and Henry Davidson, to be taken into a Queen's dock, to ascertain what damage they had met with by getting on shore near Shanklin, some of the shipwrights and caulkers of the yard were at work on Sunday on the Protector, and having put her to rights, were next day on the Henry Davidson. She did not require much repair, and consequently the dock became vacant for the Britannia on Tuesday morning. Her defects have been reported to be of little importance; so that she will again resume her station in the harbour as flag-ship. Curlew went to Spithead on Tuesday, and is there waiting orders. Hydra is directed to be ready to attend on the Hastings, now hourly expected with the Queen Dowager from Lisbon. The Cadmus and Lightning steamers have been here from Sheerness, and both proceeded to Plymouth: the latter went yesterday afternoon with Adm. Sir Graham Moore and some of his suite, it being intended that he shall hoist his flag at daylight to-morrow. If Admiral Lord A. Beauclerk is ready to return by the Lightning, she is to bring his Lordship here; but she is not to delay a moment in coming back, being directed also to look out for, and attend on the Hastings. Admiral Fleeming visited the Excellent on Thursday officially, and was highly pleased with the gunnery drill, and the efficient state of the ship and crew. Benbow and Childers are fitting in the basin. Blonde and Clio are lying there ready for commission; but no one has yet been appointed. Orders have been sent to prepare the masts and spars for the Rattlesnake and Sapphire, the necessary dimensions having been given: the rigging and sails will also be got on with. Vigilant freight-brig is alongside the Dock-yard jetty, taking in the Melville's guns, which she is to take out to the Cape of Good Hope. All painting and Dock-yard work is to be finished on board the Queen by to-morrow week, thus leaving no doubt but she will be launched on Wednesday, the 5th. Ships in Port—Curlew at Spithead; Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Benbow, Royal George yt., Hydra, Childers. Messenger in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, May 3.—(From our own Correspondent.)—April 27th—Arrived Powerful, 84, Capt. C. Napier, and Waterwitch, 10, Lieut.-Com. Henry J. Matson, from Spithead; the latter sailed again on 29th, for Cape of Good Hope and Coast of Africa. Impregnable, 104, was taken into dock, had her copper cleaned and repaired, and was undocked on 30th; she will be masted on 3d May, and commissioned the day following for the flag of Admiral Sir Graham Moore, instead of the Royal Adelaide. A paragraph has appeared in one of our local papers, which stated that the Impregnable was quite rotten, and that if she was sent to sea she would prove a coffin to those who embarked in her; we have made the most diligent inquiry respecting the state of the said ship, and are happy to say that the paragraph is a wilful and disgraceful falsehood, as she is in an excellent state, and fit for any service that she may be wanted for. Such assertions greatly tend to prevent men from entering, and cannot be too severely censured. 28th—Arrived Devon, lighter, with unserviceable stores from Lord J. Hay's squadron on the coast of Spain; every thing remained quiet when she left on the 23d; also arrived Swale, tender to the Astrea, from Falmouth, with old stores, and the Lively, lighter, from Holyhead and Pembroke with stores; they both sailed again on the 2d inst., the former on her return to Plymouth with stores for the packet service, and the latter for Portsmouth, with stores for the dock-yard. 29th—Admiral Lord A. Beauclerk inspected the different departments in the Dock-yard this day, previous to his relinquishing the command at this port. May 2d—This morning, about one o'clock, a fire was discovered on board the Parmelia, a fine barque, repairing and fitting for the timber trade, at Franks's Quarry, ship-wright's yard on Mount Edgecumbe side of the water; on the alarm being given, immediate assistance was rendered by the boats belonging to the Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Belleisle, Druid, and Racehorse, with the floating engines; one of the large engines belonging to the Dock-yard was also put into a boat and conveyed to the place where the ship was burning, attended by the police belonging to the Dock-yard; about four o'clock the fire was got under; the foremast of the vessel was burnt through and fell over her bows, and the bowsprit also being burnt through fell on the beach; the mainmast was cut away, and in falling carried away the mizen topmast and head of the mizen mast; the inside of the vessel is nearly destroyed, and she is otherways greatly damaged. Much praise cannot be given for the prompt assistance and great exertions used by the officers and seamen of the different men-of-war, as well as the police. We are happy to say that only one serious accident occurred, that of a youth, a man, who had his thigh fractured. 3d—Royal Adelaide, 104 (flag-ship), will be paid off this day, and the flag of Lord Amelius Beauclerk will be hauled down at sunset; the Impregnable, 104, will be commissioned to-morrow; and Admiral Sir Graham Moore's flag (blue at the main, will be hoisted on board her at sunrise. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Belleisle, Druid, Racehorse. In the Sound—Powerful.

MILFORD HAVEN, 1st May.—(From our own Correspondent.)—An entry of blacksmiths has taken place up at the dock-yard this week, four in number, to keep pace with the increase which has taken place in the other departments. Every exertion is being made there to complete the Cyclops steamer, which will be the largest man-of-war steamer. Mr. P. O'Maley, Second Mate of the Skylark revenue cutter on this station, has been promoted to the rank of Chief Mate, and appointed to the Wickham, now stationed at Carrickfergus. The Windsor Castle is rapidly taking to pieces. The materials are principally to be used in the formation of the new ships, roofs, &c.

DEPTFORD.—Sailed Vigilant for Portsmouth and Cape of Good Hope, and Eleanor for Valparaiso. The Admiral Mopsom is fitting for Jamaica, the Sackville for the Bahamas, the Neptune for Australia. The Alonzo and Stakesby transports discharging stores, also the Cornwall for Australia.

MALTA, 16th April.—The squadron is getting ready for sea. The Admiral's ship, the Princess Charlotte, is undergoing repairs, which will not be finished for a fortnight. It is believed that Admiral Stopford will wait the arrival of Prince George of Cambridge, who is expected shortly from Gibraltar. The squadron is to be composed of eight ships of the line, viz., Princess Charlotte, Rodney, Asia, Vanguard, Minden, Bellerophon, Talavera, and Pembroke, which last is in the Levant; the frigates Curyafort, Talbot, and Castor, and some brigs. The Rhadamanthus steamer, which went to England to be repaired, is come back. The Barham has not been replaced, and, consequently, the English have no large frigate in these seas.

Capt. Evans, R.M., recently from Ascension, has joined the Portsmouth division; Mr. Brownrigg, Surgeon, and F. S. Eaton, Assist.-Surgeon, also came home in the Stakesby from Ascension.

CAPTAIN HEWETT AND THE "DISPATCH."—In the Bail Court on Tuesday, a rule was granted to show cause why a criminal information should not be granted against James Harmer and Robert Bell, the printers and publishers of the Weekly Dispatch, for a libel on Capt. Hewett. The affidavit of Capt. H. stated that he had been for seven years Captain in the Royal Navy; that during the past year he had been commanding the Fairy corvette, with a complement of 27 men; that, according to the Articles of War and his duty as Captain, it was incumbent on him to preserve order in his vessel; that in the course of the past year Philip Jones became a seaman on board the Fairy, and that he had been several times guilty of disorderly and turbulent conduct; that on 24th Dec. the vessel being at Woolwich, Philip Jones got leave to spend Christmas-day on shore, provided he would return on the following day; that he did not return till the 26th; that his leave to go on shore was then stopped; that on the 4th Jan., being sent to convey some men to shore, who had a few days' furlough, he went on shore against orders, and remained there till the following day; that on 5th Jan. the deponent, who had been on shore, on coming on board perceived a disturbance there; that on inquiry he found that a quarrel had arisen between Philip Jones and another seaman, for which Mr. Stevens, the next officer in command, had reprimanded Jones, who thereon insulted him; that Mr. Stevens then ordered Jones into custody; that Jones then armed himself with a catch-hook, and struck the men who attempted to take him; that the Captain, while Jones was still struggling, desired him to submit, and that he would hear whatever he had to say; that Jones continued to struggle violently, and abused the Captain, and that he was with great difficulty at length placed in confinement; that on the following day the Captain summoned a Court according to the Articles of War, and placed Jones on his trial; that Jones made no defence, and was sentenced to receive 30 lashes, and that the warrant for the infliction of that punishment was signed by the Captain; that on 8th Jan. a portion of the punishment was inflicted, but that when 24 lashes had been inflicted, the Captain desired the remainder to be remitted, which was accordingly done; that the man immediately returned to his duty, not having been at all disabled by the punishment which had been inflicted; and that on 13th Jan. the article appeared in the Dispatch newspaper of which Capt. H. complained. It was headed —"Despotism, Naval and Military.—Brutal Flogging in the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich," and stated that the seaman had suffered 216 lashes; that the shores rang with his cries; that vessels going up and down the river were stopped by those on board on account of the cries; and that the man had been so cruelly tortured that he was obliged to be conveyed to the hospital, and was not able to return to his duty for many days after. The affidavit directly negatived all these statements.

[illegible], second son of the Earl of Leicester, has entered the Navy as a volunteer on board the Britannia, the flag-ship of the new Port-Admiral at Portsmouth, Adm. the Hon. C. E. Fleeming.

The amount of old Naval stores sold in the Naval Establishments, at home and abroad, in the year 1837, was 35,538*l*.

The freedom of the Corporation of Drogheda has been recently voted in a gold box to Mr. Thompson, Commanding the Coast Guard at Clogher, for his brave and humane conduct in saving the lives of the crew of the Minerva, wrecked on the North Ball, and ten guineas to the brave men that assisted Mr. Thompson in this meritorious service.

A vacancy has occurred in the out-pension of Greenwich Hospital by the recent demise of Com. W. Love, R.N., 1807.

We are requested to contradict a paragraph in the John Bull of Sunday, stating that "Lord Clarence Paget had been appointed to the command of the Pearl, as a beaten ministerial candidate for Southampton"—the fact being, that when called upon by the electors of Southampton to stand for that place, Lord Clarence was actually in command of the Pearl on the Lisbon station, as he had been for months previously.

Pantaloon, 10, Lt. Tryon, which sailed for Quebec with volunteers from the two flag-ships at Portsmouth, for service on the Lakes; she also took out Mr. Giles, Purser, Mr. J. Pike, Boatswain, and Mr. T. Brooke, Carpenter, to join the Niagara; and Lieut. H. J. Harvey, son of Sir John Harvey, for N. Brunswick.

The Benbow, 74, has selected upwards of 50 men and boys from the general service men on board the Britannia, as part of her complement. The band of the Britannia, usually denominated Admiral Sir Philip Durham's Private Band, has not been re-entered; it being the intention to fill their places with seventeen able seamen.

Capt. Searle, and a detachment of Royal Marines, to constitute the complement for the Benbow, have embarked on board that ship.—Sec. Lieutenants J. W. Wearing, of the Excellent, and G. G. Alexander of the Benbow, have been permitted to exchange ships.

Capt. Crawfurd has resigned the command of Racehorse, the gallant officer being, as we understand, about to enter the bonds of Hymen.

The launch of the Queen, 110, at Portsmouth, will certainly take place on the 15th inst.

It is expected, certainly application has been made, that H.M.S. Britannia may, in future, have the full complement of Lieutenants, agreeable to her rating, i. e. a first. We hear she is to have seven Lieutenants, and a full allowance of Mates and Midshipmen.

East India Intelligence.

With the sanction of Her Majesty's Government, the East India Company have established a recruiting station in Edinburgh, and Captain H. V. Glegg, late of the Bengal Army, has been appointed to it. Capt. Glegg is an old Adjutant and a very intelligent officer. He formerly belonged to the 32d Beng. N.I. His appointment must be most gratifying to his numerous friends, and reflects credit on the discrimination of the Court.

On Monday last the bulk of the overland mail from India was received in town. By it no further intelligence has been added to our previous stock, but merely the intervening papers, by which we are able to furnish the details of the important subjects which have already been noticed.

The 50th Madras N.I., stationed at Vizianagram, has received a communication from the Adjutant-General's Office, directing this corps to hold itself in readiness for foreign service.—Madras U. S. Gazette, Feb. 15.

Cholera has made its appearance in Bombay. Three fatal instances have been mentioned to us, but as it is in the outskirts of the island, the Government will doubtless adopt the salutary measures taken last year for its eradication.—Bombay Times, 18th Feb.

The Queen has been pleased to grant a full pardon to Mr. Oliver Day Stokes, late a Lieutenant in the 5th Madras N.I., who was tried by a Court-Martial and convicted for manslaughter, and sentenced to imprisonment for two years and six months.

Burmah.—A letter which reached Madras via Calcutta, from an attaché of our Resident at the Court of Thirrawaddee, states, that the whole of the English party now at Umeerapoora are in great alarm, and their situation most painfully distressing. Before the embassy arrived at the capital, Colonel Benson was treated with marked respect at all the principal towns and villages where the Resident halted; he was welcomed with music and dancing by command of the King, but when the mission was once safely within the barriers of the capital, all intercourse with the people was prohibited, and Col. Benson and his party were strictly watched. They are now labouring under the painful belief that Thirrawaddee has determined upon their destruction, should our Government, as he anticipates, have recourse to a declaration of war. The King has 18,000 fighting men already equipped to take the field, and the letter adds that he could collect an army of 200,000 soldiers without any difficulty. He is at present purchasing fire-arms where-ever they are procurable, and his agents are very active in preparing everything for the approaching struggle. Our relations with the Court of Ava are such that we have now no alternative but war, and hostilities will doubtless commence the moment that the termination of the rainy season will allow of the movement of troops—but that cannot be for nine months to come.—Madras U. S. Gazette, Feb. 5.

It is reported that intelligence reached Madras on 2d Feb., of war being declared against the Burmese, and that orders were immediately despatched to detain the King's Own at a short distance from Madras.

The Calcutta Chamber of Commerce has taken up the comprehensive steam question in good earnest; it is intended, without any further reference to the public or government at home, to build a first-class steamer in Calcutta, and order the machinery from England.

We hear from Sholapoor that the 7th L. C. arrived there on 30th ult. on route to Bellary, having experienced no sickness on the road, and with the horses in the finest condition. At a village called Patrood, just as the horses had been picketed after a march of fifteen miles, an express reached the camp from the Magistrate of the Sholapoor district, urging the officer commanding the regiment to move on Barsee, an opulent town on the Company's frontier, with the greatest possible despatch, large bodies of men having assembled in the Nizam's territory next adjoining. A squadron of the 3d L. C., and two companies of the 52d N.I., under Major Grant, had reached Barsee a few hours before from Sholapoor, so that the services of the 7th L.C. were not required.—Madras Spectator, Feb. 13.

Lieutenant Kittoe, who was some time back brought to Court-Martial and discharged the service, for litigious conduct generally towards his Commanding Officer, has been restored, by order of the Court of Directors, on the recommendation of the Commander-in-Chief, to his rank and standing in the Bengal Army, in which resolution the Board of Commissioners for the affairs of India also fully concurred.

Ferozepore.—Instructions have been issued to the Superintendent of Buildings N.W. Provinces, to erect temporary lines at Ferozepore for two regiments of Native Infantry, one company of Artillery, and a wing of Local Horse.

The Madras 20th N.I. arrived at Adjunta on the 12th Feb; the right wing proceeds to Dhoolia, to relieve the right wing of the 3d N.I., now there, which will proceed, on being relieved, to Mhow. The left wing of the 20th M.N.I. proceeds from Adjunta to Asseerghur, and was expected to arrive there on the 20th inst., to relieve the left wing and head-quarters of the 3d N.I.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

At a General Court-Martial, held at Camp Tatta, in Scinde, 7th Jan., 1840, Assist.-Surg. Andrew Robertson Morton, of the Bombay Medical Establishment, was tried on the following charges.

Charge.—For disgraceful conduct, unbecoming his character as an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and Military discipline, in having appeared at the breakfast mess tent, 1st N.I., on the morning of the 10th Dec., 1838, in a shameful state of intoxication. Additional Charge.—For having, on his arrival in camp at Sumrocote on the evening of the 27th Dec., 1838, been in a disgraceful state of intoxication.

Upon which charges the Court found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to lose rank by being placed eight steps lower in the list of Assist.-Surgeons, so that his future standing in the service shall be immediately below Assist.-Surg. W. Purnell.

Finding approved, but the sentence disapproved.

John Keane, Lieut.-Gen.-Com.-in-Chief.

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief.—In publishing the crime, the finding, and sentence on the trial of Assist.-Surg. Morton above, the Com.-in-Chief has felt himself in duty bound to attach his disapproval to the sentence, as being totally inadequate to the very serious offence of which the prisoner has been found guilty to the full extent. 2. Assist.-Surg. Morton has been proved to have come into the mess-tent of the 1st, N.I., at the early hour when the officers were at breakfast, in a disgraceful state of intoxication, which the Commanding Officer and other officers of the regiment depose to, as having incapacitated him for the performance of any duty.—3. Assist.-Surg. Morton is also found guilty on the evidence of the General Officer commanding the Brigade, and of other officers, of having repeated the offence the second day's march of the troops from the encampment near Vikkur, and to have arrived at halting-ground in a similar shameful state of inebriety.—4. The vice of drunkenness being one which is disgraceful to any rank in life, it is more especially and more likely to be attended with serious results and ev[il] a medical officer, who must always be considered to [be on] duty, his professional assistance being likely to be [required] all times and hours, and, above all, on active service in [the] as in the present case.—5. The Commander-in-Chief [would] to remind officers of the importance of the duty which devol[ves] upon them when placed on Courts-Martial, and of what the Articles of War enjoin.—6. Assist.-Surg. Morton has been found guilty of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and yet the majority upon the Court-Martial has pronounced that he is a fit person to continue in the service, and to return to the society of his brother officers.—7. The Commander-in-Chief will appeal to the good sense of the officers of the army whether such a decision by a Court-Martial has a tendency to uphold and maintain discipline and a correct feeling [among] 18[39].

Assist.-Surg. Morton is released from arrest and will return to his duty.

At a General Court Martial held at Secunderabad, 28th Dec. 1838, Lieut. G. B. Stevens, 21st N.I., was tried on the following charge.—For scandalous and infamous conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentlemen, in having, at Secunderabad, 4th Feb. 1838, purchased a bandy and pony from Captain Chas. Sinclair, 24th N.I., for the sum of 500 Hyderabad rupees, for the amount of which he, the said Lieut. Stevens, accepted an order on himself, payable six months after date, which order, though repeatedly presented to him for payment, remains up to this date unadjusted, he, Lieut. Stevens, having, in the mean time, disposed of the aforesaid bandy and pony for a draft which he discounted, and the proceeds of which he has applied to his own purposes.

Finding.—That the prisoner is guilty of the facts enumerated in the charge, but the Court do not find him guilty of the imputations ascribed in the charge of being scandalous and infamous conduct. The Court being of opinion that the prisoner, at the time of accepting the bill, had fair expectations of being able to pay the amount, but the Court find the prisoner guilty of highly irregular and improper conduct.

Sentence.—The Court having found the prisoner guilty to the extent above stated, doth sentence him to lose one step in the regiment to which he belongs, viz., to be placed immediately below Lieut. Douglas Hamilton, and, further, to be reprimanded.

By the Commander-in-Chief.—I cannot confirm this sentence, as doing so would be a recognition that highly irregular and improper conduct in pecuniary transactions may be compatible with the standard of character which should be inseparable from the tenure of an officer's commission.—Lieut. Stevens must have the full advantage of the Court's decision, by which he is absolved from the charge of scandalous and unbecoming conduct, and he is accordingly to return to his duty without prejudice to his rank in the 21st N.I.

HER MAJESTY'S TROOPS IN INDIA.—To the Editor of the United Service Gazette.

Sir,—I was much gratified by the time ago by your just and independent remarks on the subject of the honours conferred by Her Majesty, at the Coronation, on certain officers of the H. E. I. C.'s service. If you will take the trouble of looking back to my letters, published in your Journal early in 1837, you will find that I there foretold, with something of prophecy in it, the very events which have now taken place, and which observations of mine give such due offence to your sagacious correspondent D. and others. The simple fact of a certain number of honours being—as one of your Indian correspondents explained—set aside for the Indian Army in 1815, proves the whole affair to have been a political job; for, whether worthy or unworthy, that number of honours were to be conferred upon the Indian Army, and the late selection proves this fact. One Bombay officer, made a K.C.B., has been safe in England for thirteen years, whilst the two Queen's Colonels who have been made C.B.'s, and who stand next above and below him in the Army List of that Presidency, have been during that period serving in India. Will such men as Sir John Keane, Sir John Halkett, Sir Lionel Smith, and others, consider the [Bath] Cross now worthy of their acceptance? And will Lieut.-Colonels and Majors of the British Army, [amongst] whom are many hundreds of celebrated officers, who have been degradingly slighted for eight Majors of [the] Company's Service, accept the Companion of the Bath should it hereafter be offered to them? I most sincerely and ardently hope they will decline it as beneath them.—The political subserviency of the Court of Directors formerly cost this country three millions of money annually; it now costs the gallant, zealous, and able officers of its Army their just and hardly-earned honours, which have been conferred on some men who have not one solitary claim. Remember, Sir, as I have already shown in my letters, that it is entirely to the conduct of H.M.'s troops in India that success, particularly in all the external wars against the Burmese, Arabs, and Nepaulese, is owing, and that, therefore, the course pursued in the late distribution of these honours is not only glaringly unjust, but absurdly contradictory. And I will, moreover, again assert, without dealing refutation, that so long as H.M.'s officers continue to be excluded from the innumerable Staff situations in India, the Hon. Company's officers are not justly entitled to any rewards of any description whatever in Europe. Let the rule be "give and take," or nothing on either side. And it must either be dullness, or an interested and perverted judgment, in any one who denies this position. To the list of high-sounding names of battles, which a correspondent has given in your paper, and which he would wish your readers ignorant of India to infer were graced by the presence of the late batch of [K.C.B.'s, I beg] to point out, that many of [these] thousands of mil[es] scarcely possible [for] were in any two [days] ver were in action in the [Bengal] at the difference in Her [Majesty's] there men who were in all, or [even] of the actions of the late war, and who have not even [had] K.H., although it has been given to Surgeons of the Company's service "for their scientific acquirements." God save the mark! Another system has lately been carried to a shamefully unjust extent, that of giving local rank to young officers of the Indian Army serving in Persia, Affghanistan, and other countries; and all our gallant old Captains, Subalterns, and even Majors, gone on this expedition to Cabul, will find themselves superseded by a parcel of men who have done nothing a drill Corporal could not have done better. A Second Lieutenant of Bombay Engineers was the last officer thus promoted for the wonderful feat of surveying the River Indus, which half the Ensigns in the Queen's Army who have lately left College would have perhaps done better. For this piece of service this "fortunate youth" has been made a Major! whilst Strangways, who commanded the Rocket Troop at Leipsic, is, I believe, still an humble Captain. And there is now one of the best and most gallant officers (Johnson, 17th) in the British Army, a Subaltern of twenty-nine years' service, in the same country with this fortunate Major, and who will, of course, supersede this less fortunate, but infinitely more distinguished of the Royal Army. I have been accused of being too severe on the Indian service generally in the various letters published in your Journal, but this I deny; and the events of each day prove that the degraded state of H.M.'s Army in India is such that my pen cannot do justice to it.

The Standard, I think it was, some time ago, taunted the Army and Navy with having 170 members either belonging to, or connected with, the two services in the Houses of Parliament. If such is fact, what a "rope of sand" they must be who can do nothing for their own services! While the Court of Directors, with their paltry ten or twelve votes, not only contrive to uphold the atrociously unjust system that exists in India, but in Europe rob the gallant officers of the British Army of honours which only belong to them, and mock their (H. E. I. C.) own officers *. The late expedition from Bombay to the N.W. Frontier proves, however, that this disgraceful system is not alone supported by the Indian authorities, but that Her Majesty's officers of high rank, either feeling that the system meets with the approbation of the "powers that be," or having secret instructions to that effect, seem determined to persevere in it.

* How little ministers must value the votes of the 170!

Amongst the Staff of an Army of 5000, sent into Sinde on this occasion, there is only one solitary officer (a Captain) of the Queen's Army selected, although it is but justice to add, that a far more liberal arrangement was made in Bengal on the same occasion *. When Sir Henry Fane went to India, there was a Queen's Captain very remarkable for his uncommon quickness and ability in the performance of Staff duties, and one of the best Persian scholars to be found in any service, recommended to him, as His Excellency's Persian interpreter, one of the very few situations a Queen's officer can hold in India. It was, however, discovered, that the situation must be given to Major M., who had just then been disappointed of some office at Gibraltar. Major M., however, died very shortly after his arrival in India; but, instead of the situation being given to H.M.'s officer (Capt. G.), who was with his corps in India, a Company's officer (Capt. H.) was selected to fill the office. Now, surely out of the eleven hundred and twenty-four Staff appointments which exclusively belong to the Company's officers in the three Presidencies, a situation might have been found for Captain Hay, and the interpretership have been given to Captain G., who had a prior claim, and is highly qualified for it †. I now call on the member who made some observations in the House of Commons relative to the appointment of Sir De Lacy Evans to be a K.C.B., to come forward and inquire into the appointment of the late batch of Company's officers. If he declines this call, we shall then know that political enmity actuated him on a former occasion; for General Evans has shown himself a gallant and distinguished officer, which many of the others are not; and the fact of Captains of the Royal Artillery having been previously made K.C.B.'s, shows there was nothing remarkable in his elevation to that rank. The tyranny and injustice of the service in India increases, instead of diminishing, daily. There is that old and distinguished corps, the 6th Foot, ordered back to that sink of iniquity, Colabah (Bombay), which will make six years out of fourteen it has served in that brutal and deadly quarter, merely to enable the Commander-in-Chief to send other regiments, who have for their Colonels men of greater interest, to the more healthy stations. The 6th Foot ‡ only left Bombay in January, 1838, and after purchasing houses at Poonah at large prices, and being in that station only nine months, they are marched back to Bombay to do the duty of that vile place, on nearly one-third less pay; and, as no corps relieved them in Poonah, losing all their houses, and put to an expense of nearly 1000*l.* for the carriage of their mess establishment, and the loss of their mess house, for which they gave 700*l.* to the Bombay regiment.—In conclusion, I will ask, has any able and independent officer of H.M.'s service, well acquainted with the service in India, been called before the Military Commissioners?

ONE OF 1200 or H.M.'s OFFICERS.

BAYONET FENCING.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Adverting to a letter in your number for 26th ult. last, signed Charles De Izdebski, Lieutenant in the late Polish Army, animadverting on the Bayonet Drill proposed by me in a previous number, I beg leave to say, that I should have addressed you on the subject in reply much sooner, had not matters of importance claimed my undivided attention. Having at length found leisure, I resume my pen, and beg to state for the information of the Lieutenant, that in offering to the notice of my brother musketeers my drill practice for musket and bayonet against sword, I was induced thereto solely for their good, and that of the service generally, having felt on many occasions how very defenceless that arm of the service is when attacked individually by any weapon in the hands of a skilful or resolute individual; and in compiling the brief sketch which I was induced to offer for their benefit, I by no means considered it as a chef-d'œuvre of the science, but, on the contrary, was entirely guided by the following considerations, viz., to render it as simple as possible, yet containing all that was materially essential for the musketeer's defence, and to enable him to return upon his adversary; and, whilst it was calculated for the soldier's performance in heavy marching order as for a campaign, might be such as could be conveyed to him through the instrumentality of the non-commissioned officers of his regiment, without the employment of fencing or other masters; thus rendering its practice more likely to be adopted than an elaborate or complicated system.

The Lieutenant, or his interpreter, commences by informing your readers, what I expressly stated in my first letter, viz., that it is a defence against cavalry swords only: he surely will not deny that a man who possesses sufficient skill to defend against the attack of a well-mounted, well-armed, and well-trained dragoon, is not in a better position to defend against another bayonet, a lance, a bludgeon, a scythe, or any other weapon, than any infantry soldier at present is. Admitting this, and admitting also that my drill does not contain all that is desirable, I think the Lieutenant will be charitable enough to acknowledge that were all our infantry men thus trained, it would require very little further drilling to render them competent to defend against any weapon; and although I did not contemplate it when writing, I see no difficulty in applying it in some degree, at least, to infantry, en masse; for instance, in square, the front ranks can certainly act on the offensive by lunging forward, and giving point against assailants, while the rear ranks remain in a state of preparation.

The Lieutenant states his plan for bayonet fencing under three general heads, and speaks of three different positions for engaging, being different for the sword, musket and bayonet, and lance. I have no doubt that each of them are good, but I fear (and I speak from 18 years' experience) their details will prove too elaborate and difficult to be imbibed by the present class of recruits, ever to be adopted as a system in the Army. Speaking of position, the Lieutenant says, "bend the knees until a line suspended from the knees should hang perpendicularly over the toes, and this with the feet 24 inches apart." Did he ever try this in heavy marching order, with all the load a soldier has to carry when actually on campaign? If he has not, I would wish him to try it once, and he will find no trifle. He has mistaken me where he complains of raising the muzzle to the height of the cap-peak. I, on the contrary, recommended lowering the muzzle in delivering the thrust. He has also mistaken me in speaking of the lunge. He appears to have forgotten that in coming to the engage, the feet are already 18 inches apart, and by stepping out with left foot 18 more will make a lunge of 36,—quite enough, I think, in marching order. However, the Lieutenant says 48 against infantry; this I confess is beyond my reach, who measure six feet; how my five-feet-six companions are to reach it I know not. The Lieutenant calls 24 inches the usual distance (for 2nd or engaging position, I presume), I have always understood 18 or 20 to be the medium.

In conclusion, I am happy in having engaged in discussion, on a subject so vitally important to the interest of the Army, and one in which I feel deeply interested, with such able advocates as your esteemed correspondents, Arthur, De Berenger, Chevron, and Lieut. De Izdebski. To the latter I beg to tender my best thanks for his kind invitation to the Stadium, and to you, Mr. Editor, I feel greatly indebted for your promptitude in inserting my letters.

MAITRE D'ARMES.

EPAULETTES AND WINGS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I hope, through the means of your excellent Paper, to attract the attention of the Clothing Board to the disfiguring things miscalled epaulettes, which are placed on the brawny shoulders of the men of our battalion companies of the Line. Commanding Officers do what they can to make them look well, by having the little fringe (which is sent with the clothing) stiffened out with tin, and sewn on to the shoulder-strap. This takes up much of the regimental tailor's valuable time, and after all is a most trumpery and unsoldierlike affair, disliked by both officers and men; the slight fastening to the shoulder often giving way, and the little piece of tinned fringe frequently turned upside down by the motion of the arm in the use of the firelock.

Substitute the wings which are worn by our Light Infantry and Grenadiers, which are admired and coveted by the Infantry soldier, and are well adapted to set off his figure to advantage, besides being a good and serviceable appendage, allowing a man to sling his firelock on a march, and protecting his shoulders from wet, &c. Surely the bugle and green tuft, the bearskin cap and grenade, are sufficient distinctions for flank companies and regiments! Whereas, the finest men being selected for these, are furnished with wings, as if still more to set off their natural advantages; thus comparatively giving the men of the battalion companies a very inferior appearance, both in the Line and individually, which is unfair to the men, and tends to suppress the pride which it is desirable the soldier should always possess. In hopes that this my humble suggestion may attract the eye and meet with the favourable consideration of the officers of the department, and that we of the Line may be gratified by seeing the wings attached to every coat at the next issue of clothing, I remain, &c.,

BARRACK ALLOWANCES OF COAL AND CANDLE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I know not are you aware of the recent regulation by the Honourable Board of Ordnance, reducing the allowance of coals and candles to the Military. I beg leave humbly to call your attention to the subject as one fraught with evil consequence. There is not sufficiency of coals now to cook the soldier's victuals, to say nothing at all of washing his shirts, &c.; but perhaps the Honourable Board do not intend the soldier's three quarters of a pound to be overcooked, as it is thought by some philosophers that raw flesh makes those living on it more savage and pugnacious! Perhaps it requires no prophetic spirit to predict the depredations that may happen to the plantations of neighbouring gentlemen in detached stations in the several counties of the United Kingdom, and for which the Honourable Board will be more to blame than the poor plunderer that steals the branch or faggot. In the Army, too, there is not the right of petition or complaint, as in civil life; such would be "mutiny,"—and mutiny is death by the Articles of War. It is, I understand, in contemplation to establish libraries in the several barracks, to be furnished by the Barrack Officer. Give us fuel to cook our victuals, and light to see to go to bed with, and the fire of Cicero and Demosthenes, and the light of the philosophers of antiquity, may hover round their tombs!

ATTICUS ROMANORUM.

DOCK-YARD OFFICERS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—With reference to your Milford correspondent's letter of the 3d inst., permit me to observe that the arrangement to which he alludes, respecting the Dock-yard Officers not being permitted to transact other business than such as arises out of their official situations, is of no recent origin, but has existed many years. This can be proved by referring to the Surgeon's general printed instructions, the 22d of which expressly declares that "he shall have no private practice whatever, in order that his attention may not in any way be diverted from the hurt men belonging to the establishment; who alone, with the officers residing within the dock-yard, are to occupy his undivided professional care." In consequence of which (as the present Board of Admiralty very properly enforce strict adherence to these directions) the officers are extremely particular in confining their services to the duties of their situations; at least such is the case at the port from which I now write, as well as at the one I have just left. The same system is likewise observed in a great measure among the workmen, for they are forbidden to keep inns, public houses, and so forth. As your correspondent may not be aware of this fact, I beg, as an old contributor to your pages, the favour of a corner for its insertion, it being no easy matter to have access to the document to which I allude.

PHILOTHLORUS.

The Rev. Sydney Smith, on observing Lord Brougham's one-horse carriage, remarked to a friend—alluding to the B on the panel—"There goes a carriage with a B outside and a nasp within."

* By the by, why were Her Majesty's troops required on this occasion against Asiatics only, if the native corps are so capable of "heroic deeds?" Perhaps the Affghans might hold them as cheap as the Burmese did.

† The Staff appointments (including three Commanders-in-Chief and four Generals on Staff) held by Queen's officers in India are eighteen. Of these fourteen or fifteen are given away by the Horse Guards in England, and the remaining three or four are divided amongst 1200 officers of regiments serving in India. The Company have more Grand Crosses now in their service.

‡ The officers of the 6th Foot, by serving six instead of three years, as there are five E. Infantry Regs. and four stations, out of fourteen in the garrison of Bombay, have been deprived of one whole year's pay in six years. This is an unanswerable fact, as to the imperative necessity of making the pay at all stations equal, and thus preventing injustice and favouritism.

To Readers and Correspondents.

In reply to "P. R.," we understand that the investigation into the Coast Guard service before the Naval and Military Commission terminated last week. Sincerely do we hope some change may take place in a service where so much responsibility rests on Naval Officers, and where the comfort and respect due to their rank and station require to be made far more congenial than at present.

Our space, we regret, will not admit of the publication of the full report with which we have been furnished of the proceedings of the meeting, noticed in our last, of the friends of Sir Pulteney Malcolm. We shall, however, on all occasions, be ready to promote the object of the meeting to the best of our ability.

We are obliged to "Scrutator," but the Naval Appointments to which he refers will be found in this Paper of the 20th instead of the 27th ult. Our friend can have no objection to the N. and M. G. being a week in advance.

"A Bengal Officer" calls our attention to a letter in Alexander's East India Magazine signed "Allubite." We have read the letter, and can honestly say that its ill-nature is alike with its stupidity. The well-informed members of the Oriental Club know that Sir James Carnac, while in the E. I. Direction, was the strenuous advocate of the interests of the Company's Army, and that he has well earned the most sincere respect and gratitude of every friend to Indian interests.

In reply to "R. R.," we have heard that negotiations have been entered into for the transmission of troops across Egypt to the Red Sea, but we put little faith in the report.—We have no troops to send!

We perceive, in the United Service Journal for this month, an able answer to Sir Andrew Halliday's letter on the West India Report; and to which we shall direct our earliest attention.—If the List of Semaphores in Commission, given in our last, is incorrect, we can only say that it is an exact copy of the Return before the House of Commons.

SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1839.

ADMITTING, to their full extent, the observations of a respected correspondent, who has addressed to us a private letter, our opinion remains unaltered, as to the policy of the system now in force, regarding the complement of ships' crews. We say now in force, because a very material increase has been made by the last regulation, and although some few guns, of large calibre (for throwing shells), have been added to the broadside, they are not of greater weight than the 32-pounders, for which they were substituted; and supposing them to be so, the increase of complement, as we showed by a comparative table published some weeks since, more than compensates the disparity.

The reader must bear in mind, that the Navy of England has resources which the Navy of Russia is altogether, and that of France in a great measure, deprived of. These elements consist in our mercantile marine: their value has been proved by the experience of ages, and they were so well appreciated by the extraordinary man who ruled the destiny of France during the last war, that spite of all his endeavours, and the spirit which he by various means attempted to infuse into his fleet, he saw and admitted, that without "ships, commerce, and colonies," the attempt to maintain an effective Navy, even supposing it to be established like that of Russia, could never succeed; the first reverse must destroy a force that had no reserves from which to repair its losses.

Our superior position in this respect is the reason why the present policy has been so long acted on by every one of those distinguished men who has at various times governed our Naval affairs, and we confess, that so long as the crews are not reduced too low, it appears a more sound policy to keep many ships in commission, in a state which, in a day or an hour, can be made effective, than a smaller number fully manned up to the war complement.

The question after all resolves itself into this,—What is the proper amount of a peace complement, the war complement being admitted cient? Of course much must depend on the s the ships, their masts, yards, and furniture. F merly it was the custom to cram vessels with guns, an evil which produced confined quarters, with all the inconveniences resulting from crowded decks in action; this has been remedied by building ships of greater size, more spacious in every respect, and armed with a less number of cannon, but of greater calibre; so as, in fact, to produce a heavier broadside.

Now, if the number of men had been reduced as the number of guns were diminished, the complaint would be just, but it is not so. By reference to Mr. Wood's speech on Sir Edward Codrington's motion, we find that the peace complements are higher at present than at any former period; whilst frigates have, in fact, a higher complement now in peace than when, in war, they carried upwards of a dozen guns more; making due allowance, therefore, for their increased size, this is a material point to be considered; and we must also remember that whatever may be said about the quality of the men—and we wish that better seamen could be procured—still they are not only incomparably superior to the crews of foreign ships, but—unless in very few cases—also greatly superior to the crews of last war. We very much doubt wh taking all things into consideration, the of war, the men absent in prizes, and th encourage all measures that bring merchant seamen into association with men-of-war's men, so as to make them the better available, when occasion demands their services, we repudiate, as injurious, schemes of exclusive training, particularly those which require considerable expense in the execution. The money necessary for such a purpose would be much better applied in increasing the pay and perquisites of those employed in the Navy so as to induce merchant seamen to take a turn therein occasionally, and test the reality of benefits liberally secured to them.

"It seems to be a general opinion, or rather prejudice, that only seafaring men are capable of being made good men-of-war's men. The obvious absurdity of such an idea does not hinder it from being acted upon in a manner highly prejudicial to the Service. A certain portion of thorough-bred seamen are certainly an essential part of a ship's company, and these are generally ...plied from the Merchant Service; but the afterguard and ...ers, the pull-and-haul men, whose labour was to work and ...e ship, were generally, during the late war, in the proportion ...ur to one; and these men were as efficient in their sta... they had been bred to the sea from their infancy.

...t us suppose that, instead of the present inefficient numerical force, 40,000 or 50,000 men, and 10,000 boys, were voted by Parliament for the peace establishment. Imagining them (the men) to enter for five years, a perpetual succession of sea-going men, and, with regard to the boys, a breed of men-of-war sailors would thus be ensured. Let the ships not wanted for immediate service be formed into a certain number of divisions, each division to take a cruise of a month or six weeks in succession annually. Barracks or hulks might be procured at no great expense for the reception of the men after their tour of duty, should it even be thought proper to disembark them as supernumeraries, and their services might be rendered available in the dock-yards in various ways. In the mean time, they might be exercised in gunnery, boat-rowing, the use of the cutlass and musket, taught to knot and splice, to heave the lead, and many other useful parts of their profession, as well in harbour as at sea. But the principal employment of the officers should be to try by every method, except that of actual force, to make the landsmen seamen. Force would be improper as to stationing mere landsmen on the yards, because some men are constitutionally timid in that respect. Let a man, however, be encouraged to go aloft by the prospect of superior pay and privileges, and very few will be found backward. If some gradation of this kind, and a rather more marked distinction between the able seaman and the mere ordinary were once finally established, it could not fail of having a good effect, both on the general conduct of the men, and their zeal in the performance of their several duties. A whole ship's company might thus be converted into able seamen; but as the rating would probably be confined to a definite number, that itself would be sufficient to keep up a general emulation.

"As to the possibility of converting young active landsmen into able seamen, it must depend entirely on the skill, care, and attention of the officers in instructing them. Leisure is the only thing wanted, which, however it may be in war, they certainly possess in time of peace. A prejudice certainly exists in the profession that a man not bred to the sea can never become a perfect seaman. Without quibbling about words, it is certain that he may become a most efficient sea warrior, equal to almost any task that a thorough-bred seaman can accomplish. In old times soldiers commanded ships, in a great measure manned by soldiers. Howard, Raleigh, Rupert, Sandwich, Monk, and a variety of other ...ues renowned in Naval history, were land Captains, brave and ...d Commanders, but none of them seamen by profession. ... who considered the finest seamen, headed by the most ...dmirals of their time, was a landsman at the age of ...ose gallant buccaneers who, whatever might be their ...n other respects, could handle and fight a ship in a ...ge it is impossible to surpass, were nine-tenths of them runaway planters' apprentices at all events mere landsmen, till Spanish gold attracted them to the sea. In short, there exists no solid reason why sailors should not be drilled, if the expression is admissible, to their various duties in the same manner as soldiers; and if landsmen can, by such a process, be made equal to the ordinary duties of a man-of-war, their admission into the service would go a great way towards rendering the Navy independent of the casualties of the mercantile shipping.

"Our officers are exclusively trained up in the Service, with very slight and accidental accessions from the merchant sailors. What, therefore, should hinder the foremast men from being brought up in a similar manner? Every one will acknowledge that men, bred to the sea from their infancy, are likely to prove the most expert seamen; but men brought up in the merchant service are often a long time before they are quite at home in the duties of a man-of-war. The policy of training up boys for the Navy is, indeed, so far acknowledged, that they are admitted in much greater numbers than formerly; but in order to render this a source of permanent strength to the Navy, a system correspondent to the greatness of the demand should be adopted. Instead of a few hundreds, several thousands should be regularly educated for that purpose. Receiving-ships should be appointed at all the ports; and vessels, which they might be taught to rig and unrig, and occasionally to man for short trips to sea, supplied them as tenders. In one word, as it is the opinion of all well-informed men, that our Navy, even as a peace establishment, must be increased to a very considerable extent, or that we must consent to lose our naval supremacy, and with it all that contributes to make a nation rich, powerful, and free,—so it is equally manifest that some consistent, comprehensive, permanent plan is absolutely necessary for manning the Royal Navy. Ships, guns, ammunition, and all the various requisites for equipping a powerful fleet, may always be procured at a very short notice; but the crews who are to man these ships (assuredly the most essential article) are often not to be procured at all; or are dragged on board by violence and partial injustice, the remembrance of which rankles in their breast, and makes them eager to desert on the first opportunity.

"The Russian fleet is represented, by officers of experience, to be in a high state of efficiency and discipline. The seamen there take their turns to go to sea, and when on shore are drilled as soldiers. They have no merchant service to fall back upon, and therefore any serious reverse would probably crush their infant Navy. We have the advantage of possessing the largest mercantile marine in the world. Instead, therefore, of distressing and diminishing, to its very lowest point, so noble a resource in time of need, we ought rather to cherish and protect it. Let the Royal Navy rear up her children without unreasonably interfering with the pursuits of the merchant; let men be encouraged to make the sea their profession by the assurance of protection; in time of war the number of merchant sailors would be immensely increased, as ships would then be required for defence as well as for navigation. The man-of-war seaman would then be proud of a position which conferred upon him a marked distinction; and should any emergence demand their services, a numerous body of able seamen would be at all times available; and even a forcible impressment would be submitted to with comparative cheerfulness, when it was evident that their country's safety demanded it. The prowess of our countrymen, displayed in every page of our history, which records hardly one pitched battle by land or sea, since the Conquest, in which they were not victorious—a prowess often successful against overwhelming numbers—it is to this, and to this alone, that we owe our present greatness. A succession of victories opened the road to mercantile enterprise; the blood of our brave sailors and soldiers purchased for us ships, colonies, and commerce. Empire, says the Roman historian, must be retained by the same arts by which it was gained. The nations of the continent, Russia, France, and even those offsets from our own soil, the Americans, are watching their time to inflict on us some deadly blow: they regard our vast colonial possessions with an eye of envy and cupidity, and already anticipate their respective shares in the partition. Their naval force is silently but progressively increasing, and they laugh at the security and supineness which condescends to make no adequate preparation for resistance. A long peace has disarmed us; but it is time to arouse from our lethargy, and to teach the world that the children of those who conquered at Trafalgar and Waterloo have inherited the same unconquerable valour, loyalty, and zeal for their country's welfare which distinguished their fathers."—U. S. Journal of Jay.

We greatly regret to observe that, in the appointments to the Order of the Bath, in the Royal Marines, the vacancy of Lieut.-General Sir Henry Bell, K.C.B., who died about four years ago, and that of Major-General M'Cleverty, C.B., who died about six months since, have not been filled up. When the small number of decorations the corps has is considered, together with the services which its senior officers have so much reason to be proud of, it must appear to every reflecting person, whether in or out of it, that those services are either unknown or, if known, studiously overlooked.

Permission has been granted to the East India Company to raise two European regiments, in consequence of the reduced state of Her Majesty's Army not admitting of two regiments being sent to India. The recruits for the East India Company will be taken at five feet five inches, and up to the age of thirty years. The regiments will not be embodied in this country, but recruits will be sent out in detachments, and formed, on arrival in India, into corps. This augmentation is in addition to the 600 men, previously ordered to be enlisted.

Letters from Bombay, dated 25th Feb., state that the British Resident at Bushire had struck the British flag, in consequence of the treatment he had received, and that the Wellesley, 74, had been despatched to bring the Persians to their senses, by the "ultima ratio regum." We expect to hear that Bushire has been laid in ruins.

We regret to hear that the recruits, to augment the twenty infantry regiments in India from 740 to 976 rank and file, are coming in but slowly. It is, however, to be hoped that the very judicious change in the order regarding the age of recruits, which is now from 18 to 25, instead of from 20 to 25, may render the facility of enlisting greater than it has been. We believe that the Recruiting Department is very ably conducted, and that the fault does not lie with the officers and non-commissioned officers, but in the low rate of bounty—the very rigid and rejective orders to the medical officers who examine the recruits—and to the vast length of foreign service, particularly in India, which deters men from entering the Army. We call aloud for the adoption again of limited service for ten or twelve years.

We have received the following letter from a correspondent, which seems to call for comment:

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—In the letter of Justitia, which you have given in your last Gazette, it is evident that he did not dispute the Royal Marines being greater sufferers than the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers in the different ranks below that of Colonel, although the calculations as to length of service did not include the time that the two latter corps served as Cadets,—half of which I conceive it would be but fair to add for those of the olden time, and the whole from the time they commenced paying for their commissions; that is, paying for being at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, where they probably learn as much of Military duty as a Second Lieut. of Marines at Portsmouth, Plymouth, Chatham, or Woolwich, with this difference, that the Ordnance Officers pay for the same—the Marines are paid.

With regard to the Colonels, I must remain of opinion—notwithstanding your observations on the letter of Justitia—that in the retirements given to the Royal Marines, as Colonels Commandant, they are, in comparison with the Ordnance Corps, highly and partially favoured; they have nine such, many of them, including pensions, more than 1*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* per diem, while the Artillery and Engineers, more than double their strength as to officers of all grades, have not a single retirement as Colonel Commandant, with twenty-four Unattached Major-Generals, most of them of forty-six years' service. Nor have you shown any sufficient reason why a Colonel Commandant of one corps should not be classed with a Colonel Commandant of another, when you come to draw comparisons as to their length of service, and not, as in the Return in the Gazette of 23d March, a Colonel Commandant of Marines with a Colonel Non-Commandant of Artillery and Engineers.

As to the difference of pay between the Colonels Commandant of the Ordnance Corps and Marines, it appears to me to have little to do with the matter—involving quite another subject. If all corps are to be paid alike, the Unattached General Officers of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers may justly ask why those of the Foot Guards, Horse Guards, Cavalry, &c., are better paid than they are.

In conclusion, your arguments have not worked any alteration in my sentiments as to the Unattached Major-Generals of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers being, for their length of service, by far the greatest sufferers in the non-purchasing corps, and it will afford but little consolation to those officers, mostly sexagenarians, several nearer seventy, to be told that they are likely to become Colonels Commandant by the time they have filled up their three score years and ten; after which, if it pleases God to spare them, they may—enjoy, I was going to say;—but, alas! enjoyment is by that time fast on the decline with most, and that till then they must be content with their 480*l.* a-year, while the officers of the Royal Marines, of their own or junior standing, have long since been granted their retirements of 700*l.* or 800*l.*, or more, per annum. As I do not entertain a doubt as to your desire of not leaning to one branch of the Army in particular, and your earnest endeavour to serve each, I am sure you will give the preceding insertion in the Naval and Military Gazette.

Justitia.

In reply to the above, we submit a list of General and Field Officers of Royal Marines on Unattached and Retired Full-pay; showing also the position they would have occupied, together with the rate of pay attached thereto, had they commenced their career in the Royal Artillery instead of the Royal Marines. This table is intended to prove what we some time since stated, viz., that although promotion in every branch of the Army was in a most depressed state, still the corps of Royal Marines were the greatest sufferers.

(Brevet Lieut. Colonel)	Peter Jones	15 Mar. 96	0 16 0	1 0 3	Unattached Major-Gen. Colonel.

The preceding list will prove to Justitia that he is wholly in error in saying that the officers of the Marines, of the same or junior standing to the Unattached Major-Generals of the Ordnance Corps, on 480*l.* a year, have long since been granted the retirement of 700*l.* or 800*l.*, or more, per annum. Colonel Hornby is the only solitary one on the Retired List whose income is greater than it would have been had he belonged to the Royal Artillery.

Justitia does not conceive either that we have shown any reason why a Colonel Commandant of Marines should not be classed with a Colonel Commandant of Artillery; nor, indeed, have we, unless there exist a difference in an active appointment and a sinecure one; the former receiving 1*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* and the latter 2*l.* 14*s.* 9½*d.* per diem. According to our humble judgment, there exists an immeasurable difference. We do not comprehend what Justitia means by saying that the Ordnance Corps have not a single retirement as Colonel Commandant. He is, or ought to be, aware that the appointment of Colonel Commandant in the Ordnance is a very handsome sine [illegible] herefore, to all intents and purposes, a[illegible]

We are glad to find, [illegible]al Promotions of this day, that the services of the officers engaged in the storming of Aden have been rewarded by the Admiralty, with the advancement of a step in their profession. These being special promotions for service before the enemy, they will not interfere with the regular promotions for death vacancies.

The ancient native character of the English, enduring, almost unscathed, the changes of many centuries, was confessedly that of bravery, generosity, and humanity; in a word, that of manliness. An aversion to the shedding of blood, unless in fair combat, or in needful justice, and to the insidious injury even of an enemy, were amongst the marks of this frame of mind. The name of assasin was equally detested and scorned. But now the most foul and unnatural murders are daily perpetrated, in atrocity at least equalling, and in number far exceeding, those of any former period of our national existence. Add to this, that in even the most trivial quarrels dangerous wounds and frequently death continually ensue, and this not as of yore, in fair, though unnecessary combat. The knife of late is as often employed in England as even in the towns of lawless and ferocious Italy. These practices are so far removed from any courageous and manly feeling, any disposition to open contest with an equal foe, as can be imagined. It is the coward who sheathes his weapon in the breast of an opponent, and flies (as in Italy) to sanctuary; for our present laws seem warped (if not absolutely framed) for the express protection of infamous ruffians and knaves of all descriptions. It is to minor offences only that they are sometimes very unduly severe.

A principal cause of the increase of the practice of stabbing and other unmanly modes of assault in private quarrels is the abolition of that prompt, open, and comparatively harmless method of deciding disputes which had been usual amongst the more youthful and humbler classes—the great majority—of the people, from the most remote ages, and which has now become nearly obsolete, thanks to the unchecked growth of our cities, and the enclosure of heaths and commons, which render convenient fields of action scarce; and to recent police regulations which diminish slight disturbances in our streets, at the price of multiplying murders in our houses. Even young men can recollect when the people of London, and indeed of all South Britain, were distinguished above other nations by a reverence for fair play in all transactions; and this healthful spirit was alike the cause and effect of the open and regular manner in which these occasional contests were conducted. They were frequent—they were unpleasant to passengers in the streets— but let us ask any real philanthropist whether it be more distressing to witness a boxing match, or haply several, in a morning's walk, than (if not to witness) at least to read of a new mu in each recurring morning's newspaper! This without exaggeration at present the case; and this brings us to notice another leading cause of the increase, not of this crime alone, but of all peculiarly heinous offences—some of them, indeed, equally atrocious, and even more disgusting than murder itself—crimes unknown even by name to our manly ancestors. This latter cause is the perseverance of most of our public journals, for the gratification of base avarice, in panderine to a depraved taste for horrors, by circulati minute accounts of those nefarious transac which, as far as is consistent with their just nishment, should be buried in oblivion; where their blazonry in the ordinary newspapers often defeats justice, and is at all times utterly unnecessary, whilst it constantly leads to the multiplication of crime. Those atrocious offences scarcely ever happen singly. Let a crime of peculiar enormity be committed in the City of London, and before a fortnight has elapsed an almost exact imitation will continually be observed to be produc at perhaps half-a-dozen different and distant pl This is not the work of accident; nor does murc like some bodily disorders, float on the breeze. No; it is the effect of the rage for imitation natural to man, produced in distempered heads or hearts, the wearers of which are placed in circumstances somewhat similar to those of the actors in the tragedies of which they have heard or read so minute and harrowing an account. This is one effect of the march of intellect and avarice, particularly in great towns, where the said march has been the quicker, and where the very appetite for devouring newspapers (which is what their Editors mean by "useful knowledge") is boasted of as proof of "vast improvement" by the pseudo losophers of the day. It is a merit, we do not sitate to assert, which the Naval and Military G zette possesses almost alone, that it is free from the reproach we have mentioned. Its pages are not polluted. It may be seen on the table of a drawing-room without uneasiness, and it may nourish honourable sentiments in the breast of even the poorest man.

The fact to which we have just alluded, though sufficiently manifest, as might have been supposed, has seldom been noticed, and has never been enlarged upon, for this simple reason,—that to act upon it would be contrary to the pecuniary interests of the Proprietors and Editors of newspapers; interests, in their eyes, of far greater importance than the checking of the growth of vice, or diminishing the number of its unfortunate victims. But if these persons, callous to any sentiment but avarice, continue thus to defile their vast and unsightly columns, they should be coerced by the hand of the law.

It is wonderful to see how sympathy in this most extraordinary age is denied to the sufferer from the villany of others, whilst it is lavished on the overtaken criminal. If a drunken soldier, indeed, even draw his bayonet to menace a civilian, the outcry amongst our public instructors is loud and general; but when a civilian, drunk or sober, murders his wife or mistress, with every circumstance of cold-blooded brutality, these same philosophers are only anxious that the offender should not be hanged! There are not wanting many to advocate a total abolition of capital punishments, the sure effect of which would be to er the destruction of human life as much a of indifference, and other detestable crimes amon in England, as they at present are at ples, Athens, or Constantinople. Some of those who hold these doctrines may possibly be well-meaning, though widely-erring persons, but the motives of the majority are sufficiently obvious. There was a time when we thought it impossible that the massacres and other excesses of the French revolutionary mob could have been committed by an English populace, although it has been pretty well ascertained that these atrocities re the work of comparatively but a few hands present events seem to warrant a different ary. Mistaken refinement, avarice, and luxury, ave, directly or indirectly, gradually but rapidly so changed the mental and bodily character of all classes of the community, that in a crowd of thousands it will be often difficult to discover a few possessors of those qualities which for so many centuries proverbially distinguished this nation. The people are now, moreover, accustomed to lood. In a violent political convulsion should ur—an event by no means improbable—let those tremble for themselves who first rendered multitude discontented by bad government, and then made them indifferent to the contemplation of homicide, by neither preventing it, nor, when committed, punishing it with justice. The Chartists, at present, are perhaps feeble, but they may be one day more powerful.

We sincerely rejoice to find that Lieutenant Hart's labours have been successful; and that the New Army List may be now considered permanently established. We have on many occasions so strongly dwelt upon the value and importance this publication, that the illiberal might suppose had a personal interest in the work; such, however, is not the case. We have the satisfaction of owing that Mr. Hart has adopted the suggestion we gave, more than two years since, for an improved Army List, and that he has most ably executed his task. "The New Army List" is not only valuable as a book of constant reference for all Military men, but its details of service, of rapid and slow promotion, must produce benefits to the working portion of the Army, and to the officer without patronage or funds to purchase advancement. The present number is a great improvement on the first; and, as we gave in our paper of the 9th February the copious notes respecting the services of Officers of the Royal Marines and Royal Engineers, we shall now submit those of the Royal Artillery, the finest corps of Ordnance in the world, and which Lieutenant Hart has been most liberally permitted to extract from the documents at Woolwich. We trust these notes will lead all officers on full and half-pay to supply Mr. Hart with communications: and we would also recommend abstracts, in regard to the histories of corps, being furnished in like manner to the note on the 78th Highlanders, which will be found with our Military Intelligence.

The hereditary Grand Duke of Russia arrived yesterday morning at Deptford, from Rotterdam. A guard of honour of the Rifle Brigade was formed on the left of the landing-place in two parallel lines, with Horse Artillery, under the command of Colonel Whinyates. On the arrival of the steamer, Captain Sharreff, the Captain-Commandant of Deptford Dock-yard, went on board to receive the Grand Duke, who landed amidst three hearty cheers from the sailors who manned the rigging. The Royal Galley which conveyed the gallant Captain to the vessel, returned with his Imperial Highness and Prince William Henry of the Netherlands. On landing, the band of the Rifle Corps played "God save the Queen," and the Artillery fired a salute of 21 guns. At a quarter to one, two of the Queen's carriages, each with four horses and out-riders, conveyed the Illustrious Princes to town, attended by Count Orloff. The retinue followed in three carriages. Several members of the Ministry, including Viscount Melbourne, the Marquess of Normanby, &c., paid congratulatory visits to the Grand Duke at Mivart's Hotel. His Imperial Highness, who has just completed his twenty-first year, is remarkably handsome, and without a disagreeable hauteur, has a noble and dignified deportment.

It is generally reported that Lord Charles Fitzroy, the Member for Bury St. Edmunds, will be the Commissioner of Greenwich Hospital, vice Mr. Sheil, resigned. The appointment is in the gift of the Premier, not of the First Lord of the Admiralty.

Despatches from Sir J. Colborne, Governor of the Canadas, and from Sir G. Arthur, Lieut.-Gov. of Upper Canada, were received on Tuesday at the Colonial-office. On Thursday despatches were received from Major-Gen. Sir G. T. Napier, the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope.

Wednesday was the birthday of the illustrious Duke of Wellington, who completed his 70th year.

No less than 151 gentlemen have given the requisite notices of their intention to apply next term to be admitted attorneys of the Court of Queen's Bench.

Lord Farnham is to be the new representative peer, in the room of the late Lord Caledon.

The Duke of Newcastle has been removed from the Lord Lieutenancy of Nottinghamshire. This step is the result of a correspondence between the Lord Chancellor and the Duke, in which his Grace positively refused to recommend two gentlemen as magistrates for the county; the objection, in one instance, being simply that the gentleman in question was a Dissenter. The Duke, it is understood, will be succeeded by Lord Scarborough.

We have this week to record the death of the Bishop of Peterborough. A report of the demise of the Bishop of Bath and Wells is premature.

On Friday night last, as Sir Hussey Vivian, in company with Sir John Macdonald and Sir William Gosset, was walking down St. James's-st., returning from having dined with the Marquess of Anglesey, their attention was particularly attracted by a gentleman's carriage passing down the street at great speed, when, at the moment they were crossing Jermyn-st., another carriage (Sir C. Lemon's) came suddenly upon them turning out of St. James's-st.. Sir J. Macdonald and Sir W. Gosset being outside, observed it in time and halted, at the same time desiring Sir H. Vivian to do the same. He, from being in the centre, and not at all aware of the immediate danger, attempted to pass on, when he was struck by the pole of the carriage and knocked down, with his head towards that side of the street from whence he had been passing. The horses went over him, and the front wheel reached his shoulder and struck it; but by this time the exertions of the coachman, aided by Sir J. Macdonald, who, with great presence of mind, had run to the horses' heads, had stopped the carriage, and thus left Sir Hussey lying between the horses' heels and the near fore wheel, from which most perilous situation he was extricated by Sir W. Gosset and some other gentlemen who on seeing the accident had run to the spot, and wonderful to say, without having received a scratch or any injury of the slightest consequence.

A son of Mr. Wadham Wyndham, and Mr. Thomas

* We believe we may add to this note that Lieut.-Col. Cruttenden commanded the troops on board the Emma, Army ship, when she was attacked by a large American privateer, during the last war, and succeeded in beating her off. The action was one of great gallantry, and the American suffered most severely.—Ed. M. and E.G.

brother of the President of the Board of Trade, were accidentally drowned on Sunday evening at Great Marlow. The party were in a boat on the river with Mrs. Thomson, and the boat, through some accident, having upset, the gentlemen were drowned: the lady, however, was saved.

Lord H. J. S. Churchill resigned his office of private secretary to the Duke of Sussex, on his appointment to command the Druid frigate.

Mr. Battier, formerly of the 10th Hussars, whose dispute with his brother officers excited much noise some years since, died in Paris on Saturday morning last. He has left a large family.

We regret to notice the death, at Cheltenham on Monday last, of Thomas Haynes Bayly, known as the writer of some of the most popular songs of the day, and the author of some literary works of more pretension. Mr. Bayly had been for some time in distressed circumstances. Alas for the author in want! He must sell for what he can get to supply immediate necessities; and sacrifice his birthright, indeed, for a mess of pottage!

The Four-in-Hand Club (revived last year) are to meet for the first time this season next Saturday. It is certainly necessary that the teams should be together previous to Epsom. Most of the members are in town.

On Wednesday afternoon, a second meeting of officers took place at Carlton Chambers, Regent-st., for establishing a fund for the benefit of the widows and orphans of officers in Her Majesty's Army, Navy, and Marine services. The meeting was numerously attended. Gen. Wright, Rl. Engineers, was called on to preside.—Capt. Kerr, the hon. secretary, read a report, which stated that a number of officers of rank and long standing were of opinion that the establishment of such a fund as the one proposed would tend materially to lessen the painful anxiety of many meritorious officers having families, and would obviate the necessity of those frequent appeals from widows and orphans, so humiliating to respectable females, and to the service in general. They had, therefore, determined to institute a fund, to be called "The Military and Naval Institution for the benefit of the Widows and Orphans of all Officers in Her Majesty's service." After the confirmation of the minutes, several officers addressed the meeting. It was resolved—"That all the resolutions agreed to at this meeting be printed and forwarded to every regiment, ship, and depot, &c., for the approval of the Army, Navy, and Marines, at large." The meeting adjourned to a future day, when the election of Directors and other officers will take place.

On Wednesday, a motley assembly of Radicals, to the number of about 200, gave a dinner to Mr. Hume, at the Crown and Anchor Tavern; after which a tea-service of plate was presented to him in testimony of what the donors think fit to call eminent public services and consistent advocacy of reform. Sir E. Codrington was in the chair.—Standard.

The Chartists.—A society for the benefit of the members when sick, which is held at Trowbridge, have, with the exception of the clerk, resolved unanimously to draw from the stock, on Whit Monday, a sovereign each member, wherewith to procure fire-arms for Chartist purposes, and then to divide themselves into companies of twenty to be taught how to use weapons so madly purchased.

On Friday night Vincent met the Chartists on Penville, near Newport, and strained every nerve to urge them on to bloodshed and rapine; after desiring them to be prepared to resist the Government, he concluded as follows:—"When the moment arrives let your cry be 'To your tents, oh Israel!' and then with one voice, one heart, and one blow, perish the privileged orders! Death to the aristocracy! Up with the people, and the Government they have established!" Vincent then proposed "three cheers for the British soldiers," and "three cheers for their sweethearts, wives, and selves."—Monmouthshire Merlin.

At Llanidloes there has been a general rising of the Chartists; two London policemen have been stabbed by them; parties apprehended have been rescued; houses plundered; and by the last accounts the town was in the possession of the revolutionists. The South Salopian and the Montgomeryshire Yeomanry are under orders to hold themselves in readiness to act.—Salopian Paper.

The furious and virulent addresses of the Chartist leaders in Monmouth and its neighbourhood are producing their fruits. The people are arming themselves, and hawkers find it to be a profitable speculation to supply these deluded beings with all sorts of arms, which find a ready sale.

New French Ministry.—The Constitutionnel gives the following list:—Marshal Soult, President of the Council and Minister of War; Duke de Broglie, Foreign Affairs; M. Duchatel, Finance; M. Gasparin, Interior; M. Cunin-Girdaine, Commerce; M. Sauzet, Public Instruction; M. Teste, Justice; M. de Mackau and M. Tupinier, Marine.

The christening of the Count de Paris will take place about the 20th inst., when there will be a review of the National Guards.

CANADA.—The intelligence received this week is of a favourable nature, as, owing to the firm and judicious conduct of Sir John Harvey, the British and American troops have been removed from the Canadian and Maine frontier, and the boundary question is left to be settled by the usual diplomatic interference. On this important point the Washington Globe remarks:—

"To the high character of General Scott and General Harvey, who conducted this negotiation, and to the circumstance of the personal relations of friendship and regard existing between them, as well as to the earnest desire of Governor Fairfield and his republican friends to avoid a collision between the two great families of the Anglo-Saxon race, the country is indebted for this fortunate result. The matter is once again in the hands of the federal government, to which it rightfully belongs, and no doubt will receive the serious and prompt attention which its importance merits."

ITALIAN OPERA.—Anna Bolena was performed on Saturday night, introducing Ernesta Grisi in the part of Smeeton, and Monanni in that of Jane Seymour. The former is of prepossessing appearance—not tall, but well formed, and with a countenance of much liveliness and intelligence, eyes rather large, nose slightly retrousé, and contour more round than oval. She looked the Page to every advantage. Her voice may be called soprano, but its character is strongly contr'alto, and throughout it is rich and round, with a peculiar and most pleasant tone of melody in its lower notes. Monanni is, perhaps, the best-looking Jane Seymour that we have had in the part. She also acted with unusual zeal. Of the Anna Bolena of Grisi it is scarcely necessary to speak. Lablache's Henry the Eighth is a fine piece of acting, without effort. Rubini's Richard Percy reduces itself to Vivi tu, which he sang with his usual success. The whole opera was well performed. The house was excessively full. Her Majesty, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, was present, as also was the Duchess of Cambridge. Tuesday and Thursday the Opera was repeated. Un Nuit de Bal is a very pretty divertissement, with some elegant music from Le Domino Noir, one gay ball scene, a clever dance with a mask by Bellon, another clever pas by Hermimie Elssler, and a Cachuca by four ladies, which, though by no means symmetrically exact, is nevertheless piquant and agreeable.

COVENT-GARDEN.—On Thursday Mr. Rooke's new opera, entitled Henrique, or Love's Pilgrim, was produced here. The cast was exceedingly strong, and no expense has been spared in "getting up" the opera. The scenery is beautiful, and the dresses are new and handsome. The whole is doubtlessly successful. It is, indeed, a credit to the English school.

ST. JAMES'S.—On Monday evening, after the performances of Herr Schreyer's celebrated troop of monkeys and dogs, The Daughter of the Danube was produced, with beautiful scenery and decorations; the principal characters being performed by Mr. Gilbert, Mr. Wieland, Miss Ballin, and the whole of the corps de ballet from Drury-lane, whose services Mr. Hooper has secured for the remainder of the season. The whole performance elicited great applause.

It is rumoured that some musical gentlemen have offered for Covent Garden next season; and that Mr. James Wallack is likely to have Drury Lane.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 1.—Sir DE LACY EVANS presented a petition from the inhabitants of London and Westminster, praying the House "to take every opportunity of arresting the career of Russian conquest, and hastening the restoration of Poland, and thus securing the liberties of Europe and the integrity of the British power in India." He expressed a hope that, when the promised motion regarding the policy of Russia was brought forward, this petition would be taken into consideration.—Mr. Sergeant TALFOURD then moved that the House resolve into committee on the Copyright Bill.—Mr. WARBURTON moved "that the bill be postponed till to-morrow."—The original motion was carried by a majority of 103.—Mr. WARBURTON then moved the adjournment of the House, which was seconded by Mr. WAKLEY, and after a stormy discussion the motion was lost, and the House went into committee.—A scene of indescribable confusion followed, in the course of which the House divided eleven times. Ultimately, the clauses being gone through, the Chairman reported progress, and asked leave to sit again on Tuesday.

THURSDAY, May 2.—Sir F. BURDETT called the attention of the House to the case of Mr. Dillon, and moved that Mr. Dillon's petition be referred to a select committee. The motion was opposed by the Government, and Sir F. Burdett thought it useless to press it to a division.—Captain BOLDERO moved for a return, showing the amount of pensions that would be awarded to Serjeant-Majors, Quartermaster-Serjeants, &c., for their services in any regiment in the line for the period of 23 years, stating, in columns, their rank when discharged, date of enlistment, date of discharge, number of years of service, what period of service, amount of pension if discharged at their own request, and amount of pension if invalided. Similar returns for the Rl. Marines.—Lord HOWICK observed that the return for which the Hon. Member called was altogether of too general a nature. It contained no specification of the nature of the duties discharged, although the amount of the pension depended entirely upon this circumstance.—Captain BOLDERO withdrew his motion, and gave notice for Monday of a motion for the return of the last 100 men discharged from any regt. of the line (say the 12th) and a similar return from the Rl. Marines, from December last.

FRIDAY, May 3.—Lord John Russell appeared at the bar, with the following message from the Crown:—"Her Majesty thinks it proper to acquaint the House of Commons, that it appears to Her Majesty the future welfare of Her Majesty's subjects in Upper and Lower Canada would be promoted by the union of the said provinces into one province, for the purpose of legislation, from and after a period to be fixed by Parliament. Her Majesty, therefore, recommends it to the House to consider such measures as may be submitted to them for this purpose. Her Majesty is persuaded that the House of Commons will combine a due regard for the peace and security of these important provinces, with such provisions as may be conducive to the welfare of England, and the permanent freedom and prosperity of her North American people."—Lord JOHN RUSSELL moved that the House should go into Committee on the Jamaica Constitution Suspension Bill. Sir ROBERT PEEL moved as an amendment that the Speaker, instead of "now," do leave the chair "that day six months."—Mr. Godson supported the amendment.—Mr. Ewart and Mr. C. Buller supported the original motion.—Mr. HUME spoke against the views of the Ministers.—The debate was adjourned till Monday.

THE SAILOR'S SONG.

From the Aldine Magazine for May.

There's a tempest stern low'ring in wrath o'er the Heavens,
The winds shout their warrior song;
The thunder is crashing, the lightnings are flashing,
The ocean rolls foaming, and whelming, and strong.
Yet I sweep, through the deep, from my far native shore,
Though my heart it is there, with the girl I adore.

There's a calm on the breast of the musical wavelets;
The sun smiles amid the blue skies;
The dolphins are playing, the flying fish straying,
The petrels no more on the green billows rise:
Yet I keep, on the deep, calmed afar from my shore,
Though my heart it is there, with the girl I adore.

There's the voice of a land-bird heard charming the ocean;
The sea-weeds our bark dashes past;
Each heart is warm burning, each aching eye turning—
"Hurrah! we can see our old England at last!"
And leap from the deck, on her white cliffy shore,
And clasp to our bosoms the girls we adore!

Literary Notices.

1 Life of Field-Marshal His Grace the Duke of Wellington. Edited by Sir James E. Alexander, K.L.S., late Captain 42d Highlanders, and Lieut.-Colonel Portuguese Service. H. Colburn.

2 Life of Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington. By Major Basil Jackson and Captain C. R. Scott. Longman and Co.

3 Life of Arthur, Duke of Wellington. By W. H. Maxwell. A. H. Baily and Co.

Of the above three "Memoirs" we confess only to have yet had time to read the one first in the field, edited by Sir James Alexander. In noticing the two first Numbers of this important and promising publication, it would not become us to enter into any minute details, still less any general critical remarks, as to the mode in which the task of the gallant editor is likely to be performed. That an adequate Life of our great Military Hero—or rather let us call him the great Military Hero of modern times—is needed, no one can for a moment doubt; for though the published despatches furnish ample materials for such a life, even if there were no others extant, yet it by no means performs—nor does it attempt—that important office. The plan of the present work is comprehensive, and the expedient of placing the execution of it in several hands may and will be deemed questionable, on the ground that a want of unity in it as a whole may counterbalance the advantage derived from such a plan as regards its separate parts; though doubtless this danger is in a great degree obviated by the work being confided to the superintendence and editorship of so competent a person as Sir J. E. Alexander. At all events, thus far the work is executed (with some trifling technical oversights) in a creditable manner, and we can safely recommend it, therefore, to the attention of all classes of our readers. We shall, however, of course watch its future progress with a jealous eye, and at a proper period enter into such detailed notice of its merits (and its defects, if such it have) as its claims and character may demand at our hands. The first number contains a tolerable portrait of the Hero, and the second one presents us with a spirited representation of one of his great early exploits, the Storming of Seringapatam. The work is to be completed in twelve monthly parts.

Of the other two publications above noticed we can only at present say, that they are by officers of experience and practised writers. We believe there are half a dozen works* in course of publication professing to be memoirs of the Duke, but it is a singular fact that not one of the authors, or editors, or their reviewers, seem to be aware that this illustrious man, in the early part of his career, indeed, we think, throughout his Indian service, used the name of Wesley, not Wellesley. In the Army Lists of the period he appears as Arthur

* The memoir edited by the Rev. G. N. Wright, and published by Fisher, we have already, we regret to say, had to report upon unfavourably. In addition to the misplacing of events on the march to Seringapatam, viz., Tippoo's attack of the British at Sedaseer, 6th March, 1799, is made to follow the action of Malavelly, 27th March, 1799, the book is mere compilation. If it has any merit it consists in the portraits, but which, like the heroes, have seen "hard service," having appeared in various periodicals for the last 25 years. We remember, about 1813, having an engraving executed from the original portrait by Shee of Lord Moira, and which appeared in our 'Military Panorama' of that period.—ED. N. and M. G.

Wesley, and we have seen many letters so signed; indeed, we possess some such original autographs. We will mention another fact which seems little known, viz., that an authentic and nearly complete memoir of the Duke exists. It was written by a man * of great talents, who was with the Marquess Wellesley in India, and had the confidence of every member of the family. This gentleman possessed the journals kept by the Duke, the plans of battles, &c., and we know that a very large sum was advanced by an eminent bibliopolist for the work.

The unpublished despatches, with a key to those published by Colonel Gurwood, would form a work of the highest interest.

From the "Life" before us we must find room for one passage :—

"He had none of the little airs or affectations often displayed by young officers of high connexions, who have the prospect of rapid promotion before their eyes. There was a manly simplicity in his demeanour which never forsook him, united to a steadiness and firmness of purpose, clearly evincing that he did not look only to extrinsic advantages for his success in life. Whatever were those advantages, he aimed, from the outset, at higher and better things. He knew that men never become great by mere influence or accident; that they must possess the materials of greatness within themselves, to be rough-hewn, worked out, shaped and finished by laborious thought, long painful study, and incessant care and watching. That, moreover, after all is done, the result rested not with himself; that he knew not whether he was to reap where he had sown; but of one thing he felt secure—that the most brilliant talent, without fixed and persevering principles, shines only to dazzle and to betray."

We will also give a very just remark from Mr. Maxwell's work, although the present part does not contain the circumstance which has elicited it.

"A professed duellist is a public nuisance; but from such a curse, a Military community is pretty safe. Its friendly and polished intercourse has that restrictive check which inhibits coarse familiarity, and hence its harmony is very rarely disturbed. At times, however, and from the most trifling causes, a whole corps has been unsettled; and the bad temper or bad conduct of an individual, proved ruinous to the unanimity of a regiment. To no Military offending should the attention of a Commanding Officer be more promptly addressed. The mischief should be crushed in the outset, and the censure of the superior officer, conveyed in language that marked his displeasure, and admitted no ambiguous construction, under which the criminal might palliate his punishment."

Thirty Years in India. By Major H. Bevan, late 27th E.I.C.'s Madras Native Infantry. 2 vols. Bentley. Richardson.

Among the few interesting works on India, we class the present volumes. We have an abundance of histories, tours, and journals, to inform us respecting India; but there are very few works connected with our eastern empire, which possess attractions for the general reader. Major Bevan has presented the public with a very readable book, full of lively anecdote, stirring stories of the camp and of the chase, and rapid but characteristic sketches of eastern courts, kings, and chiefs—the people, their manners, customs, laws, and superstitions. These have all been described as they came under notice; and hence the vivid and pleasing effect which the reader experiences throughout these two volumes. Major Bevan writes con amore: he certainly is not "a painter in black." He describes men and things as we can reasonably suppose they are—neither making the whole race of Indians wretches void of honour, courage, truth, and integrity, nor yet everything eastern marvellous and romantic. To extract from the work would be difficult, without conveying a false impression of its contents. We conceive that we do more justice to the author in recommending it to our readers generally, as a most interesting and amusing work to those who have been in India, as calculated to remind them of the scenes and events of their early life; and to those about to proceed to that country, as a hand-book of instruction and amusement. The work must be popular: and at the present moment there is an interest excited in the public respecting the East, which must make the readers of Major Bevan's volumes almost as numerous as the gallant author could desire. The plates are, however, unworthy of the work. By a strange blunder, the Sipahee Naik has shouldered his arms to the right, which happens to be the wrong hand. We caution our readers against taking their impressions of eastern soldiers and Indian beauties from the plates which disfigure these else pleasing volumes.

England under the Reigns of Edward VI. and Mary, with the Contemporary History of Europe, illustrated in a Series of Original Letters never before printed. With Historical Introductions and Biographical Notes. By Patrick Fraser Tytler, Esq., author of "The History of Scotland," &c. 2. vols. 8vo. R. Bentley.

The substance of this work consists of an interesting collection of letters derived from the State Paper Office, and so systematised and arranged as to throw considerable light upon the reigns of Edward VI. and Mary. The letters are written by the principal political and otherwise distinguished personages of the time, and involve many subjects of political and domestic interest. So various and so valuable are these epistolary documents, that we can readily believe the author when, speaking of the invaluable manuscripts preserved in the State Paper Office, he says: "So important, indeed, are these stores, and yet so little are they known or appreciated, that the author believes he does not overstate the fact when he asserts, that no perfect history of England, either civil, ecclesiastical, or constitutional, can be written till this collection is made accessible by catalogues to men of letters." In order to make the present selection from the national archives perfectly intelligible, the work has been divided into periods, each of which is illustrated by a masterly historical introduction; while biographical sketches are given of the different statesmen and others, whose letters appear in the volumes.

The Factory Boy. No. 3. By Mrs. Trollope. H. Colburn.

We are much gratified to find that the interest and value of this work greatly increases as it proceeds. The first two numbers did, and could only be expected to do, little more than introduce the dramatis personæ of the story, and furnish us with a sort of catalogue raisonné of their respective characters. We are now, in No. 3, getting into the heart of the impressive and touching tale which it is evidently the design of the writer to place before us, and we begin to see the important scope of the moral that is to spring from it. There is a terrible truth in the scene at the Factory in the present Number; and the new scenes and characters which open upon us at the mansion of the wealthy heiress, Miss Brotherton,—particularly the character of Nurse Tremlett,—promise the most interesting results. We are happy to learn that the success of this work already exceeds the most sanguine expectations of the spirited publisher who ventured on so unprecedented a price for the copyright of it.

A Narrative of the Loss of the Ship Harriet (Whaler), of London, which was wrecked on a Reef of Coral Rocks off the Fejee Islands, in the South Pacific Ocean, on the 16th of July, 1837. By Charles Sparshott, of Stoke Newington, one of the Crew.

The Harriet, a fine ship, fully equipped, sailed from the London Docks, on the 1st of June, 1836. Having lost her Commander (Mr. Christie) from illness, at the Bay of Islands, the principal harbour in New Zealand, it was intended that she should cruise for whales amongst the various groups of islands to the north-east; when, suddenly, at two in the morning, on the 16th July, 1837, she struck on a reef, called Providence Shoals (which had not been accurately laid down on the charts), off the Fejee Islands. All efforts to get the ship off having proved unavailing, the crew took to the boats, which drifted towards Wallis's Island, a distance of 700 or 800 miles from the wreck. After eight days of intense suffering from famine and fatigue, such of the crew as survived reached that island, where they were cruelly stripped and plundered. There, however, they remained amongst the savages for three months, when the writer of this little narrative, with six of his fellow-sufferers, were taken on board a Sydney whaler, and left at Port Jackson, in August, 1838. Charles Sparshott, the author, reached London in the Chieftain, whaler, on the 19th of February last, poor, distressed, and greatly reduced in health. His affecting statement is printed by the Philanthropic Society, with the view of raising, by its sale, a small sum to meet his expenses while under medical treatment for deafness, and also to provide an outfit for a future voyage. The benevolent object will, we trust, be attained, as we have reason to believe the sufferer to be a very sober, industrious, and truly deserving young man.

Notes of a Wanderer, in search of Health, through Italy, Egypt, Greece, Turkey, up the Danube, and down the Rhine. By W. F. Cumming, M.D., &c. &c. 2 vols. Saunders and Otley.

These volumes are literally what they profess to be—"notes of a wanderer, in search of health." Having suffered severely from inflammatory attacks of the chest during the winter 1835-6, in Paris, Dr. Cumming was induced, at the recommendation of his friend Sir R. Chermside, the most distinguished English physician in Paris, to consult M. Andral, whose reputation for knowledge of thoracic diseases is extensively known. The result was, though not precisely in accordance with the advice of M. Andral, that, towards the end of May, 1836, Dr. Cumming quitted Paris, and joined an old and intimate friend on a summer tour through Italy. Various circumstances determined his course to Egypt for the succeeding winter. His own experience, and the observation of others, convinced him that Italy, in point of climate, was not the El Dorado which in England it is generally considered. Added to this conviction was a secret longing that had for years possessed him, to visit the land of the Pharoahs. To Egypt, accordingly, he bent his steps, and with much of the advantage which he had hoped for in point of health. Subsequently he travelled through Greece and Turkey, up the Danube, down the Rhine, and home by the way of Holland. Dr. Cumming's description of his feelings on his return to England, after a long absence, some years ago, is thus graphically given: its warmth and freshness of spirit is quite delightful. The clock struck twelve at night as he was in the act of stepping upon the quay at Plymouth.—

"With what elastic step and bounding heart I then trod the British soil! A seaman conducted me to an inn, the door was locked, but there was a light in the coffee-room. I knocked, and presently the door was opened by a rosy polite bar-maid, who welcomed me with a smile, showed me into the coffee-room, and asked what she should bring me for supper. I shall never forget that moment. What a transition from the huge crowded inns of America, where the servants are all blacks, or if you do chance occasionally to meet with a 'free-born American' in the capacity of waiting-maid, she is a stern republican damsel, whom you must call 'Miss,' and speak to in a tone of supplication rather than of command! Here I was in a snug English coffee-room, waited on by a nice pretty Englishwoman, who, far from thinking it a degradation, was delighted to serve me. I felt bewildered with joy, and seizing the smiling Hebe in my arms, impressed a glowing kiss upon her lips. It was the patriot's kiss—pure and fervent, and might have been impressed before the whole bench of bishops. The lips of the bar-maid to me as the sacred soil of my country, with the additional advantage of being more agreeable to press than the cold stones of the quay. In that girl I beheld the personification, the representative, as it were, of all that was dear to me in England,—for she was all I had yet seen of my country."

"Strength returning rapidly. I enjoy my large roomy chamber exceedingly after the confinement of my little cabin. This house was built by the French during their occupation of Egypt. It stands on part of the ruins of the great Temple of Luxor. I am now seated on a platform outside my chamber, from which I command a view of exceeding beauty. The climate is most heavenly. In what part of Europe could I find a new-year's-day like the present! Even in boasted Italy there are probably at this moment frost and snow, or fogs and rain; while here I am respiring the balmiest air that ever gladdened the lungs of man. I delight in sitting out here, gazing on the varied picture exposed to the eye. Beneath the walls is the noble Nile flowing his onward course in unruffled majesty. A small green isle divides the river into two branches nearly equal in size, the lower extremity terminating exactly opposite to where I sit, and here the parted stream reunites its tranquil waters. A number of camels are reposing upon a ledge of sand left dry by the receding inundation, most of them lying on the ground in admired disorder. Some are standing among the herd on three legs, the fourth being shackled by a strap that binds up the knee. Several grave sedate-looking donkeys stand round the outskirts of the flock."

At Cairo, on the 26th of February following, our author thus expresses himself: we strongly recommend the passage to the attention of such invalids as, like Captain Cumming, may be wandering in search of a genial climate and of the health which it may restore :—

"The weather continues delightful: indeed, it is impossible to imagine anything more divine than the climate of Egypt; were the elements under my control, I could not improve it; the sky is bright and cloudless, and the atmosphere pure and transparent as crystal: here are no soul-subduing fogs, nor vapour-giving rains; no grim frosts, nor ghastly snows. The sun rules supreme, yet without despotic sway; hitherto I have braved with impunity even his direct rays. I feel convinced that the climate of Egypt has only to be known, in order to be appreciated and resorted to by the pectoral invalid. In what part of Europe will he find such a winter? I boldly assert, in none. That there are many disadvantages and drawbacks cannot be denied; nor is Egypt at all adapted to the invalid whose malady is far advanced: when the cough is confirmed, the body wasted, the expectoration purulent, and the hectic on the cheek, he should by all means stay at home, for Egypt will not work miracles. But let him who is of a phthisical disposition, who is susceptible of catching cold on the slightest exposure to damp, who has occasional slight febrile paroxysms, with hard dry cough, and tendency to emaciate, let him, I say, come out to the Nile, and he will be almost certain to ward off the dart that is aimed against him. Tubercles once formed, the Nile will not cure them, but it will in many cases prevent their formation, and even when deposited, cause them to remain inert."

Another point, of great importance to many of our readers—that of steam communication with India—requires—demands—attention from the authorities.—

"It is difficult to comprehend the backwardness of the East India Company in establishing a line of boats on the Red Sea in correspondence with those on the Mediterranean. These last are perfectly organised, and can be relied on almost to a day. Leaving Falmouth the 3rd of every month, they reach Alexandria between the 21th and 26th. If a similar line were established between Suez and Bombay, passengers and letters might go from London to the latter place in 60 days with ease. Thus England and India would, in a measure, be brought within half their present distance of each other. What a blessing would it be to Europeans in India to receive their letters, and to be enabled to rely upon their receipt, in less than one-half of the time that is at present required!"

With equal justice, Captain Cumming further remarks :—

"Until steam be established, there can neither be speed nor regularity in the transmission of the mail. Touching the supposed obstacle of the monsoon, Mr. Waghorn, who is zealously embarked in the cause of inter communication, declares it to be a mere illusion; for, according to him, the south-west monsoon blows neither with sufficient force nor constancy to form any weighty objection to the establishment of a regular monthly packet throughout the year. For passengers going to and returning from India, the blessing would be incalculable. Instead of embarking in the Thames, to be shut up for four or five months in a vessel going round the Cape, seeing nothing all the while but 'cælum undique, undique pontus,' they would perform but two short sea voyages. During the first, Gibraltar and Malta would be interesting interruptions to the monotony; a voyage up the Nile to Cairo, a visit to the Pyramids, and a trip across the desert to Suez, would agreeably fill up the interval between the two seas; while the voyage to Bombay would yield opportunities of seeing and landing at several interesting ports in the Arabian Gulf."

Considerable information presents itself in these volumes; throughout which their author appears to great advantage, as the fortunate possessor of a truly amiable, happy, and philanthropic disposition.

GENERAL WOLFE'S OPINION OF THE BAYONET,

Communicated by Major-General Sir Charles Napier.

MR. EDITOR,—The following extract from an autograph letter of the renowned Gen. Wolfe (then a Captain) is peculiarly interesting at the present moment, when our young soldiers should be taught to feel that confidence in the musket and bayonet which these weapons are entitled to from their superiority to every other. The battle of Culloden was fought the 17th of April, 1746.

"Inverness, 18th April, 1746.

"The first line, on the rebels' near approach, began a most violent fire, which continued eight or nine minutes, and killed so many of their best men that they could not penetrate into our battalions; on the left of the line was Burrel's regiment, they were attacked by the Cameronians, the bravest clan among them, and it was for some time a dispute between the bayonet and the sword, but the former was found to be the most destructive weapon. The regiment behaved with uncommon resolution, and killed (I dare say) about their own number, whereas two of them only were wounded, and most of them not mortally, and not above ten killed. They were, however, surrounded by a great superiority."

Observe, Sir, that the Highlanders have always been celebrated as expert swordsmen, and they also carried pistols in their girdles, they were unencumbered with knapsacks, their broadswords and targets were excellent their courage of the highest cast, their cause was one in which every noble feeling was wound up to enthusiasm;

"Their swords were a thousand; their hearts were as one!"

Moreover, they were flushed with the victory which they had just gained over the cravens who fled panic-stricken from Falkirk, and who were saved by Col. Husk and his musketeers! The Camerons were the very essence of national troops, and to heighten their native valour, they were led by their Chief, Lochiel, and fought in the presence of him whom they considered to be their Prince.

On the other hand, they who wielded the musket and bayonet were mixed troops. They were commanded by one of their Princes, but he had been beaten at Fontenoy the year before, and in the same month too—a circumstance by no means calculated to inspire his soldiers with confidence. The musket and bayonet were then probably less perfect weapons than they are now, and they still admit of improvement, swords and pikes admit of none; the communication was inferior. The soldiers of the Duke of Cumberland were loaded with their knapsacks. "It rained very hard the whole of the morning," Wolfe says, "and only cleared up just as the battle began." The numbers of the rebels were 8,300 The royal troops were but 7 200. Finally, the judge on this trial between the sword and the bayonet was no ordinary soldier: he beheld the struggle of the preceding day, and was competent to give a due weight to any advantage which the accidents of the field might have bestowed upon either weapon. Never were national troops pitted against mixed regiments with greater advantages to the former never did swords clash against bayonets with better prospect of victory than at the battle of Culloden! The result is decisive in the opinions of all but men so prejudiced and so absurd, that they will maintain the superiority, as they pretend, of the pike and broadsword over the musket and bayonet, in despite of experience, of common sense, and of the known fact, that the latter, in its incomplete state, drove the former out of use, though wielded by men well acquainted with their powers. The lance and the sword were indeed abandoned unwillingly; prejudice long retained for them the affection of the ancient chivalry of Europe The hatred which the Chevalier Bayard entertained against fire-arms was so great, that he accounted those who bore them undeserving of quarter in battle. They were avenged, for the hero, as all know, fell by a gun-shot.

Our archers were celebrated, yet our ancestors looked upon muskets to be superior weapons, of this there can be no doubt, for many good reasons. 1st. The bowman was 40 years of age before he became a perfect archer. 2nd The slightest injury to either of his hands disabled him. 3rd The supply of arrows was of more inconvenience in the carriage than cartridges. 4th. The musket can be effectively used in the field by a boy of 15 years of age, and in fortified places by one of 10 years old.

After a struggle for equality with the musket for above 200 years, the bow was beaten; and yet it was accounted superior to the pike and sword Let it not be forgotten that Cressy, Poictiers, and Agincourt were gained chiefly by the archers; and Sir John Fortescue says, "The might of the realme of England standyth upon archers." If the inferior weapon, that is to say the bow, beat the lance and sword, why should we suppose that the latter would overpower the superior weapons, namely, the musket and bayonet!

Really I think that the opinion held by Gen. Wolfe ought to be read to all young soldiers present day, when a number of misled men are madly arming themselves with swords and pikes, while some military writers have endeavoured to show that these weapons are better than muskets and bayonets—an opinion in which I cannot believe many experienced soldiers will coincide, and I think the opinion of Gen Wolfe will decide that of the most inexperienced recruit. Perhaps one question will be sufficient to upset the whole doctrine of pikes and swords being superior to the musket and bayonet. The question is this:—If pikes and swords, which require no ammunition, are better than fire arms, (to supply which with ammunition is a very serious difficulty,) why did the Emperor Napoleon and the Duke of Wellington prefer arming their troops with the latter? Preparation of a Ship for a Hurricane.—Sir Thomas Hardy was in command of the Triumph, one of Sir R. Strachan's squadron, so many of which were dismasted in a hurricane in 1806. He, however, saved his masts by striking his lower yards and topmasts; a proceeding which many officers, unacquainted with its advantages or not knowing the facility with which it can be done, even in the largest ships, may not unnaturally shrink from. After the hurricane Sir R. Strachan, whose ship was disabled, hoisted his flag on board the Triumph, and a gale came on almost equal in violence to the hurricane. Sir Thomas astonished the Admiral, who was a perfect sceptic as to the practicability of such a measure, by getting all ready to strike lower yards as the gale increased. He allowed it to be done however, and as the gale moderated he expressed a wish to have the foresail set as soon as possible. The fore-yard was instantly swayed up, the sail let fall, reefed, and set almost as quickly as if it had been the foretopsail! Nor were these solitary instances; for we have heard Sir T. Hardy say that he was in the current practice of striking his lower yards and topmasts whenever the indications of the barometer, and other circumstances, conspired to give warning of a severe gale. Sir T. Hardy was one of the earliest to avail himself of the vast advantages of the barometer; an instrument which, after the sextant, the chronometer, and the nautical almanac, is unquestionably the greatest boon that science has conferred on modern navigation.

Let us now suppose the above privileges granted, and the several alterations in those laws, relative to the mariner, conceded. We now arrive at the advantage proposed to be offered to him in time of peace for the security of his indispensible services to the state during war, and the means by which those stipulations (necessary to be entered into by him) may be kept inviolate by both contracting parties. The idea is as concise as the plan is simple and efficacious in its results. To this end it would be necessary, first, to levy a small tonnage-due on every ship or vessel belonging to Great Britain, and to the United Kingdom and the Colonies, also a per-centage tax on the insurance effected on all maritime property, either in ships or produce. Secondly, The postage of all foreign letters, brought to England by any trading vessel, to be paid into the same Government fund, as before alluded to. Thirdly, All arrears of forfeited pay and effects belonging to seamen of the trading mariner. These funds to be appropriated to the accomplishment of the end in question. The first of these imposts might be levied as follows:—

Each shipowner to pay a tonnage due on the full amount of tons of vessels belonging to him in the following ratio:

—	500	—	1,000	— 3*d*. —
—	1,000	—	3,000	— 1½*d*. —
—	3,000	—	7,000 & upwards	1*d*. —

With an increase of 1 per cent on all the steam-vessels.

By this graduated scale, which would be found neither to press unduly on the owners of limited means, or oblige the more opulent one to make a disproportionate sacrifice, a large sum, at the very lowest calculation possible (per annum), would be produced. As appears by calculating on the numbers of British tonnage of sailing vessels being 2,200,000, and that of steam vessels being 82,789, being a total 2,282,789 tons. The probable result may be attained by dividing this amount of tonnage into four equal parts, and applying to each the above charge per ton. The natural effect of this impost would be harmless on those whom it would fall upon; as freights would experience a rise very inconsiderable, but quite sufficient to cover the expense.

And in order to prevent and check the improper course of nautical insurance, which at present is more a speculation * of hazarding life than property, it would be necessary to counteract the evil results of this system by obliging the underwriter to pay as beforesaid an equitable per-centage, if the property so insured was not lost; and if, on the contrary, it should be, the shipowner to be obliged to pay that which the underwriter otherwise would. Thus it would induce the shipowner to be more circumspect in the equipment of his vessels, and the former more cautious in effecting his insurance; in this case the individual who did not suffer by loss would be required to pay the above levy. The second tax to be collected at every out-port—the postmaster at which place giving to such shipmaster who may bring foreign letters, a receipt for the number delivered, which certificate should be handed to the custom-house where the ship is entered. The master of the vessel should (in lieu of the pence per letter at present paid him—which sum would be appropriated as the foregoing taxes) receive 2 per cent. Thus would be realised the second resource, and offering at the same time an encouragement to the masters of vessels. The third means to be derived as before stated from all residues of trading mariners, forfeited pay, or effects, left by will or otherwise, according to a previous undertaking with him, on this latter part of the subject. The name of the Royal Consolidated Nautical Fund would not, it is presumed, be misapplied. To preserve this fund from fraud, it would be desirable that every master, on entering his ship into a custom-house, should deliver a full statement of all pays due to his seamen for the information of Government. The first of these proposed taxations will naturally, or rather most unnaturally, receive opposition. But the grounds upon which the objections are founded will hereafter be proved untenable, and shall stand refuted with ease. While the measures before advanced can be supported on principle, yet it is a matter of sincere hope, for the honour and honesty of the shipowners, and all others whose interests are materially involved in this important question, and for the welfare of the trading marine, that a due and unbiassed consideration may be conferred on this vital matter, so long the subject of speculation but not of trial or experience. The leading barrier, which will no doubt be raised to these desired ends, will arise either from a carelessness of the national weal, or an inordinate desire for retaining wealth. It will also be opposed on the footing of an undue or perhaps even an unconstitutional measure; and that its operation will alone tend to render the mariners more improvident than hitherto, under the conviction of being well provided for, and also lead him to become careless of being employed, or even of preserving good health, or avoiding casualties. Another equally unfounded notion will probably spring up, of the shipowner having no more right to contribute to any fund for the support of the trading mariner, than he would have to subscribe for the maintenance of the masons or carpenters who erect his storehouse or build his ship. To assume such arguments as these, in reference to the seamen, or produce such inapplicable comparison, is arrogance arising from desultory knowledge, an opinion futile and unfounded.

In order to meet the first and far-fetched notion, it must be inquired, how is it possible to conceive a being so irrational, so barren of the common laws of nature, or one who would be so divested of reason as to mar the evidently favourable prospects held out to him by a wanton indolence by which he is plunged into misery, or a recklessness of personal care for his individual safety—while he has the fair and conciliatory means of experiencing immediate good and comfortable treatment, and securing, by every day's service, present happiness, future support, and ease—in his old age? No, the mariners are not now formed of so incongruous a nature. If even such an opinion had a pretext of existence, is it to be supposed that the most rigid scrutiny of government arrangement would not preside over the before-mentioned measures, and by discriminating justice regulate the whole, and prevent abuses? To reiterate the second contradiction, for the term argument cannot be applied to any expressions so unbecoming and senseless as the attempted similarities therein advanced, and if ever urged, will doubtless be found to emanate from selfish interest, or an assiduous desire to baffle the exertions of patriotism and the legislature of our country—in order to correct these dogmas, it will alone be necessary to refer to that part of the treatise, and bring to our recollection the peculiar calling of our trading mariner, the relative position he holds so identified with the interests and welfare of the state, and the perfect dissimilarity of his pursuits and situation to that of other vocations. Can he therefore be likened to the mason, the labourer, or the carpenter, whom the shipowner employs to construct his house or build his ship? Are these artisans of the land required to hold themselves prepared to defend, protect, or form a guard to the house which they erect—to the property it contains? Are they compelled to defend any place except their own dwelling? Even in the hour of war, they are not constrained to pass the confines of their country. Are they summoned—are they or any other trade or occupation summoned to forego all the ties of kindred, to sever all the bonds that endear man to his and his native land, and to spill their hearts' blood for the protection of his country, the honour of his sovereign, and for the preservation of that wealth which he might have produced to enrich others, while he inherits not that portion of it which would bear the proportion of a grain to the sands of the sea? Are any other class of men, except the mariner, expected to go forth and fight those great battles on the ocean, the recollection of which makes the affrighted pulse stand still even with imagination? Is the landsman subjected to be made a prisoner by an infuriated foe, to languish in a loathsome prison, or commanded to enact those deadly scenes of real horror on foreign shores or distant seas—to achieve those deeds which made "Britannia rule the waves?" No, it is our seamen, even our trading mariners, the present harmless and peaceful voyagers of the deep, who are obliged, and will yet respond to the mandate with native pride and heroic valour, if governed by equitable laws and cherished by national institutions. Where now is the analogy, where the comparison, between the seaman and the artisan, or where even the vision of objections?—(To be continued.)

* The extent of this prodigal speculation in many cases can be attested On one occasion the owners of a small steam-vessel, called the Mazeppa, crowded her with seventy men, and attempted to send her to Spain; she was insured, and her size was not larger than one of the steam-tugs on the Thames. None of the men could get below, she was so small; she was nearly lost in the Channel, and the men were trans-shipped.

The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. FEVER MEDICINE, NOW FIRST INTRODUCED INTO EUROPE.

This Medicine has been proved by experience in many thousand cases, to be far more efficacious than any febrifuge hitherto known, and totally free from the unpleasant effects which sometimes follow the use of Bark and Quinine.

It is purely vegetable; the product of Plants discovered by Dr. Warburg in Central America, under the same parallel in which Peruvian Bark is found. It has been extensively used in the West Indies, British Guiana, America, and the East Indies, and has never been known to fail, even in the most malignant Fevers. Its operation is uniform; its effects immediate and certain; and it may be safely administered to infants at the breast.

It is exhibited in the form of a Tincture. Two doses, of two drachms and a half each, being sufficient in any case. The effects of the Medicine are slightly narcotic and highly sudorific; pains in the head, back, and limbs, immediately relieved, and Fever is eradicated in from three to twenty four hours.

When the universal prevalence of Fevers, and their contingent as well as direct effects are considered, it will be deemed unnecessary to enlarge upon the value of any addition to the resources of the Medical Art, by which the consequences that now ensue may be averted. But even the value of the Medicine now introduced to the Profession and the public may be enhanced by circumstances, as in the case of Travellers, Naval and Military Officers, and Residents in the Colonies. From its portability, it is available at all times, and in all climates, and when other Medical aid cannot be obtained, it may be safely taken under any circumstances, without preparation and with but slight restraint, and with a certainty of immediate relief. Those, therefore, who either on business or pleasure, visit the South of France, Italy, Greece, Turkey, Egypt, and the neighbouring countries, and above all, Residents in the East and West Indies, the Mediterranean, African and South American Colonies, will, it is presumed, avail themselves of a remedy, the perfect safety and extraordinary efficacy of which have been proved in many thousand instances, and in various parts of the world.

Dr. WARBURG'S FEVER DROPS are prepared only under his own immediate directions, and issued exclusively by Messrs. PARKER and COMPANY, of King William street, Charing Cross, London, but they may be obtained of Agents in any part of Great Britain, and also in most of the British Colonies, price 8s per bottle. In localities, however, where they cannot be readily procured of a Chemist or Medicine Vender, orders sent direct to the Proprietors, accompanied by a Post office Order, or by reference to a house in London, for payment, will be immediately attended to.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove.—"Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"Dear Sir,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years, hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. Lofthouse."

A further testimony to its merits, no less striking, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street, and by most Medicine Venders.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.

THIS Elegant, Fragrant, and Pellucid Oil—is in universal high repute for its unequalled restorative, pre-ervative, and beautifying properties. It prevents Hair from falling off or turning grey to the latest period of life, changes grey hair to it original colour, frees it from scurf, and renders it beautifully Soft, Curly, and Glossy. In dressing Hair, it keeps it firm in the curl, uninjured by damp weather, crowded rooms, the dance, or in the exercise of riding. To children it is invaluable, as it lays a foundation for a beautiful Head of Hair.

Caution.—Ask for "Rowland's Macassar Oil," and observe that each bottle is (with a Treatise on the Hair, 31st edition,) inclosed in a Wrapper, on which are their Names and Address, in Red, thus—

A. Rowland & Son, 20, Hatton Garden,

Counter-signed, Alex. Rowland.

The lowest price is 3s. 6d.—the next price is 7s.—family bottles, containing four small, 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

Impostors call their trash the Genuine, and put the "&" in the signature, offering it for sale under the lure of being cheap.

Sold by the Proprietors (as above), and by all respectable Perfumers and Medicine Venders.
